making crop failures less of a calamity since the farmers are not depending on one crop, farmers from Illinois, Ohio and other states of the East are becoming more interested in the farming possibilities of the Northwest."

Northwest Notes

Louis Betz, treasurer of the St. Paul Savings Bank, and former city comptroller, has been appointed to handle the Wilson campaign fund in Minnesota by F. B. Lynch, democratic national committeeman.

Harry L. Martin, assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants National of Cannon Falls, Minn., has become cashier of the National Bank of Crosby, N. D.

The Citizens State of Minneapolis has been incorporated by F. A. Samels, Lakeville, Minn.; T. O. Gulick, N. D. Samels and Manley, Fosse, Minneapolis; C. B. Stringer, Osage, Iowa. Business is to begin December 1st on a site leased by F. A. Samels at Bloomington Avenue and Lake Street for 100 years.

Through Louis W. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern, Joseph Chapman, vice-president of the Northwestern National, has received from Crazy Bull, a Yankton Sioux Indian, samples of wheat, oats and flax raised by himself and Four Eagle Foot, Flying Shield and Charley War Club. The grain was raised on the Fort Peck reservation of 2,068,693 acres soon to be opened. The samples rival those stacked around the bank corridor which were harvested on white men's farms.

J. H. Keating, vice-president of the Lumbermens National, Portland, Ore., says in Minneapolis that his state will have a wheat crop estimated as high as 70,000,000 bushels. The lumber business is good and prices are higher. More lumber is being sold and the tonnage East has grown.

good for the public welfare. This public may be willing to accept the leadership of bankers in some questions pertaining to their business, but when it comes to the great public questions of a central bank, authorized to hold all the bank reserves of the country and to issue unlimited, unsecured and untaxed notes to circulate as money under government prestige and authority, it will be found that an intelligent people will form conclusions of its own, and that the consensus of this opinion will be against the scheme.

This I think is already clearly indicated in the financial planks of the various party platforms.

The president was induced to give his support to the Aldrich Plan and urged its adoption vigorously in a special message. It would naturally be supposed that the party which nominated him would declare distinctly in its favor. The plank adopted by no means does this. It may be so intended, but if so it is a case of finding words in which to conceal meaning. All the other platforms distinctly denounce it. I think it can be safely asserted that no currency or banking scheme which provides for a central bank and the issue of unsecured and untaxed bank notes has any possible chance of becoming a law.

Discussion of Service

But the discussion may prove of some service. It has been mainly one-sided; the pleadings have been really all from the promoters of the scheme, who by means of their strong financial backing have been able to make a thorough and able presentation of their claims.

As can be clearly seen these arguments have not succeeded in convincing the public; they have, however, attracted attention, which is of itself a great advantage. The time is ripe for some decisive action, and if the banks will join in asking for some law giving them the power to combine their reserves for mutual use, and the power to expand their credit in emergencies to a reasonable and safe extent, there can be no reason to doubt but what men of all parties will join in affording them the desired relief.

Panics

It is generally agreed that the main weakness in our banking system is its inability to withstand panics.

In the publications of the National Citizens League this is the club used to make the plan go. The Aldrich Bill is claimed to be a complete and permanent cure for panics. But due candor is not used in the impression sought to be made upon the public, as to the kind of panic which will be cured.

Mr. Yates then concluded with a strong array of facts and arguments in support of the foregoing, which was loudly applauded.

JOINT REPORT OF COMMITTEES ON AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION AND AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT AT NEBRASKA CONVENTION

C. Hildreth, chairman of the committee on agricultural education, and C. F. McGrew, chairman of the committee on agricultural development, Nebraska Bankers Association, in their joint report made this week at Omaha traced the early history and development of the work done by Nebraska bankers looking to the promotion of agricultural interests in the state. The two committees above referred to are the result of this activity, and they now are working together in regard to agricultural education and development. Reference was made to the second annual agricultural conference recently held in St. Paul, and the belief expressed that it is imperative that the state of Nebraska take an active interest in this most important work; otherwise, it will find itself outstripped by the other state associations. Reference also was made to the extremely interesting sessions of the conference, and of the opportunity afforded the Nebraska bankers by Prof. H. R. Smith to inspect the Minnesota state farm. The difficulty with which the Nebraska association is confronted is the best manner in which to proceed. There appear to be about three courses open.

First, the association can work independent of all existent institutions and commissions and as bankers alone.

Second, the association can work in conjunction with the state farm, thus utilizing the methods and machinery of organization already well worked out.

Third, the association can call a conference of representatives of the leading and important business interests of the state, including representatives of the bankers association, and hand the question of what shall be done and how it shall be done, over to this conference. This conference, if it concludes to take up the work, can appoint its own committees of investigation and determine whether it will take up the work independent and with its own funds wholly, or work in connection with the state farm or other institutions and means as present organized, aiding these means with funds and influence.

In a general way the committees leaned to the third course and later in the report offered a resolution to that effect.

The banking business of the state of Nebraska depends upon the value of the farm products. It therefore is a good investment for a banker to devote time and energy in an effort to increase the value of farm products, as such activity will be reflected in increased profits to himself. Attention was called to the action of Minnesota bankers in raising a fund of $44,000 in order to improve farming methods in North Dakota. The Minnesota bankers were interested in this for the reason that a large portion of their business is derived from North Dakota. A corporation has been formed in charge of which is a director at a salary of several thousand dollars a year, and under him are about twenty-five men with salaries ranging from $1,500 to $3,000 per year. It is believed that it will be worth the while of the bankers association and of the commercial associations of Nebraska to consider the question of actively aiding in the work of increasing crop yields in that state. Comment was made on the good work already done by the commercial clubs and business men of Omaha and Lincoln, and other cities and towns, and especially of the helpful work of the railroads in the matter of seed trains, testing of seed corn, etc. It was urged that this work receive the moral encouragement and active support of every man and every interest in the state. Much praise was bestowed upon the state farm of Nebraska for work done by it toward improving agricultural methods. Regret was expressed at the lack of funds with which to enable this work to be prosecuted more exhaustively. The method now being put into effect by the state farm is to carry the work directly to the farm through demonstrators who can cover considerable territory, but who still are in frequent and close touch with the individual farmer. Mention also was made of a visit to the Nebraska state farm, and the belief expressed that if the association decided to form a better farming organization the fullest co-operation would be enjoyed.

In conclusion the following recommendations and resolutions were offered:

"The need in this proposed work is in two or three directions:

First, to impress on the mind of every farmer and stock-grower in the state, so far as possible, the profit in the improved method. This can only be done by a wise and very extensive campaign of education, largely through the aid of the press. The bulletin and reports sent out by the state farm and by the government are exceedingly valuable and have done a great work, but by the nature of things must be more or less perfunctory and technical and can not too much enter into the argument of the case. The information in these bulletins and reports can be made the basis of the literary campaign, but the real work of bringing the methods home to the farmer, stock-grower and the home-keeper must be done in a large measure through the public press.

Second, the further need is funds with which to carry on this educational campaign and the real demonstrating work. If our association is to aid it either must work out a plan to raise funds by contribution or help secure greater state appropriations. Possibly this matter of funds could be divided into two parts: first that the funds for the educational campaign be contributed: second, that the legislatures be persuaded to appropriate funds sufficient to meet the demands over the state for the actual demonstrating work.

Certain it is that when the people of the state come to a realization of the necessity of these better methods if we are to have our greatest individual and community profits and prosperity, certain it is that then the public sentiment will warrant and compel the legislatures to make appropriations commensurate with the need and value of such appropriations.

There are in round numbers 7,000,000 acres of corn grown in Nebraska each year. If by improved methods the yield be increased one bushel per acre you have added between $3,- 000,000 and $4,000,000 in profits to the state. Could our state afford to tax itself $100,000 if by it the state could get over three million dollars in return? If the yield could be increased three bushels per acre the gain to the state would be ten million dollars.

While the methods were being improved so we could raise one or three bushels of corn more to the acre, the yield of wheat and all the grains and products could and would be increased, our live stock could be improved and our homes made more comfortable, sanitary and happy, by the same outlay of expense; our boys and girls could be made more intelligent and our standard of citizenship made higher.

It would be a comparatively easy matter to increase the annual profits to the farmers of our state ten or twenty million dollars by somewhat more liberal legislative appropriations. The appropriation by the last legislature for the state farm extension work was but $35,000 for the biennium or $17,500 for each year.

Our state is agricultural and our soil wonderfully productive, but instead of resting content on these valuable facts, instead of robbing posterity by permitting our soil to become depleted as other states have done, instead even of denying ourselves the greater prosperity possible to us, it is the part of wisdom to pause long enough and think deeply enough to secure these greater benefits that are at our hand for the good of our present homes and businesses and for the generations that are to follow.

The question of the prevention of the depletion of the soil is no less an important one than the question of increasing the present productivity of the soil. The question of rotating crops, of putting back into the soil by fertilization and rotation of crops what has been taken out, of keeping up the soil, all comes in as an important part of the work of the demonstrator in improved farm methods. We commit a crime when we rob or destroy our soil and forget our offspring yet unborn.

Of all states Nebraska is perhaps the most exclusively an agricultural state. We have no coal, no minerals, no forests, and we have, relatively, but little water powers or those means that are needful to the manufacturing industries. Our interests are in the products of the soil and in the attendant industry of the growing and feeding of live stock.

We need not deplore the fact that our state is so exclusively agricultural. We may wisely be gratified that its every acre is adapted to the growing of grain and of the forage plant.

What surer financial prosperity, what safer place in the economic world, what greater destiny is there to any land than to the land that not only produces its own food stuffs, but whose products are used in every market of the world?

In what land is there greater intelligence or more wholesome citizenship than in the agricultural districts? In what homes are there greater comforts or wider liberties than in the homes of the ranch and farm?

Our banks are filled with deposits from the farm. Our stockholders are largely farmers or farm owners. Our loans in Nebraska in the main depend upon the success and prosperity of the farm.

It is, therefore, from every angle and from every standpoint, fit and proper and wise that our association proceed with the plans started some two years ago to aid the agricultural work in our state. It is justice due our constituency, from whom we draw our business and our profits. It is wisdom to our present self-interests. It is foresight for our own future and for those to come after us.

The only question is the question of the course to follow that will be the best understood and the motive least misunderstood, the plan that will be most commended and supported and least criticized, the method that will be best received by the agricultural interests and at the same time most satisfactory to our business interests that will largely finance the work.

It is a large problem capable of marvelous results, established upon the proper basis and conducted in the proper channel. Your committees feel that it is not only too large an undertaking for our association alone, but that it were more fit that other financial and commercial interests be invited to join us in such a good work. To this end we recommend that a conference be called as provided by one of the resolutions included in this report.

We beg to offer the following resolutions:

First, That our association recommend that the subject of agriculture be given a still wider place in our public schools.

Second, That our association render every assistance possible to the state farm and urge that larger legislative appropriations be made for its support.

Third, That our association recommend that the next legislature pass a law authorizing counties to appropriate funds for the development of better farming and for improving live stock.

Fourth, That the committees recommend that a minimum annual charge of five dollars be requested from each member of this association for the purpose of defraying the expenses of carrying on agricultural and live stock development in the state, the same to be expended under the direction of the executive council.

Fifth, That the executive council of the Nebraska Bankers Association, shall at an early date call a conference of the financial and commercial interests of the state to consider the question of an organized effort to aid in the development of the agricultural and live stock interests of the state."

The North Dakota Bankers Monthly is the name of a publication to be started soon at Fargo. It will be devoted to the better farming movement as well as to the interests of banking.

C. G. Hurlburt on Nebraska State Guaranty Law

It is evident that this law has come to stay. A repeal would be opposed by our state legislature and many if not a majority of our state bankers. But changes beneficial both alike to the depositor and banker are necessary to insure the safety of our state banks and these changes by wise action can be secured.

Prior to the time the guaranty law was declared constitutional we had a legislative committee composed of only three members. When this condition arose, giving state bankers special interests of their own, the association added four members to the committee, all state bankers, giving the state bankers the majority of the committee, and the chairman turned over all state bank matters to this part of the committee, leaving such matters to be handled exclusively by them. We also have a committee composed of five state bankers that have in charge the fight in behalf of state banks to avoid the demand that they put up depository bonds for county funds, regardless of the fact that they are protected by the state bank guaranty fund. The case has been decided favorable to the bankers in our courts and we are now waiting for the county to take it to the supreme court. The committee has employed legal talent to handle the bankers' interests when the case arrives at the supreme court. The total expense to the association in this matter will be about $500 which will be exclusively in the interest of the state banks.

I have heard that there is some talk of a separate organization for state banks. I believe that there is plenty of room and plenty of time to bring up and discuss (if we will do it) all subjects pertaining to the good of both national and state banks at our state conventions and group meetings, and that together we are much stronger and more able to get what we ought to have, than we would be if divided. At the time the last legislature met there was an effort made to reduce the interest rate to be paid on guaranteed deposits, but the answer was that the law had not been tried and that until it had been tried nothing could be done. Now that the law has been tried we can bring some reasons for reducing the rate of interest paid on guaranteed time deposits.

In many of the banks of this state the interest paid on time deposits is much less than the limit rate (5 per cent) allowed under the guaranty law. In fact, many of the banks are glad to get good paper that pays 5 per cent in flush times. This shows that the guaranty law discriminates against the low interest paying localities in favor of the localities that can and do pay higher rates, by causing money that is deposited in banks that pay a low rate of interest to seek out the banks that pay a higher rate, making certain localities not only lose their deposits, but also help to stand good for those same deposits in the localities that have taken them away. This has a tendency to make money scare in the low interest localities and interest rates on loans higher, in order to enable the banks to pay more interest on time deposits; in other words, robbing the borrower for the benefit of the time depositor, because it is plain that in time the banks that are paying less than 5 per cent must raise their rate to 5 per cent if they expect to retain the deposits belonging to their part of the country.

The only reason that more of our deposits have not reached the 5 per cent banks is because the depositor has not been educated to know that it can be done with safety. A few more advertisements like we have seen in the

The Utica banker believes that it is here to stay but suggests important changes, at the Omaha convention. Urges lower interest rates on guaranteed time deposits. Inequities of the situation. Thinks Texas law better. Mistake was made in opposing the law, rather than in controlling it want ads of some of our daily papers will graduate them.

How many banks in the eastern part of Nebraska can give 5 per cent on deposits and do a conservative banking business without raising the loaning rate, and how can they raise the loaning rate enough to handle 5 per cent deposits when eastern loaning companies are loaning money on real-estate at 5 per cent? Some time ago one of our customers handed me a certificate of deposit for $500 drawing 5 per cent interest, issued by a bank in this state. We also received a letter asking us if we would pay 5 per cent on time deposits for 6 or 12 months in amounts of $1,000 and $2,000. I suppose about all of you have had similar experiences and communications, but I give these to show the tendency, and am quite sure that, like the mail order business, it will grow.

My idea is that the highest rate of interest allowed by the guaranty law should by no means be higher than the rate paid by the banks in the lowest interest paying part of the state. If the guaranty law was limited to the rate paid by the postal savings banks it certainly would be high enough.

I would like to see the law amended to agree with the Texas guaranty law in this particular. The Texas law guarantees the unsecured and non-interest bearing deposits only, holding that if a man gets interest on his money he should take his own risk, and if he takes security the guaranty law should not be expected to add to it.

This makes banks under the Texas guaranty law custodians of funds and loaners of money, but not borrowers to the extent that they buy deposits by paying interest for them. Certainly if the banks protect with a guaranty fund all the non-interest bearing deposits they have done wonderfully well and all that should be expected of them.

Nothing of course should be in the law prohibiting a bank from paying a liberal rate of interest on time deposits, but we should not stand back of such deposits with the guaranty law. Banks have little or no reason to expect the law to guarantee their interest bearing deposits. If they wish to pay interest they would still have the same security to offer to the interest customer that they had before the guaranty law was passed, and would be on an equal footing with the national banks.

What would you think of a banker that has $100,000 on which he is paying 4 per cent and of which he is loaning about 65 per cent at 6 per cent (he could hardly keep more than that out)? The $100,000 at 4 per cent costs him $4,000 and the 65 per cent loaned at 6 per cent brings him $3,900. He loses $100 and then has to contribute to the guaranty fund besides. If he paid 3 per cent and loaned at 5 per cent he would only have $900 profit. What do you think of this for gross velvet on a $100,000 deal in twelve months, considering the risk to him and the absolute security to the depositor?

Now, listen to this: Nine out of every ten bankers that I have talked with are in favor of correcting this interest error in our guaranty law, and if we will all put our shoulders to the wheel it can be done. But in order to accomplish it we must have the united support of all the bankers in the state. The national and state banker must lie down together like the lion and the lamb and be good. "United we stand; divided we fall." The attitude of most of the bankers toward the guaranty law has been very bad from the start. Instead of jumping into the band wagon and going right along with the people and legislature and helping to frame the best law possible, they have said all they could against it and tried with money and courts to kill it. Certainly it is possible for the state of Nebraska to frame laws to meet the requirements of the banking business of the state better than could be framed by the national government to cover the requirements of the banking business in all the states in the Union. We now have two very important points in our state law that nearly all bankers concede are an improvement on the national law for banks in this state to operate under. I refer to loaning on real estate and to loaning 20 per cent of capital and surplus to any one person or firm, and it is evident to me that it is possible to have our guaranty law so improved that it will be another point in favor of the state law. If this would make the state law enough better than the national law for banks here to operate under, it will be easy to change charters accordingly. Otherwise, if we neglect our duty and the state law proves too burdensome, the best state banks will take out national charters, thereby steadily increasing the load that the other state banks must carry. Under such conditions any legislature that has the interest of the state at heart will consider measures for relief.

It is one thing to guarantee deposits and quite another thing to keep the banks on a sound financial basis, so that the guaranty law can be perpetuated. We should not overlook the fact that sound, conservative banking is always the first thing to be considered when introducing laws to regulate banks. If we are to guarantee deposits, I hold that we ought to require that said deposits be taken only on a profit yielding basis. If in our eagerness to guarantee deposits, we sacrifice reason and intelligence, we will fail to accomplish the desired result, and will correct the error at the end of financial disaster. As national and state banks are all interested it will be well for us to get ready for action when the next legislature meets. I wish to ask for a free discussion of the subject at this time.

SECOND DIVIDEND OF FAILED BANK

Superintendent George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., of the New York state banking department, has directed the sending out of dividend checks for a second dividend of 10 per cent to creditors of the failed State Bank of Pike, Wyoming county, which was closed last January. The bank paid a first dividend of 80 per cent on May 23d, and it is expected that creditors of the institution will ultimately be paid in full. Frank Noble, state bank examiner in charge of the Buffalo district, was designated by Superintendent Van Tuyl as special deputy superintendent of banks to assist in the liquidation. There was due depositors of the bank at the time of closing $70,497.

Accounts of Iowa banks invited. Reserve agents for national banks

An interesting point is raised in a law suit started by the City State at Thief River Falls, Minn., against the First National at Malvern, Iowa, in which the plaintiff asserts that the defendant refused payment on a draft of $1,500 on the plaintiff. It is asserted that the draft was properly accounted for and was regular in every way.

Des Moines, August 29th.—Detective Gus Patek, the sheriff of Shelby county and two women dressed up in male attire to fool their husbands, were participants in a comedy near Harlan that might easily have proved a grim tragedy. Detective Patek, who is the Iowa representative of the Burns Detective Agency, and the sheriff of Shelby county were motor-ing through the country on the trail of the two men who robbed the bank at Portsmouth, afterwards engaged in a thrilling battle with the people of the town and finally escaped with $1,300. Descriptions of the two yeggs as given to the officers indicated the traditional tall and short man and the two officers were well supplied with facts as to the clothing worn by the robbers. Suddenly the chauffeur exclaimed. "There go two men out of the corn field." The sheriff caught a glimpse of two fellows who ducked out of the field and darted to a corn crib.

"Stop the car," he ordered as he drew his revolver. The driver obeyed instructions. Mr. Patek and the sheriff dismounted as the two suspects dashed from the corn crib into the big barn. Their suspicious actions and the clothing of one tallied exactly with what the officers expected to find when they caught the robbers.

Patek leaped behind a tree. The sheriff, a 250 pounder, tried to hide behind a hay rack. Both were ready to shoot, but expected that the robbers would be the first to open fire. One of the suspects poked his head out, then drew it quickly back again. Patek leveled his big revolver at the point where the head had appeared and yelled, "Throw up your hands!" For an instant there was no reply. Then came a frightened feminine voice:

"What do you two men want?"

The detective dropped his gun. So did the sheriff, both too astonished to speak. From the barn came two women too badly frightened to talk but with their arms held high. They were dressed in men's clothes. Explanations were soon forthcoming. The women had dressed themselves in their husbands' clothes to fool them. When they saw the auto coming they scurried to cover in the corn field, then tried to get into the corn crib and later into the house. It was a decidedly narrow escape, for Detective Patek was ready to pull the trigger the next time that head peeked out from the barn.

Secretary P. W. Hall on Rural Schools

Secretary P. W. Hall of the Iowa Bankers Association has some pronounced views on the rural school question. He believes it is closely identified with the movement for better Iowa crops, for he believes that the exodus of young people from the farms and the consequent placing of farms in the hands of tenants is due to the failure of the rural schools to fulfil their true mission. Before the Better School Commission at its meeting in Iowa this week, Secretary Hall appeared on the program

Iowa Bankers Offered Positions in Chicago

The offer that was made to Arthur Reynolds by the Continental Commercial National of Chicago and which he refused to accept, preferring to remain in Des Moines as president of the Des Moines National, is still a subject of conversation among Des Moines bankers. It is stated that other Iowa bankers have been similarly tendered positions with Chicago banks within recent months although none at a salary so high as the $30,000 annually which it is said Mr. Reynolds declined. Homer A. Miller, president of the Iowa National, was offered an office with the Corn Exchange at Chicago, it is said, and Lee Stevens, president of the Century Savings, was likewise offered positions with Chicago financial institutions. It is said that C. H. McNider, president of the First National at Mason City and one of the best known bankers in the state, has been tendered an opportunity to engage in the business in the Windy City, but has preferred to remain in Mason City, which is one of the most rapidly growing towns in the state.

Bull Moose in Iowa

It is practically certain the Bull Moose party will put a state ticket in the field in Iowa. A state convention has been called for September 4th in Des Moines, at which time candidates will be named to run against the regular republican and democratic tickets. It is thought probable that former State Senator Frank M. Hopkins of Guthrie Center will be put up for state auditor to oppose Auditor Bleakly. Mr. Hopkins up to this time has not announced his candidacy, however. Auditor Bleakly has come out squarely for the entire republican ticket.

G. D. Ellyson

G. D. Ellyson, formerly president of the Commercial Savings, Des Moines, is working on a movement to secure the adoption by the government of a finger print system of identification and handwriting that he believes should become standardized by the police throughout the entire country. Mr. Ellyson proposes that every man, before he can vote, must give the election judge a thumb print and his signature. Mr. Ellyson has always been considered an expert on handwriting and has appeared in innumerable forgery cases in the district and lower courts.

National Bank of Milton Opens

The National of Milton which opened its doors a few days ago takes the place of the Farmers & Merchants of that town which went under last spring, causing a serious business depression in that community. The new institution is backed by some of the best known people in that section of the state. The president is H. C. Taylor; vice-president, E. E. Hoskins; cashier, U. G. Rice. Directors in addition to the above are J. F. McConnell and H. C. Hill, and the stockholders include other well known financiers. The opening of the new bank has caused much joy among the business men of Milton.

State Bank of Laurens

Details have been given of the sale by C. S. and B. L. Allen of the majority of their stock in the State Bank of Laurens to C. B. Mills of Clinton and E. M. Duroe of Sioux Rapids. The Allens have maintained their interest in this popular institution for more than twenty-six years. The bank was formed by D. J. Allen & Sons as a private bank January 1, 1886. In 1892 this institution became known as the State Bank of Laurens and was reorganized with a capital stock of $50,000. The Allen Land & Loan Company was formed at the same time with a capital stock of $119,000. This was owned by D. J., C. S. and B. L. Allen. The Allens will remain in Laurens and will retain their places as directors of the institution. They are also still associated with their brother, J. H. Allen, in the First National of Pocahontas. The purchasers, Messrs. Mills and Duroe and their associates, own and operate the First National at Sioux Rapids, the Rembrandt Savings at Rembrandt, the First National at Linn Grove and the Rossie Savings at Rossie. Mr. Mills is also vice-president of the Peoples Trust and Savings at Clinton.

Death of Samuel H. Moore

Samuel H. Moore, vice-president of the Humeston State at Humeston for twenty years, dropped dead last week while superintending the unloading of grain at a grain office in that city. The deceased was sixty-seven years of age and was supposedly in good health when stricken down without warning. He was for several terms a member of the Iowa legislature.

New Bank at Cole

The new Farmers Savings at Cole is fully organized and is ready for business with a capital stock of $30,000. There are sixty stockholders in the institution and for the most part they are the well-to-do farmers who reside in the vicinity of Cole, and who are common all over Iowa. A fine new building will be erected and it is expected to be in good working order by December 1st.

Iowa Banking Notes

Clifford DePuy, son of the late Emerson DePuy, is continuing the publication of the Northwestern Banker, the Des Moines publication which is well known in the Middle West. The late Mr. DePuy had been in charge of the publication of the paper for some years and was successful in putting it on its feet. Since his death, there have been three or four offers made for the magazine, but the son has refused them.

F. M. Hubbell, well known Des Moines multi-millionaire, has acquired a big block of stock in the Century Savings Bank of Des Moines. As Mr. Hubbell does not often invest in bank stock, the purchase has attracted considerable attention in bank circles. The Century Savings has made admirable progress since Mr. Lee Stevens assumed the presidency and its deposits are now more than a million dollars.

Harmon Baughn, director in the Shelby County State at Harlan, and one of the wealthy men in that vicinity, died of diabetes at his home last week after an illness of long standing.

Settlement has been made with the Citizens Bank at Donnellson, Iowa, and the merchants who were victimized by Harvey Haar, whom it is alleged forged the name of a cousin to some checks and successfully negotiated them.

Much interest has been manifested in Iowa over a paper by National Bank Examiner H. M. Bostwick of this state which has been given to the public by Comptroller Murray. In this paper, Mr. Bostwick has pointed out the importance of bank directors examining the condition of the institutions with which they are connected. He asserts that the growing tendency to care in this direction has been a splendid effect in safeguarding national banks in Iowa.

B. E. Sebern, cashier of the Farmers Savings at Manson, was stricken with paralysis quite suddenly, and at this writing is not expected to recover. He is only 44 years of age and apparently was in normal health when taken ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reynolds were dinner hosts at the Des Moines Club in honor of Miss Nina Estabrook Nation of New York. It was one of the most pleasant social events of the early autumn season.

Sioux City

By JOHN J. BIDDISON

Figures for the week ending Saturday, August 24th, as compared with those of the corresponding week a year ago, show that the clearings of Sioux City banks have taken a healthy bound, due, bankers say, to the normal growth in business being done. It is probable, however, that the organization of new banks, which, though not large, are doing a substantial business, has something to do with the growth indicated. Sioux City enjoyed a fair business last year, but a much better one this year, and the clearings are weekly giving proof of it.

Officers of the First National Bank of Rapid City, S. D., are much elated over the rating given that institution on the "roll of honor" of a New York financial publication, which ranks it 72d among 1,366 national banks entitled to position on the roll. The list is made up by ascertaining the percentage of excess surplus and undivided profits above the amount of capital stock. Last year the bank stood 120th. Other banks on the roll are the First National Banks of Lead and Aberdeen, which rank 123d and 143d respectively.

A period of two years or more is covered by the speculations alleged to have been indulged in by John E. Jellinek, cashier of the Farmers State Bank of Amherst, S. D., who has been bound over to the grand jury under $3,200 bonds, following the recent charges of embezzlement. Others may be arrested.

Among the bankers who were in Sioux City this week were: W. R. Cain, Randolph, Neb.; Oluf Johnson, Elk Point, S. D.; D. A. Oltmann, Kingsley, Iowa; W. E. Heaton, Yankton, S. D.; J. A. Ingalls, Kingsley, Iowa; W. W. McElrath, Merville, Iowa; J. Benj. Graslie, Vienna, S. D.; Herman Fortin, Salix, Iowa; S. W. Wright, Wessington Springs, S. D.; P. K. Holbrook, Onawa, Iowa.

C. E. Floete, president of the Armour State Bank, Armour, S. D., has been at the St. Joseph Hospital for an operation for appendicitis. His case was a serious one, but the surgeon in attendance says he is doing well.

Ed. Latta, son of the late Congressman Latta and president of the First National Bank of Tekamah, Neb., has, with his wife and mother, just returned from a 5,000 mile motor trip through the eastern states. They left about the middle of May.

"THE PRESIDENCY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA"

The above is the title of a booklet issued with the compliments of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company. The book is by Lynn B. Stiles. It contains information about the election of a president, gives a list of former presidents, the number of electoral votes of each state, the way the states have voted in former years, and a vast amount of other useful information.

Seattle

In order to divert Alaska gold from the San Francisco Mint, where it is going in great quantities because no fee is collected there, while a rate of $1.25 a thousand is exacted at the government assay office here, the Seattle chamber of commerce decided yesterday to pay a differential of 75 cents a thousand on all Alaska gold deposited in the Seattle assay office. This differential, together with the 50 cents express charges on gold shipped to San Francisco, will offset the assaying fee, and bankers and business men believe that the stream of gold which for more than a year has been flowing to San Francisco instead of to Seattle will be turned into this city again.

Judge W. W. Woods of the district court has signed an order permitting the sale of the State Bank of Commerce building, Wallace, Idaho, at public auction. The order states that the Wallace National Bank has made an offer of $50,000 for the building and provides that while the property is to go to the highest bidder the bid is not to be less than this qualified figure. The sale of this property means that a dividend of about 12 per cent will probably follow early in September. With this payment the bank will have given back approximately 60 per cent of the loss.

Edwin T. Coman Before the Montana Bankers

Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank, Spokane, Wash., delivered an address last week before the Montana bankers at their convention held in Kalispell, entitled "Limitations and Liabilities of a Bank Director." Mr. Coman told of the frequent lack of knowledge often displayed by directors as to the existent condition of their banks. He gave a list of the famous twenty-nine questions propounded by the comptroller of the currency and relating to directors, which is as follows:

(1) What is the number of directors of the bank? (2) What number was present at this examination? (3) How many of the directors know the condition of the bank in all its details? (4) How many have but a general knowledge of the condition of the bank? (5) How many know nothing at all about the condition of the bank? (6) How many attend board meetings with regularity? (7) Have the directors full knowledge of the habits and general standing of the bank's employees? (8) Do the directors approve loans before or after they are made, or leave this important duty to a committee, or to the officers of the bank? (9) If they approve loans, is their approval of record in each case? (10) Can the directors certify to the genuineness of the signatures to the notes discounted by the bank? (11) Do the directors authorize overdrafts? (12) Do they tacitly permit officers to allow overdrafts? (13) Do any of the directors, other than members of the discount committee, examine and verify loans and discounts? (14) How often do the directors examine and list all collateral held by the bank? (15) How often do the directors examine and list all stocks, securities, and real estate mortgages owned by the bank? (16) Do the directors direct the calling in and balancing of pass books and satisfy themselves as to the correctness of the work? (17) Do the directors require the verification of accounts current at irregular or stated dates, and satisfy themselves as to the correctness of accounts? (18) Have the directors verified outstanding certificates of deposit, certified checks and cashier's checks? (19) Have the directors examined into the condition of the lawful money reserve? (20) Do they know whether or not bank notes are carried into the reserve? (21) Does a committee of the directors count the cash periodically? (22) Has a committee of the directors ever checked up the stock ledger? (23) Have the directors examined the profit and loss, and expense accounts? (24) Have the directors compared the bank's copy of the last report of condition, and statement of earnings and dividends, with the books of the bank as of the same dates? (25) How many of the directors read the letters of criticism from the comptroller? (26) Do they read carefully the replies made in answer to letters from the comptroller? (27) What steps are taken by the directors to correct matters criticized by the comptroller? (28) How many of the directors have read the national bank act? (29) How many know the duties of directors and what the courts have decided as to the responsibility and liability of directors?

He believes that few boards of directors know the condition of their banks in all its details, but that probably the majority of them have a general knowledge. The action of the comptroller's office has had much to do with reducing the number of directors who take no interest whatever in the affairs of their banks. Mr. Coman believes that the approval of loans by a board of directors should be made a matter of record, not only so that the full board can have cognizance of the loans, but so that they may share the responsibility with the active officers; also that it would be impossible for the directors to certify to the genuineness of signatures in each case, as it even would puzzle officers in banks with many millions of bills receivable. He is of the opinion that directors seldom authorize overdrafts, and that the action of the state and national banking departments has done much to eliminate this pernicious practice. Periodical examinations of the loans and discounts of a bank, together with the collateral and the stocks and securities usually are left to committees appointed for that purpose, although in country banks with boards of moderate size this work is done by the entire board. He stated that in but very few banks do the directors direct the calling in and balancing of pass books, and that the inauguration of such a practice probably would alarm the depositors as to the stability of the bank. There probably are few examinations made by directors themselves that segregate the different kinds of currency. The profit and loss account universally receives the closest attention of boards of directors, for in this account are the entries which directly affect the dividends. Formerly the tendency was quietly to pigeonhole letters from the comptroller after they had been answered. Now the letters are addressed to the president and the board of directors and require an answer over their individual signatures. This has had the effect of bringing home to the director a realizing sense of his responsibilities, and has put a spur upon the bank manager so to correct abuses to the end that these embarrassing letters may cease. Probably the majority of directors have not read the national bank act. Mr. Coman believes that it would be wise if at the annual election of the board it be required that the law be read. In all institutions there necessarily must be some directing head whose powers are more or less autocratic, and one of the most important duties of a board of directors is the selection of such a head. Directors often are selected on account of their prominence in the community in which the bank is located, and their connection with numerous business enterprises. This often has the effect of preventing necessary concentration on matters relating to their banks. An officer is much better qualified to pass judgment on the paper of the bank, because he is in closer touch with the borrower and fully acquainted with all the existent conditions. It has been held by our courts that if a director conscientiously discharges the duties of his office, in such a way as an ordinarily prudent man would act under similar circumstances, he is not liable for honest mistakes in judgment. But if it can be shown that there has been any negligence or lack of good faith, then his liability is limited only by his financial responsibility. There is a provision in the national banking law which prohibits a bank from loaning more than 10 per cent of its capital and surplus to any one individual. It repeatedly has been held that if a loss occur to a bank on an excessive loan, the directors who authorized such illegal loan personally are liable to the bank to make good the loss; and when a loss is sustained a resolution must be passed by the board stating the amount of such loss, the names of the directors who authorized the loan and the fact that they will reimburse the bank.

The limitation of the influence and power of bankers and bank directors is determined by their activities, and their liability may be much or little, dependent as it should be on their devotion and fidelity to the most sacred, solemn trust. There might be some difference of opinion as to the certainty of the value of treasures laid up where thieves do not break in and steal, and rust doth not corrupt, but few there be that minimize the value of treasures in the shape of substantial balances in solvent banks. That this trust may be increased, with the result of increased deposits, depends largely upon the faithfulness of those called upon to serve in that position of grave responsibility, of highest trust—that of a director in a bank.

distinguished in the galaxy of states to which she belongs, not only for the splendor of her skies, the productivity of her soil and the magnitude of her output of material things, but that she may be renowned first of all for the intelligence and honesty and the high character of her citizenship.

One of the fallacious arguments against the restriction or limitation of wealth and its control by law is, that such restrictive measures destroy incentive; and we have urged upon us the doctrine that the desire to possess wealth is the inspiring influence that has lifted the world from the anarchy of the jungle to the present high state of civilization.

The question of incentive is one that merits serious consideration; if to change the present order of society in such a way that wealth would be more evenly distributed and the accumulation of fabulous fortunes prevented—if that would destroy human incentive for that worth achieving and accomplishing, it would be a strong argument against such change; but what foundation is there for such a contention?

When we turn to the most splendid pages of history of any age and read the stirring records that thrill our souls and make our hearts swell with admiration, we search in vain for any evidence that greed of gold or love of accumulation furnished or incited the inspiration.

Call the roll of all the millionaires you can think of and what one of them ever discovered anything or invented anything that has lifted the load from the back of tired humanity?

The ambition for money never produced a great poem; never led to a great discovery; never painted a great picture; never wrote a great play or opera; never won a great battle; never gave birth to a great invention.

have changed the map of the world; for the love of children, mothers have crawled on their knees and sold their virtue; for the love of art and song, men and women have starved in garrets; for love of religion, men and women have gone to the stake singing "Hallelujahs."

But no golden deed that shines out to-day in the galaxy of the world's great memories; no triumph of science that has visualized new worlds, new planets and new stars; no invention that the genius of man has given to the world; nothing that has caused the pulse of mankind to beat faster; nothing that has painted the rainbow of hope in the sky of man's despair; no beacons that flame out on the mountain tops of glory were ever inspired by the greed for gold or love of accumulating wealth for wealth's sake.

That a social and industrial revolution is impending scarce admits of doubt in the minds of the students of the world's affairs. Our concern and duty and the obligation now upon us as bankers and patriots is to see that it is so directed and controlled that it will work for good and not for bad; that its forces will carry, not the bludgeon and torch, but the wand of peace; that it may come as the sunshine and rain to make the fruit and flowers, and clothe the earth in new beauty, and not as a cyclone of wrath, leaving death and destruction in its path.

I acknowledge with admiration the surpassing genius of our great captains of industry. I concede to them the superior organizing and administrative acumen that has enabled them to so direct the currents of trade that the world's most heavily laden argosies have unloaded their wealth in their storehouses. I am willing to concede that these rich ships have not been captured under a pirate flag, but I stand here to plead that the seas of commerce and trade be made free for the little as well as the big ships. I am here to plead that the "Captains of Industry," the "Men at the Top," give some of their time, some of their masterful mentality, some of their superlative genius to the making of the road a little easier for their fellows who, through no fault of their own, but because of nature's handicap, find the hurdles too high for them to leap.

Concentrated money is concentrated power, and "Power" said Emerson, "can be generous." The very grandeur of the means which offer themselves to us should suggest grandeur in the direction of our expenditure. If our mechanic arts are unsurpassed in usefulness, if we have taught the river to make shoes and nails and carpets, and the bolts of heaven to write our letters like a Gillott pen, let these wonders work for honesty and humanity, for the poor, for justice, genius and the public good; let us realize that this country, the last found, is the great charity of God to the human race.

D. R. FORGAN CRITICIZES PARTY PLATFORMS

D. R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, in a talk at the banquet on Tuesday evening of the Nebraska Bankers Association, held in Omaha, stated that none of the party platforms provides for the currency reform needed by the country. He does not see much prospect of getting through congress the reform urged by the National Monetary Commission. He said in part:

"The republicans appointed the monetary commission. Its report is the result of a thorough inquiry all over the world, and the consensus of opinion of practically all authorities competent to judge. It proposed the 'National Reserve Association of the United States,' which I have explained to you. Many of the leaders of the party, including our worthy President, have approved it. But the platform builders contented themselves with a description of the need of such an institution without a single word as to how the need is to be filled.

"The democrats oppose the proposition without suggesting a reason for such opposition, and then indulge in some empty phrases which say absolutely nothing.

"The progressive platform, after admitting the need of reform, says: 'We believe the present method of issuing notes through private agencies is harmful and unscientific. The issue of currency is fundamentally a government function.' I wonder if the author of these lines lives in the United States? If he does, it is strange that he does not know that the issuing of currency is absolutely a government function in this country. All the various kinds of our currency are issued and redeemed directly by the government except the national bank notes, and these are issued by the government to the banks while the government holds its own bonds as security and undertakes their redemption.

"It is just because the issue and redemption of currency is a government function in this country that it is inelastic and unscientific.

"In no other commercial nation on the face of the earth is it a government function, and in no other country is it inelastic and unscientific.

"But the author further shows his profound ignorance of the subject by opposing the so-called Aldrich bill because 'its provisions would place our currency and credit system in private hands, not subject to effective public control.' Again, I cannot help wondering whether the author of these lines has read the Aldrich bill.

"The 'National Reserve Association of the United States' is to be owned proportionately by all the national and state banks in the country who join it; is to have three members of the President's cabinet and the comptroller of the currency on its executive committee; is to have its governor appointed by the President; and is to make over ultimately all of its profits (except 5 per cent to its stockholders) to the government. I ask you, gentlemen, is such a semi-government institution fairly described as 'private hands, not subject to effective public control'?

"It is discouraging, but the simple truth is that the politicians do not understand the subject, or if they do, they are afraid to support any definite proposal lest they lose some votes by so doing.

"It seems to me, therefore, that you bankers, especially you bankers of the West, owe it to yourselves and to your country to study this proposition, to master it and to explain it to the people. In this way only can a public sentiment be created in support of this measure that will say to the politicians of all parties, 'stop vote catching and playing politics long enough to allow a real reform—a reform which will remove the national disgrace of periodic suspension—to go through.'"

BANKS MAY BUY SURETY BONDS

Columbus, Ohio.—Banks may guarantee their depositors by practical methods that could be made to take the place of the state guaranty of bank deposits as adopted by Oklahoma, according to an opinion given Monday by Attorney-General T. S. Hogan to State Bank Superintendent F. E. Baxter. Mr. Baxter propounded the question in the interest of a number of banks who wished to know whether they might purchase a surety bond for the protection of their depositors and give them the same sort of protection that the state or a political subdivision demands when it deposits public money. The attorney-general says: "The power to contract or be contracted with gives to a bank very broad powers, and in the absence of any provision prohibiting a bank from securing its depositors by a surety company bond, it seems that this power or right can well be implied."

Two state banks were organized in Oklahoma last week. The Guaranty State Bank of Watts has a capital of $10,500 and the First State Bank of Locust Grove has a capital of $15,000.

The Merchants and Planters Savings Bank of Texas, located at Austin, has changed its name to the Great Western Loan and Trust Company and transferred its place of business to Sweetwater.

Chicago and go over to Detroit with the Banquet-on-Wheels party. C. A. knows a good thing by instinct.

READ the table reservations and see how they suit you. If they're O. K., enough said. If they're not satisfactory, kick to any member of the transportation committee you can find.

THE Northwestern National at Minneapolis has established a bureau in its lobby, where information of an industrial and general nature about Minneapolis and the Northwest generally can be obtained. It is in charge of Frank Merrill, who has been one of the bank's tellers.

A. M. CLEVELAND, of the Northern Pacific, surprised the bankers on the "Red Special" en route to the Yellowstone with a souvenir menu in the shape of a yellow money bag neatly tied with ribbons in the railway colors. The list of "eats" makes one hungry to look at it.

W. G. EDENS was roaming at large in the Garden of the Gods at last report.

E. J. BOWMAN of Anaconda was in Chicago this week. Came in after his ticket to the banquet on wheels. C. C. Swinbourne of Butte and W. D. Vincent of Spokane will be table mates while the chairman of the Illinois Highway Commission will say grace.

WE hear that the Burroughs souvenir to be passed out by E. St. Elmo Lewis at Detroit is a box of "Baby Bumble" golf balls, to be used at the tournament on Wednesday. They're the kind Jack Lewis holes out at one-on-the-green.

FIRST NATIONAL of Pullman, Wash., is promoting a "Hog Day" as its share in the agricultural uplift movement.

FRED W. ELLSWORTH, with the Guaranty Trust, down at New York, is sending out the best book on "Short Term Securities" ever issued on the subject. A third edition has been printed. He sends it free and is glad to do it. Nothing for sale at any price compares with it.

NATIONAL BANK OF POTEAU, Okla., issues the "National Bank News," which isn't one of those tiresome all-alike, readymades, but a real little newspaper. Do the real thing if you do anything along this line.

WARE & LELAND say a period of reaction after the rising market of the past two weeks was to be expected. Anti-railroad sentiment in congress, as was indicated in the Panama Canal bill, was used as a pretext by those working for lower prices to cause a reaction in the railroad stocks of from 1 to 4 points. In the face of the heavy selling in the railroad shares, the industrials held remarkably firm, particularly the copper group, which closed at nearly the best prices for the movement.

"TELEPHONY" had a dandy write-up of H. R. Aisthorpe of Cairo, a former Culver boy. "Hal." has made good as a telephone official as well as a banker.

ONE of the great features of the financial growth of Chicago is to be found in the increase in the number and the importance of the outlying banks.

ONE of the greatest features in the growth of these banks has been the savings department. The convenience of the customers has been consulted and to each depositor has been given individual attention.

THE safe deposit business also has been developed in these smaller institutions and it is a notable fact that the outlying banks are educating the communities they serve in the employment of safe deposit boxes for the protection of their jewels and other valuable personal property.

TO those who are away from frequent contact with the downtown district and especially to those of moderate means, these outlying banks are a boon. An examination of the ratio that is maintained between the capital and surplus and the deposits will indicate the strength of these banks. They are incorporated under state or national law, are subject to examinations either by the state or national bank examiners and are in all respects adequately safeguarded to insure the protection of their customers.

OTHER cities will do well to look up this feature of Chicago banking and its great increase of her banking power. It is a feature applicable to any growing city.

RAILROADS are doing their share in the better farming movement. L. M. Allen of the Rock Island has called attention to the fact that the entire September issue of the "Southwest Trail" will be devoted to agriculture.

H. M. COTTRELL, the agricultural commissioner for the Rock Island, says that the yield of corn per acre must be largely increased, or land values will have to suffer a severe drop, or a large part of the best corn lands will have to pass from owners who work it themselves to wealthy men and rich corporations who can stand low returns, provided the investment is certain.

THIS all sounds ominous and true. Mr. Cottrell calls attention to the fact that land in the corn states has increased rapidly in selling value, while the productivity of much of it has been decreasing steadily. Much of the high-priced corn land is barely giving a net annual return of 4 per cent on the investment.

HE also says that seed corn of the strongest vitality can be secured by going into the fields a week before frost, gathering good, well-matured ears that grow on strong, thick stalks, curing the ears in normal temperature until kernel and cob are thoroughly dry and hard, and keeping the corn until planting time where it will not become damp or get either heated or chilled.

PRESIDENT F. N. BRIGGS of the Colorado association didn't forget to write in to thank THE CHICAGO BANKER for its report of the Pueblo convention. CASHIER.

A NEW ROUND-ROBIN

It is rumored that the same New York banking and financial papers which presented a round-robin to the council at Briarcliff against the Journal Bulletin are out with another one to go before the council at Detroit, charging that the Journal is a financial magazine and is in proper competition. They claim that not one new member ever has been gained by the publication, also that it costs too much and the present policy of running it is all wrong.

STANDARD TRUST TWO YEARS OLD

The Standard Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago will be two years old on September 6th. Its deposits at present are around $5,250,000, and its earnings at the rate of about 10 per cent a year. No dividend has been paid as yet, but the stock which originally sold at 125, now is about 170 bid, an advance of 45 points in the two years. Charles S. Castle is the president.

Jay W. Sweetser, president of the First National of Forsyth, Mont., died of heart disease last week. He was ill ten days.

Nebraska Convention

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 28th.—George Sawyer of Western unanimously was elected president of the Nebraska Bankers Association before the sixteenth annual convention adjourned yesterday afternoon at the Elks' club rooms. J. C. French of South Omaha and William Hughes of Omaha, treasurer and secretary respectively, were retained in those offices. The other elections were to the executive council of the organization. Frank Thompson of Albion, William Rhoades of Omaha, M. W. Folsom of Lincoln, L. P. Sorenson of Eustis and Thomas Murray of Dunbar were elected for a period of three years. W. H. McDonald was elected for a term of one year. Retiring president Frank McGivern appointed to the committees Dr. P. L. Hall of Lincoln, national financial legislation committee; Elmer Williams of Grand Island, educational committee; C. O. Crosswait of David City, membership committee.

Yesterday afternoon's sitting was marked by considerable discussion, the principal point in which resulted in the defeat by the country state bankers of a resolution to the effect that the banking laws of the state should be so amended as to exclude from the guaranty of the deposits provision any and all interest bearing deposits. A resolution also was unanimously adopted in favor of a plan of monetary and banking reform. "American in its spirit and application, fair to all sections and classes, free from dominant control by any special interest, which will make liquid the sound commercial paper of all banks; provide an elastic currency and credit to meet all demands at all times without possibility of over-expansion; which will create a discount market at home and abroad, and organize banking facilities with other countries."

More than 500 bankers attended the convention. It was the largest and most interesting meeting ever held by this organization and was in the nature of a love feast. Never before have the bankers of the Central West been so close to the farmers. Therefore the keynote of the Omaha meeting was "How can the banker assist the farmer and how can the farmer assist the banker?" The sessions were held in the Elks' club rooms and at 10:30 o'clock Monday morning Victor B. Caldwell, president of the Omaha Clearing House Association, delivered the address of welcome which was responded to by President Frank McGivern. C. W. Pugsley, of the department of agricultural development and farm management of the state university, delivered an address on "How Bankers Can Assist Agriculture," which was followed by a general discussion of the subject. Among the other set addresses of the convention were: "The Relation of the Banker to Society," by T. L. Matthews of Fremont; "Handling Your Customers," by George M. Mangold of Bennington; "State Bank Guaranty Law," by C. G. Hulbert of Utica and "Separate Reserve Associations Based Upon the Report of the Aldrich Monetary Commission," by Henry W. Yates of Omaha. One of the big social features of the convention was the annual banquet at the Field Club, last evening, at which bankers of Omaha and South Omaha were hosts. Senator Norris Brown was toastmaster. D. R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago was principal banquet speaker on "The National Reserve Association of the United States." W. B. McQueen of Hay Springs responded to the toast "Group Six." Tuesday afternoon William J. Burns entertained the convention with a talk on "Protection of the Banks."

At Peoria

The Illinois convention will be held at Peoria September 25th and 26th. The address of welcome is to be delivered by George W. Curtis, president of the Peoria clearing house, and the response will be made by W. T. Fenton of Chicago, after which President Harris will deliver his annual address. Prof. George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota will talk on education and national efficiency, and

ASA E. RAMSAY
Muskogee
President Oklahoma Bankers Association
Vice-President First National Bank

will be followed by H. E. Miles, chairman of the national association of manufacturers' committee on education.

The afternoon of the first day Harrington Emerson, the great scientific business organizer and expert, will talk on business and financial efficiency. W. B. McIntyre of the Peoples National of Rock Island will give a humorous talk, the subject of which is "Bumps," and J. N. Dolley, banking commissioner for Kansas, will talk on the "Blue-Sky" bill and bank supervision. The afternoon meeting will adjourn in time to leave for a trip down the river, returning at 10:00 P. M.

Thursday morning will be devoted to agricultural subjects. Among the speakers provided for are William O. Thompson, president of the Ohio State University, and of the organization of all the agricultural colleges in the country; W. G. Eckhardt, the field demonstrator for DeKalb county, who is the first county demonstrator employed in Illinois, which work has been started by DeKalb county bankers in response to the work done by the Illinois Bankers Association. Charles A. Conant of New York and Senator Hugh S. Magill, Jr., of Princeton, also will make addresses.

Thursday afternoon will be devoted to good roads and to the business details of the association, at which session Jesse Taylor of Ohio will talk on this subject. S. E. Bradt, chairman of the good roads committee of the association, will report the recommendations of his committee. Percival G. Rennick of Peoria will give a humorous address entitled "Talk,—That's All." The balance of the time will be taken up by the report of the chairman of the executive council, the election of officers, etc.

Headquarters will be at the Jefferson Hotel, and registration on the Mezzanine floor. The sessions will be held in the Orpheum Theatre, which is two blocks from the hotel. The executive council meeting will be held Tuesday evening, the 24th. The executive council dinner will occur at 6 P. M. Group dinners have been arranged for so that members of each group may dine together at a table especially provided. Ladies attending the convention will be entertained at luncheon at the country club at 1:30 on Thursday, and there will be a large ball that evening.

The program no doubt will prove very interesting on account of the high class speakers provided for, they being the very best in their class in the whole country. The program is especially noteworthy, not only on account of the way in which the subjects are covered, but from the fact that a large field in the lines of public welfare is embraced.

The Call

The national bank call came out for the 4th of September. It found many of Chicago's strong banks actually up in deposits, and much above reserve requirements, with money loaning at 5½ per cent. Why shouldn't the banker as well as the farmer be happy?

H. Thorston has been elected president of the State Bank at Guthrie, N. D.

Boston in 1913

Lewis E. Pierson, president of the Irving National of New York, has been in Chicago nearly all of this week and will go over to the Detroit convention on the Banquet Special. It was Mr. Pierson, who at the Briarcliff meeting in May, invited the American Bankers Association to hold their 1913 convention in New York City. He has been informed that the city of Boston will present an emphatic invitation at the Detroit meeting for the 1913 convention. Innumerable flirtations have been conducted between the association and Boston, and it now appears that she has nearly all of her new bank buildings completed and is anxious to "show them off." Mr. Pierson says that the New York invitation was predicated largely upon her new bank building situation, but that having had the convention several times, New York will give way for the present to Boston, so that in all likelihood the 1913 convention will be held there. In New York there are the Bankers Trust, Guaranty Trust and Irving National all in their new buildings and anxious to show visitors about. Boston shows up in a similar manner and the American Bankers Association no doubt will be glad to visit that city in 1913. There will be little difficulty in making the Boston meeting the largest on record on account of her many natural beauties and points of historic interest which will attract the delegates.

LUCIUS TETER ON GENERAL SITUATION

Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, says that business continues good, and that the demand for money is strong. He anticipates prosperous times this fall.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THOSE who will go over to Detroit may not have had their attention called to the fact that Detroit is one of the oldest cities in the United States.

IT was a hundred years old before Fort Dearborn was built in Chicago and antedates Buffalo, Cleveland and Milwaukee by from 110 to 125 years. It had figured in half a dozen wars under three different flags before it finally became an incorporated city of the United States. In 1805 Detroit was burned to the ground, but one house remaining standing. This enabled the city to be reconstructed on new lines and gave its growth an impulse which it has not lost. At that time the entire city was replatted under the present plan, which gives it wide avenues radiating from a central point, that point now being known as Grand Circus Park.

AT a distance of three miles from this central point there is a circular boulevard twelve miles in circumference, bounding the older city and separating it from the newer. The parks and boulevards have an area of nearly 1,300 acres. No other large city in the country has so many resort features. No other city in the country is provided with so many large and handsome boats nor with such a river with convenient lakes and islands to encourage the short excursionist. Great preparations have been made for the entertainment of the delegates to the American bankers convention next week.

HANSELL HILLYER, formerly assistant secretary of the Georgia bankers, but more recently connected with the Mechanics and Metals National of New York, is at business again after having undergone a successful operation for appendicitis.

EDWIN F. MACK, vice-president of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, will attend the Detroit convention and mingle with his former associates among the Michigan bankers. Mr. Mack is proud of the fact that he is a genuine Michigander.

COL. ROBERT J. LOWRY of Atlanta, who is to reply to the several addresses of welcome at the Detroit convention, recently has celebrated his fiftieth anniversary in the banking business. He also has completely refurnished and re-equipped the banking rooms of the Lowry National, which now has a capital of a million and surplus of a million and a quarter.

REPORT has it that the Hillyer Trust Company of Atlanta is to be enlarged as to its capital and to change its name to the Atlanta Trust Company. It appears to have been successful from the beginning.

FRANK O. WATTS now refers to St. Louis as the "home of my adoption." From all reports he has transferred his personal popularity in bulk to that city. No other banker is in such demand as an after-dinner speaker, and they have lowered his handicap at the golf clubs regularly every Monday since he arrived.

WHEN Mr. Watts as president of the American Bankers Association came to attend the Illinois convention at Cairo he opened his short address with a story showing how almost impossible it is for a man to lose his early reputation.

MR. WATTS upon arriving in Cairo started immediately for the convention hall, and himself overheard one workingman calling to another, "Bill, there goes Watts, the baseball player."

IN his earlier days Mr. Watts had quite an interstate reputation as a pitcher for baseball teams. He has kept steadily at athletics and at present is rated among the very best golfers in the banking profession.

ONE of the strongest local organizations in the country at the present time is the Central Pennsylvania Bankers Association which recently held its third annual convention at Ebensburg. The attendance was almost as large as at some state conventions.

PRESIDENT H. B. POWELL explains the motive for the organization as an "attempt on the part of the bankers of central Pennsylvania to eliminate unwise competition and thus to improve business." He points out that in some towns there is clean, healthful competition, which is only harmful to the extent that it prevents banks from taking better care of their customers and from making satisfactory profits for their stockholders.

ANOTHER purpose of the organization is the putting of a check on the further extension of loans on the part of borrowers who operate through a number of banks. The secretary of the organization is very active in securing data covering this phase of the subject, and the bankers believe that he is doing good work. The new president is M. I. McCreight of DuBois. At its very latest meeting the organization decided to take steps to create a credit information bureau for the protection of its members. Various plans have been submitted to its executive council.

MANY of the banks in and around Pittsburgh are having great success with the finger-print system of identification. Generally they are banks which are located in industrial locations, to which situation the finger-print system seems to be best adapted.

NOW that the Pomerene bill of lading bill has been adopted by congress substantially as endorsed by the American Bankers Association we all want to know what scheme Lewis E. Pierson can dig up again which will attract as much attention for as long a time as was given to the bill of lading question.

BRECKINRIDGE JONES of St. Louis will speak before the trust company section at Detroit, reminding it of its achievements during the past fifteen years. Mr. Jones frequently is referred to as the father of the section.

CLARENCE H. HOWARD is the new director of the Boatmen's Bank at St. Louis. He is president and principal owner of the Commonwealth Steel Company, and has a high personal and financial standing.

JOSEPH WAYNE, JR., of Philadelphia is home from a European trip in time to put his desk in shape before the Detroit convention. His name has been used quite liberally in connection with the chairmanship of the executive council.

WILLIAM J. BURNS' National Detective Agency has opened an office in Detroit in the Ford Building. Later on the agency will be located in the Dime Bank Building when it is completed.

Bank Supervision Live Issue in Many States

Ever since the then president of the Iowa Bankers Association, E. J. Curtin of Decorah, made bank supervision the keynote of his address at the Cedar Rapids convention, it has been a live issue in Iowa. The Des Moines Daily Record, an able financial paper, has taken up the idea as a reform peculiarly needed and insistent in the state. In a recent issue a strong editorial was printed which states the position of the paper very ably. The Record says:

In such a progressive and enterprising state as Iowa it certainly is a paradox that private banking still is permitted. In this respect Iowa has not kept abreast of business progress with her sister states. Her banking laws in this respect are antiquated and weak. The private bank as a privileged institution, should be abolished and the state should exercise a supervision over all banks and financial institutions that solicit and receive money from the people on deposit or for investment purposes. Every community should be protected by the publicity which state supervision gives regarding the stability and resources of banks and financial institutions under its control.

The private bank is a quasi-public institution over which the state has the right to exercise supervision and control to the end that its patrons have ample protection, and its business affairs are conducted along safe and conservative lines. As it is, the patrons of the private bank have no means of knowing the class of securities held by the bank, or their value; or whether any reserve is maintained or not. They have no means of ascertaining whether the resources of the bank and their deposits are being used to finance the private enterprises and speculations of the owner, or not. They have nothing but the mere assertion of the banker to judge the stability of the bank by.

There are 331 private banks in this state that are handling millions of dollars belonging to the citizens of Iowa, and no one but the owners know anything about their real financial responsibility, or their methods of business.

This condition is a menace to the commercial interests of the state and the patrons of these institutions and the public are entitled to know how their business is being conducted, and are entitled to the protection that State supervision affords.

The coming session of the legislature should take cognizance of these conditions and give the business interests and citizens of this state the protection that they are entitled to.

The Daily Record has collected data which puts the reform in Iowa banking laws in a very favorable light. Among other things it is pointed out that in this "day of commercialism the word 'Bank' to the average citizen implies a corporate interest under some form of either federal or state control, that offers to the public a greater security than a firm name would give. It conveys at once the idea of an association of individual interests, where each, by safeguarding his own interest, is thereby giving a quasi-protection to the interests of all the others. It presumes an institution whose business affairs are directed by the combined good judgment of a number of individuals and not wholly dependent upon the judgment of a single individual for its success. In short the word 'Bank' to the average citizen conveys the idea of security and protection greater than that of the individual or firm name. Hence the permitting of the use of the word by private and partnership interests is misleading and deceiving to the general public and should be prohibited by law.

Iowa almost as deeply interested as Illinois in the question of state regulation and examination of all forms of banking not national.

Conditions in other states not all adjusted

"The legislature in Iowa (and other states) has prohibited the use of the word 'Trust' in connection with financial institutions not under the control or supervision of the state banking department, and such institutions had to either eliminate that word from their articles of incorporation, co-partnership agreements, signs and printed matter or else come under the supervision and control of the state banking laws. Why permit the use of the word 'Bank' and prohibit the use of the word 'Trust?' When it comes to misleading or deceiving the public the former is far more dangerous and pernicious than the latter.

"The records show that the bill originally intended to prohibit the use of both terms by individuals or unincorporated institutions not under state supervision, but in the senate a certain senator so strenuously opposed the prohibiting of the use of the word 'Bank' that it was finally dropped from the bill. This same senator was conducting 'Banks' of that character in the northwestern part of the state, hence his opposition. His death occurred shortly after the legislature adjourned and then was disclosed the true reason for his opposition. His estate and his banks were both insolvent and depositors and creditors lost heavily as the result.

"It would be impractical to put private banks under state supervision without reorganization, for the reason that it would be impossible for the state to examine and determine the financial responsibility by reason of the fact that the affairs of these banks are usually mixed up and complicated with all the private business interests of their owners, from moonshine mining stock to real estate scattered from the Florida Everglades to Manitoba and from Maine to Texas.

"What the state can do and what the coming session of the legislature should do, is to prohibit the use of the word 'Bank' the same as it has prohibited the use of the word 'Trust'; then the people would know at once that instead of depositing money in the 'Bank of Commerce' they were really depositing it with John Jones as an unincorporated, and unsupervised individual. The state does not permit the use of the words 'State,' 'Savings' or 'Trust' in connection with private financial institutions and to permit the continued use of the word 'Bank' is rank inconsistency and a fraud upon the public. The state of Wisconsin has a law of this kind for the protection of its citizens and so have many other states. Why should the great state of Iowa permit public deception to the detriment of its citizens and commercial interests? In these articles on private banking the Record does not wish to be understood as casting any reflections either directly or by inference upon the honesty and integrity of private bankers, nor to question their judgment or ability as financiers. It is the system and not the individual that we are objecting to. The system is antiquated, wrong and pernicious and should not longer be tolerated."

Much of the above is not new to readers of THE CHICAGO BANKER, which has been a persistent pioneer in the demand for supervised banking as the only kind a state should permit. It is timely, however, and the Record is welcomed to the small list of papers unafraid to advocate such a needed reform.

Indianapolis.—Harry L. Arnold, chief clerk in the bank department in the office of the auditor of state, has received an opinion from the United States attorney-general's office, in which it was held that private banks in Indiana may be used as depositories for United States postal savings banks. The opinion excepts Indiana from a large list of states where private banks are not permitted by the United States government to be used as such depositories.

When an opinion was delivered, several months ago, in which it was held that private banks could not be so used, Mr. Arnold took up the matter with the United States authorities, and showed that under the Indiana law the private banks are under supervision of the state the same as state banks, and that the average liability of owners of private banks was about $150,000 to the bank. On this showing the attorney-general gave special permission for the Indiana private banks to be used as depositories.

The situation in Indiana shows one of the many advantages of state supervision. Indiana tried to blot out private banking but the privates beat every feature of the bill but supervision. Five or six of the ringleaders of the opposition promptly "failed" rather than face examination and there was a mild epidemic of suicides in the wake of it all.

Private banking will be prohibited by law in the state of Washington if the legislature enacts a measure to be proposed by State Bank Examiner Joseph L. Mohundro when the general assembly convenes next January. Mohundro is at work on the details of such an act, utilizing such time as can be spared from his examination work. But for the failure of the last legislature to adopt recommendations to stop or check private unsupervised banking, such a catastrophe as occurred at La Conner would have been out of the question. Two other private bank failures that have contributed to the public sentiment on the subject were the cases at Republic and Kettle Falls last year.

and the almost complete loss of the $300,000 or so deposits held by it, I do not believe the people of Skagit county will oppose a measure that will compel private banks to convert into state or national institutions or go out of business," said Mr. Mohundro. "The failure was entirely outside the domain of the state banking department. I have been told that the depositors will probably receive less than 5 cents on the dollar. It was the worst bank failure in the history of the state."

The Arkansas Bankers Association at its twenty-second annual convention at Little Rock, May 28th and 29th, went on record as being unanimously in favor of a bill for the supervision, regulation and inspection of banks in Arkansas. The leaders in the movement for a "safe and sane" banking law stated that Arkansas is at the mercy of "wild-cat" banking methods and that if the bankers do not write a bill supervising the banking business, the people of the state, through the initiative and referendum amendment, will write one of their own so drastic, in all probability, as to drive many banks out of business.

In his annual address, President J. M. Barker of Atkins made a plea for bank supervision in this state, and said that he felt it to be the duty of the association to bring about the improvement of conditions, if possible.

Bank supervision will hold the center of the stage at the Peoria convention in Illinois the fourth week in September. President B. F. Harris started a supervision movement at Cairo two years ago when he reported as chairman of the executive council. The opposition has been bitter but probably futile, for a large majority of the privates, have voted by mail-ballot indorsing the course of Mr. Harris, who at one point was voted down by a rigged-up majority of the council. This was possible by the present intolerable system whereby the ex-presidents remain on the council for life. Those opposed to bank supervision always attend the sessions. Another attempt to take back the management of the association from the hands of the combination of "exes" and privates will be made at Peoria. The session will be an interesting one.

Cook County Private Bankers Association

On Thursday evening of last week an organization of bankers known as the Cook County Private Bankers Association held an important conference in this city. The association has been organized for some time and is under the presidency of Albert Haentz of 3198 Milwaukee Avenue. M. C. Schiff of 1219 S. Kedzie Avenue is the treasurer, while Secretary Glasser has been looking after the details.

The organization came into existence at about the time that bank supervision became a public issue in this state. It now has eighty members all told, of which more than fifty were present at the last conference. It is reported that among the speakers at the last meeting was none other than B. F. Harris, president of the Illinois Bankers Association, and chief advocate for supervision. It was said that Mr. Harris was invited that the members of the association might have at first hand his idea of the situation and what is to be accomplished. Many questions were asked and answered with apparent satisfaction, inasmuch as at the close of the meeting a special committee of five was appointed to attend the Peoria convention and look after the interests of the association. It appears from general report that this organization is not fighting against supervision, but is looking for conservative terms, and is said to be well satisfied with the report of the Dawes committee on that subject.

Many down-state private bankers have been sending out letters to other private bankers in the state, most of them having been mailed through the secretary's office in the Rookery. The purport of these letters is "protection" for the private banker and his interests. It is charged by them that the movement will be retroactive, and that if supervision is adopted deposit guaranty will attach to it. This probably is intended to frighten the advocates of supervision into believing that they are not to be treated fairly. All of these questions will, no doubt, be answered at the Peoria convention, and if the Cook county organization of private bankers indicates its willingness to accept a fair supervision bill, it will go very far toward disarming the opposition, which can see nothing in supervision except an attack upon their business interests.

PRIVATE BANKERS OF OHIO DEFER CAMPAIGN

Private bankers of Ohio, who planned a vigorous campaign to prevent the passage of the proposed constitutional amendment prohibiting the use of the word "bank" or "banking," except by institutions under federal or state supervision, have decided to defer their fight. The amendment proposed simply gives the legislature authority to pass a law, establishing the prohibition, and if approved by the people, the private bankers will carry their fight before the assembly. They are hopeful of success, since the proposition has been frequently urged in the assembly but has never been passed.

Superintendent Baxter, of the state department, while believing that the general principle of bank supervision must be extended and developed, admits that if the prohibition proposed is established, some well-managed private banks will suffer. He says:

"There are many of these private banks which are as safe as any bank with state supervision, but unless their affairs are open to inspection there is no assurance that they will not be insolvent at some time, although they may run along for a number of years with not enough good securities to meet their obligations if pushed for settlement."

Mr. Baxter is emphatic in saying this condition does not prevail in all private banks.

About half of the 225 privately owned banks of the state are friendly to the department and send in regular reports of their condition. Many of these would incorporate if the prohibition were adopted by the state. The requirement that an incorporated bank must have at least $25,000 capital stock would probably prevent some of these from doing that, however.

The proposed amendment is largely directed at the loan agencies, steamship offices and other establishments of this class which use the word bank and in many instances have destroyed its significance. Further than this the provision is intended to protect foreigners against certain of their countrymen who es-

Short Term Securities

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations.

Such securities, particularly of the larger issues, also usually command a ready market and are not subject to extreme fluctuations in price.

Our recent booklet, "Short Term Securities," met with so favorable a reception that we have been prompted to issue a second edition. This contains brief descriptions of current issues, brought down to June, 1912. We will furnish copies on request.

establish private banks for the purpose of obtaining the money of their people who seem to lack confidence in American banks. Private bankers are one in the opinion that these foreign banks deserve no protection and the private banking institution as a class should not be banished because of an unprincipled alien banker.

The stockholders of national banks are liable for double the amount of their stock. Partners in a private banking concern have unlimited liability. The creditors of their institution must be paid in full if it requires every cent of asset each member of the firm possesses.

TO INSPECT CANADA BANKS

Ottawa, Ont., September 2d.—The cardinal feature of the new bank act to be introduced at the coming session of parliament will be a provision for outside, but non-governmental bank inspection in addition to the present regular inspection by the banks' own inspectors. The proposal is to compel each bank to have an independent inspection at regular intervals by accounting experts. The government has decided to adopt this principle in lieu of the proposed system of regular inspections by government officials which would involve practically a government guarantee as to the solvency of each bank and the correctness of its published statements.

The minister of finance does not believe that a government audit is wise nor does the bankers association approve of so radical a measure. But it is believed necessary to provide an additional safeguard against inadequate inspection and to insure against fraudulent statements of a bank's affairs.

PRIVATE BANKS MUST REPORT

An imperative notice from State Comptroller Sohmer of New York to all private bankers licensed by him to do business to report the amount of their assets and liabilities, "preferably as of September 1st, and in no case as of earlier date," was issued on Friday. These reports are to be filed within ten days of September 1st.

The Citizens National Bank of Prairie Grove, Ark., has been chartered; capital $30,000. W. H. Mack is president, W. W. Carl vice-president and M. M. Collier secretary-treasurer.

WILLIAM G. EDENS RETURNS FROM THE WEST

William G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, returned to the city this week after an extended tour through the West. Speaking in regard to the general situation in that section of the country, Mr. Edens said:

"Crop conditions in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado and Utah never appeared better. The railroads will be put to a severe test to furnish adequate facilities for the handling of the crops. While general business conditions are quiet, yet everybody feels hopeful about the future, and the promise of bumper crops gives a confident tone to the westerners' expressions. I had an opportunity to visit the banking quarters of the big Denver, Pueblo and Salt Lake institutions, and was much surprised at the substantial improvement in the way of bank buildings in these important cities during the few years since I last visited the West. The palatial home of the First National of Denver is a great credit to the city of Denver and to this important financial institution, while the modern banking quarters of the Walker Brothers at Salt Lake, now nearing completion, and whose building has been a record-breaker, compare favorably with the quarters occupied by the older and stronger institutions of the larger eastern cities. Both Denver and Salt Lake show evidences of important growth and prosperity. Sugar beet and fruit growers of Colorado and Utah, as well as those engaged in general agricultural pursuits, should reap a rich harvest from their crops this year, as fields and orchards, under a successful system of irrigation, show the greatest crops ever produced in these states. Of course, owners are apprehensive as to the prices at which these crops will be marketed. With the wonderful resources of the West and the natural beauty and attractiveness of their mountain scenery, people are enthusiastic about the movement to "See America First." Every resident is a booster. The interest in road development and improvement is general. All classes of citizens are contributing time and energy to this work. The use of prison labor in both the states of Colorado and Utah has produced wonderful results in a comparatively short time. The Colorado example, where Warden Thomas B. Tynan of the Canon City state prison has built one thousand miles of roads with prison labor in the comparatively short time of three years, and with a minimum expense to the state, is having its influence, not only on the neighboring states to Colorado, but is being commented upon favorably by people interested in good roads throughout the entire country, and will in time, I believe, cause the authorities in the older states to adopt the Tynan system of working convicts on the public highways and under the honor system. The influence on the convict, having the opportunity to work out-of-doors rather than behind prison walls, is one which produces good results in the matter of preparing him for his return to citizenship. I consider the acceptance on the part of Warden Tynan to address our good roads convention at Peoria on September 27th, fortunate for our Illinois people who will attend this meeting. The pictures which Mr. Tynan exhibits in connection with his lecture are made by the best moving picture experts in the country and are descriptive of good roads making by prison labor, showing the men at work and their camps where they are domiciled, and giving many beautiful views of the wonderful mountain scenery of Colorado."

BANKING WILL BE PROFITABLE

The National City Bank of Chicago in its circular for September says:

"From present indications, it is safe to assume that the banks will enjoy very fair prosperity during the balance of the year. They will almost certainly receive a much more profitable interest rate for the money which they have to lend. The banks throughout the crop districts are already pretty well loaned up, but their position is unusually sound for the reason that their money is employed in very safe undertakings and the indications are that their customers will enjoy increased prosperity through the abundant harvests. Within the last few weeks there has been a further shifting of investments by the banks, and the demand for money from mercantile sources has enlarged to such an extent as to force many banking institutions to convert securities into cash, so as to build up their reserve account and place their affairs in position to make heavy advances to their customers in the near future. This is altogether a healthful condition of affairs."

BANKS SHIP OUT CASH

Chicago banks shipped $14,500,000 in currency to country points during August, a smaller amount than was suggested in the estimates. They drew on New York for cash for the first time since March, taking $1,800,000 from that center and the subtreasury. Other currency receipts from direct shipping sources amounted to $7,679,000. The excess shipments of cash during the month were a little more than $5,000,000. While shipments of cash into the crop-moving districts were only slightly larger than those of July, the receipts from western shipping points were about $4,500,000 less.

In the eight months ended with August local banks shipped more than $105,000,000 in currency. This amount is nearly $30,000,000 more than their total receipts of currency from all outside shipping sources.

It is to be expected that much larger shipments will have to be made this month to western centers on account of the marketing of the crops. It is believed that the crops of the Northwest will be moved as soon as possible this fall because of the partial failures and the consequent scarcity of money in some states during the past two years.

NEW OFFICERS TRANS-MISSISSIPPI COMMERCIAL CONGRESS

Salt Lake City, Utah.—James H. Brady, former governor of Idaho, was elected president, and Wichita, Kan., was decided upon for the next meeting place of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial congress last Thursday. The congress went on record as advocating a federal appropriation of $5,000,000 in aid of the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco and $1,000,000 to assist the San Diego exposition in 1915.

BANKING BUSINESS FLOURISHING IN ALABAMA

Alabama must be in a flourishing financial shape, if the amount of new capital invested in banks may be taken as an indicator. The state banking department at Montgomery has granted the application of the Jefferson County Savings Bank, of Birmingham, for an increase of capital stock from $200,000 to $500,000. It is understood the bank at once will begin the erection of a sixteen-story skyscraper. Information has reached the department also that a new private bank is to be organized in Birmingham with a capital of $50,000. An application for a bank at Madrid, Houston county, has been filed. The bank will have an authorized capital of $15,000, but will begin business with $10,000 capital subscribed. Those interested are Ed. Watford, Horace Dowling and Green Watford. The Merchants and Farmers Bank of Notasulga also was recently organized.

The Farmers and Merchants State Bank, Amery, Wis., has increased its capital from $15,000 to $25,000.

WENATCHEE BANKS WILL BE BUSY

It is estimated that 5,000 carloads of fruit will be shipped from Wenatchee this season. This year's apple crop will be practically double that of last year, and 50 per cent larger than any previous season. This increased output is largely due to a larger acreage. The Great Northern Railroad has planned to handle 100 cars a day, more than twice the number of any previous year. This spells a busy time for the Wenatchee banks between now and New Year's.

SARDIS BANK CLOSED

The Bank of Sardis, at Sardis, in Mason county, Ky., recently closed its doors, placing its affairs in the hands of the state banking commission at Frankfort. The bank was organized in 1903 with a capitalization of $15,000. Examiner John Chepault went to Sardis to investigate the matter and J. Banks Durrett, of the Standard Bank of Maysville, Ky., subsequently was appointed special commissioner to take charge of and wind up the affairs of the defunct institution.

BANK CLEARINGS FOR AUGUST

Bank clearings during the month of August, according to the statement compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., which includes returns from one hundred and twenty-eight cities in the United States, again make a very satisfactory comparison with preceding years, the total aggregating $13,192,122,669, an increase of 4.6 per cent compared with a year ago and 14.7 per cent compared with the corresponding month in 1910. The gratifying feature is the large increase reported at almost every important center, and the substantial expansion over both years by every section into which the statement is divided. New York City reports a gain of 1.4 per cent over last year and 15.8 per cent over 1910, although transactions in the speculative markets during August were of comparatively reduced volume.

James K. Lynch on Banking Possibilities of the West

San Francisco financier forecasts the future of both slopes of the Rockies before the junior bankers at the Salt Lake convention of the A. I. B.

Mr. Lynch is head of the San Francisco Clearing House and the active vice-president of one of her largest banks. He is an eloquent speaker and paid a high tribute to the Far West in detailing her glories, her beauties, her resources and productiveness. Nothing much was overlooked that might make an inhabitant of either slope of the Rockies, feel proud of his country. Following his brilliant opening Mr. Lynch said in part:

Although addressing an audience of bankers, I may be pardoned if I take a moment to recall to you the nature of capital and of that most misleading term—money. I have sometimes thought that if we—all of us—bankers, and the whole community, understood clearly what money is, and also what it is not, the trouble of the banker would be over. Certainly that portion of them caused by hampering legislation, and by the unreasonable demands of depositors, would cease, and that is a very large part of the whole. Gold coin is to-day money throughout the civilized world. Silver is still money in some countries, and for a restricted use it is everywhere money, just as copper, for a still more restricted use, is money. Treasury notes, bank notes and bank deposits are not money; they are promises to pay money; or, in more exact sense they are commodities, valued in money, measured against gold, the place of the commodities being temporarily taken by paper tokens, or the tale of them recorded on the books of a bank.

When a drove of steers, or a cargo of wheat, or a train-load of machinery is sold, it is not exchanged for gold coin and the gold then deposited in bank. What happens is that the beef, or the wheat, or the machinery is measured against gold coin at the market price of the day, and a memorandum of the value in the form of a check is taken to the bank and recorded on its books. It is true that minor trades are still made in which money is exchanged for commodities and that, occasionally, comparatively large transactions of this kind take place. It is also true, as our depositors sometimes tell us, that instead of depositing a check in bank they can collect it in coin, but this is only true if, as is normally the case, but a very small portion of the community cares to do so. Less than ten per cent of the bank deposits throughout the country are made in money, and in most places the percentage is not over five, so that, in order to get on a strictly cash basis, as some of our legislators think we ought to do, the industrial, manufacturing and commercial activities of the country should be reduced by nearly ninety per cent.

The great amounts of capital invested in promissory notes, mortgages and bonds, payable in gold coin or lawful money of the United States, (which is only a promise to pay gold coin) can never be so repaid, for the very good reason that nowhere in the world does there exist a store of gold sufficient to pay them. It is equally true that there is no need for so repaying them; they represent in the last analysis orders for commodities valued against gold coin, and it is commodities, which we can consume, or use, or enjoy, that we require, not gold which brings us riches only when we part with it. Gold has, and will continue to have, its uses, not only as a measure of value, but as a concentrated and portable form of wealth, available for international exchanges and to meet the demands of those who cannot realize wealth in any other form. It is reserve money in the true sense of the word reserve, and should be behind issues of credit notes circulating as money in a proportion that experience has pretty definitely determined. The banker's greatest trouble comes when, through unreasoning fear for the safety of his deposit, the depositor demands that the banker transmute paper evidence of wealth into gold coin.

I have said that the country that consumes what it produces, that burns its own smoke, so to speak, gives but small field for the banker. Let us see what is the exact service which the banker renders, and why it is that the Money Devil has been not only permitted to exist, but actually welcomed, in so many primitive Edens. The process is instructive, and I will venture to relate an experience familiar to any one raised in the West, which epitomizes the evolution of the bank.

An isolated and sparsely settled region is served by a general merchandising store, the goods being hauled in by teams. The inhabitants, having but little cash, bring in surplus produce which they exchange at the store for groceries and dry goods. This is the primitive barter, and the produce furnishes freight for the wagons as they return for more goods. Some of the settlers bring in produce exceeding in value the goods that they carry away; the merchant values the surplus produce in money, and credits the customer on his books with the value. This is sale, and at the same time this transaction is the beginning from which a bank may develop. If the country is productive, the thrifty farmers find their credits growing beyond their purchasing requirements at the store, and they give orders on the merchant in exchange for labor performed, or live stock purchased, which are paid in merchandise or entered to the credit of their holder. Here is the beginning of the check system.

As the community grows, the products far exceed the outside purchases; a railroad is needed to haul the produce away, and about the same time the people conclude that they need a bank. Quite naturally the merchant who has prospered, and has begun to make an occasional loan, decides to give up his merchandising, and become a banker. In fact, he is a banker already, for he has developed the credit system, produce valued in money and the amount noted on his books; the check system by which the credit is transferred to others, and the loan system by which a portion of the unused credit is hired to those who can use it temporarily. When a real bank is opened the real money in the safe will be a detail hardly more important than the grille and the plate glass. The essentials of the bank existed in a corner of the country store.

The railroad beings in merchandise and carries the produce, according to its nature, to all parts of the country; perhaps it starts it on its way to the most distant parts of the earth. This it does through connecting railroads, or connecting water carriers. But each transfer of produce or merchandise involves a transfer of credit, which it is the bank's business to handle, either directly or through corresponding banks. It may be a crate of eggs, or a ship-load of wheat; the credit which is produced is noted with equal care and transferred and accounted for with equal fidelity. The Money Devil is welcome because he is a friendly and a useful devil, doing important work for small pay. Perhaps it would be better to call him a Credit Devil, for the collection of credit is really his chief occupation. Odds and ends of credit, savings, the margin between cost of production and selling price, or the balance of income in excess of living expenses, become capital, and are available for enterprises of all kinds, when assembled in the ledgers of the bank.

The banks are to-day in much the same position regarding the exchange of credits as the railroads were in the time referred to as to the exchange of freight. The banks require to get to a standard gauge, and they must require a Union Depot in the form of a central reserve association, if they are to properly perform their function of the transfer of credit, economically and expeditiously to those parts of the country where it is required. Less fortunate than the railroads, the banks have to receive permission from the central law making power before they can acquire the machinery that will enable them to give the country the service which it requires. But the case is so plain that the country itself must soon understand both the need and the method of meeting it; then, and not till then, we may hope for proper legislation. Here is a field in which the men of the

A threatened banking war in Medora was averted by the Bank of Medora, established thirty-five years, selling to the Farmers State Bank of Medora, recently organized. A. L. Carter is president of the new bank and L. W. Craig cashier. Its sixty stockholders are business men and farmers. The new bank will open for business the middle of September.

Fourth Bank for Olney

Announcement has been made of the completion of the organization of a new bank, which will be the fourth bank for Olney. The new bank has chosen for directors William Parker, now president of the Bank of Parkersburg, John B. Porter, W. L. Hart, J. S. Brown of Bridgeport, and H. R. Fields. The executive officers chosen are: president, William Parker; vice-president, H. R. Fields; cashier, J. S. Brown.

For Good Roads

The Bank of Rushville has arranged for the distribution by mail to the farmers of Schuyler county of over two thousand copies of government Bulletin, No. 321, relative to the use of King's Split Log Drag for highway improvement. This bank has gone to some expense and trouble in arranging this distribution and it is hoped that those who receive this document will read it carefully and use their best efforts to encourage the use of the Split Log Drag in their community. The subject of good roads is of vital importance to our county and it is believed that a vast amount of good can be done with economy, by the systematic use of the Split Log Drag.

To save and build up soil fertility is a subject in which increasing interest is manifested, and the Bank of Rushville has, also, arranged for a supply of a number of valuable documents on this subject which are offered for free distribution to those who call for them. Market reports, as well as agricultural and live stock weekly papers can usually be found on the customers' desk of this bank.

Chester Corey

Chester Corey has been appointed manager of the corporation department of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of this city, to succeed Andrew Cooke, vice-president, who resigned to become senior member of the firm of Cooke, Holtz & Co. Mr. Corey has been with the Harris organization for the past nineteen years.

SUES HEAD OF PRIVATE BANK

J. W. Worthington, head of the American Bank of Chicago, was made defendant in a suit for $50,000 filed in the circuit court Tuesday by N. J. Eisendrath, engaged in the millinery business at 81 East Madison Street. Only the praecipe in the suit was filed, but according to Attorney D. S. Eisendrath the action is for an alleged libelous statement made by Worthington which he says hurt the credit of his client.

WILSON TALKS ON IMMIGRATION

Governor Wilson, in talking to the editors of various foreign papers published in New York City, this week declared himself in favor of barring that class of immigrants who are induced to come to this country by the steamship companies. He believes that only those who come voluntarily ought to be admitted and allowed to compete in the field of labor; that if they are allowed to come in unrestricted there is going to be everything which will be detrimental to the community as well as to the immigrant. He believes that the government ought to endeavor to prevent such a situation.

BANK PRESIDENT SELLS CONTROL

Bend, Ore.—L. B. Baird, president and chief owner of the Deschutes Banking and Trust Company, has sold to S. Morris Lara and E. M. Lara, the latter of whom has been and will remain cashier. Mr. Baird, after a brief visit to Portland, will go to Medicine Hat, in Alberta.

The Swisher (Iowa) Savings Bank, with a capital stock of $15,000, and with prominent Cedar Rapids and Swisher people as stockholders, directors and officers, has filed articles of incorporation. John P. Marak is president; Louis Wokoun, of Cedar Rapids, vice-president, and Stephen Pudil, cashier.

FOURTH NATIONAL CIRCULAR

Referring to the hardening in money rates the Fourth National Bank, New York, in its September circular says:

"With the revival in business that has taken place the banks are finding it again profitable to use their money in industrial channels and with that end in view they are reducing their security holdings and diverting the proceeds of such sales along the lines indicated.

"Advices from all the leading markets confirm what was said in our letter of August 1st about the disinclination of business men to become alarmed over the possible complications of the campaign. Merchants are going ahead with their operations in spite of politics, and the better showing made by the railroads—the gain in net earnings reported by many roads for July being a most encouraging feature—emphasizes the greater activity in general business and the increased prosperity that the whole country is now enjoying. There is every reason to expect that this expansion will continue, since the presidential campaign is not a disturbing factor in the business situation and there are no grounds for expecting that it will be. The grain movement will soon be in full swing and with the gradual return of funds to the reserve centers from the crop districts even further recovery in business may be looked for.

"Building operations in various sections are being taken up again in a large way, there being plenty of capital available for legitimate operations of this character. In many of the smaller cities the building industry is showing pronounced activity, while at the great centers of population some immense projects are being put through. These will call for a great deal of money later on but undoubtedly the capital will be readily supplied, since there is no building or land craze this year for the bankers of the country to become alarmed about."

NEW BANK AT SIDNEY, ARK.

Imboden, Ark.—The organization of a new bank at Sidney, Sharp county, has been completed, and the following officers and directors elected: President, J. P. Bone; cashier, Benjamin Yeager; directors, S. T. Harmon, A. B. Arn, C. M. Grisam, F. M. Battles, J. D. Cargill and B. F. Oliver. The bank is capitalized at $10,000 and will be known as the Bank of Sidney. It will open for business in September.

Kentucky Convention

The twentieth annual convention of the Kentucky Bankers Association will be held at Louisville, October 2d and 3d. Secretary Arch B. Davis announces that the program is complete in every detail. Headquarters will be in the Henry Watterson Hotel. The business sessions will be held in convention hall on the tenth floor. Delegates are urged to register as early as possible after their arrival in the city. Headquarters will be opened at seven o'clock on the evening of October 1st, where delegates will receive badges and other credentials immediately after registering. As a number of conventions are to be held in Louisville at the time the bankers hold theirs, delegates are urged to make their hotel reservations early. The secretary will personally make reservations for members who request him to do so until within two days of the convention.

The address of welcome will be delivered by R. Thurston Ballard, vice-president of the Louisville National Banking Company, and the response will be made by the Hon. B. M. Arnett, cashier Farmers Exchange Bank, Nicholasville. Among those who will speak at the convention are the Hon. P. B. Miller, director and attorney, Bank of Union County, Morganfield, who will talk on the relation of the banker to money, morals and happiness; C. R. McKay, manager of the First National, Chicago, on "Items in Transit;" R. N. Cook, cashier Farmers Bank and Trust Company, Bardstonsville, on "The Law of Good Neighborship Among Bankers and the People;" the Hon. E. S. Clarke, president Citizens Bank, Falmouth, will talk on "Are Savings Departments Profitable to Interior Banks?" and J. E. Buckingham, cashier of the Paintsville National Bank, will address the delegates on trials of the interior banker.

Members and guests will be entertained by the members of the Louisville Clearing House Association at a luncheon to be served in the main dining room of the Henry Watterson Hotel at noon the first day. There also will be a boat ride on the afternoon of the first day. A band has been engaged for the occasion, and there will be music, dancing and singing. A fish supper will be served on the boat. The return will be made at 7:30, after which the delegates and visitors will be further entertained at one of the local theatres.

Secretary Davis reports that the membership now is the largest in the history of the association, and it is expected that fully 600 bankers will be in attendance at the convention.

NATIONAL BANKS

The comptroller of the currency has announced that during the month of August, 1912, thirteen applications to organize national banks were received. Of the applications pending twenty-three were approved and three rejected. In the same month fifteen banks with total capital of $495,000 were authorized to begin business, of which number eleven with a capital of $295,000 had individual capital of less than $50,000, and four with capital of $200,000, individual capital of $50,000 or over.

On August 31, 1912, the total number of national banks organized was 10,250, of which 2,840 had discontinued business, leaving in existence 7,410 banks with authorized capital of $1,056,575,435 and circulation outstanding secured by bonds $723,905,556. The total amount of national bank circulation outstanding was $746,501,307, of which $22,595,751 was covered by lawful money of a like amount deposited with the treasurer of the United States on account of liquidating and insolvent banks and associations which had reduced their circulation.

Merchants and Manufacturers Bank in New Building

Wednesday morning saw the Merchants and Manufacturers Bank ensconced in their new eight-story building on West Water Street, between Grand Avenue and Oneida streets. A sequence of legal holidays, Sunday, Labor day, and primary election day, favored the plans of the officers for the transfer and the moving was completed by Tuesday night. The bank is the first of the tenants to occupy the building, the upper floors still not being quite complete although the contractors promise they will be ready for occupancy on October 1st. The building is a material addition from a standpoint of both appearance and increased office facilities to the west side business section. It is a thoroughly modern structure, eight stories high and 85 by 135 ground measurement. The exterior is faced with glazed terra cotta and enamel brick. The first floor is arranged to accommodate the quarters of the bank as well as two stores. The imposing entrance corridor is finished in white marble and mosaic work and the banking rooms in white marble and African mahogany. The upper floors are being finished in the same manner for office purposes. There will be 250 of these. The construction work has occupied less than a year, commencing on October 1, 1911, and the cost of the building is about $300,000.

The present officers and directors are: president, L. M. Alexander; vice-presidents, W. F. Myers and W. S. Paddock; cashier, E. C. Knoernschild; assistant cashiers, B. V. Dela Hunt and A. Froede, Jr.; directors, L. M. Alexander, H. P. Andrae, Fred Doepke, Nathanael Greene, E. C. Knoernschild, W. F. Myers, W. S. Paddock, Judson G. Rosebush, H. W. Schwab, F. J. Wood and T. H. Spence. The bank was organized on July 20, 1906, with a capital of $100,000 and has increased that amount, in its short history, to $250,000, with a present surplus of $33,500.

Milwaukee National in Voluntary Liquidation

Application has been made to the comptroller of currency to place the Milwaukee National Bank in voluntary liquidation under the provisions of the national banking law. The procedure is a formality consequent upon the purchase of the bank by the First National a month ago.

B. V. Dela Hunt with Merchants and Manufacturers Bank

B. V. Dela Hunt, for twenty-four years connected with the old Milwaukee National Bank, has been elected assistant cashier of the Merchants and Manufacturers Bank, his appointment going into effect when the bank opened the doors of its new headquarters. Mr. Dela Hunt was born in Milwaukee and has spent the major portion of his life here. He entered the Milwaukee National as a messenger and was assistant cashier when that institution was absorbed by the First National.

Members of the Wisconsin Bankers Association received bulky packages from Secretary George D. Bartlett this week, consisting of the detailed report of the recent convention. The report is neatly gotten up and comprises an exhaustive source of information on Wisconsin bankdom and what is transpiring therein.

Agricultural Committee Holds Meeting

Officers and members of the agricultural committee of the W. B. A. met at Grand Rapids Thursday to lay out a program of activity for the coming year. The following cities have already entered the contest promoted this year by the association: Clinton, Oconomowoc, Columbus, Montford, Waupun, Fond du Lac, Hancock, Shawano, Grand Rapids, Wittenberg, Stratford, Eau Claire, Downing, Elk Mound and Shell Lake.

MAY OPEN WESTERN BRANCH

Salt Lake City, September 4.—It is understood that the Philadelphia Trust Company, of Philadelphia, will open an account and keep a credit balance in this city in order to have its checks collected at this point at par. It is also rumored that the step may look toward the establishment here of a branch. It is held that the object of the Philadelphia Trust Company is to get eastern banks to make deposits with it, offering as an inducement to collect their items in this vicinity at par. Under the rules of the Salt Lake Clearing House Association all local and state checks indorsed outside of the states of Utah, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming, and received here for collection and remittance, are taxed one-tenth of 1 per cent. By depositing in Salt Lake or opening a branch here the Philadelphia Trust Company will eliminate this charge.

BANK LAW CHANGE DESIRED

Oklahoma City, Okla., September 4.—That the state bankers of Oklahoma are not entirely satisfied with the bank guaranty law has become evident since the bankers' convention recently held in Oklahoma City. A concerted effort is being made to create a sentiment in favor of transferring the cost of keeping the guaranty fund intact from the bankers to the paying public.

The bankers argue that the guaranty law is for the protection of the entire public, and if the public want the protection they should be willing to pay the premium. As the law is, each state banker is assessed a per cent upon his deposits annually, and in addition is subject to an additional assessment whenever the guaranty fund is depleted below a fixed amount.

VETERAN BANKER RETIRES

San Antonio, Tex., September 4.—George W. Brackenridge, San Antonio's foremost banker and philanthropist, has resigned the presidency of the San Antonio National Bank and the San Antonio Loan and Trust Company. Following the formal resignation of Mr. Brackenridge a statement was issued that Leroy G. Denman would be chairman of the bank board and president of the trust company and that Ferdinand Herff would be president of the bank. Mr. Brackenridge still maintains his directorship in both the bank and the trust company, and this position he will resign in the near future. Following this a new director will be named. Leroy G. Denman announced the election of William L. Herff to the directorate of the trust company, succeeding to the vacancy brought about through the death of his father, the late Dr. Ferdinand Herff, Sr.

LOS ANGELES BANKS FORCED TO PAY INTEREST

In its financial letter the American National Bank of San Francisco says an interesting situation has developed in Los Angeles, where the clearing house banks, finding that the savings banks and trust companies were attracting too large a proportion of depositors' money, have determined to counteract this tendency by offering to pay interest on time certificates of deposit. During the past two years in that city the individual checking accounts in national banks and in the commercial departments of state banks have increased only $12,000,000, while deposits in savings banks have increased $25,000,000. What is true of Los Angeles is to some extent, though less markedly, true of all California.

MASSACHUSETTS BANK SUSPENDS PAYMENTS

State bank authorities have taken possession of the New Bedford Co-operative Bank and the Acushnet Co-operative Bank of New Bedford, Mass., and suspended operation of the two institutions. Following an investigation of his accounts and the affairs of the bank, Edgar Lord, treasurer of both institutions, was arrested, and on being charged before the district court with larceny, pleaded guilty to having embezzled $40,000—$20,000 from each bank. He was held in default of $25,000 bail. The bank officials state that neither stockholders nor depositors would lose anything, as the surplus and undivided profit account was sufficient to meet the loss.

CASHIER IS MISSING

Raleigh, N. C.—The corporation commission closed the Savings Bank and Trust Company of Charlotte, appointing the American Bank and Trust Company receivers. Cashier Dew, whose disappearance two months ago was regarded as a summer vacation, has not returned. The commission reports that the bank is hopelessly crippled by worthless loans to the Blacksburg (S. C.) Bank, which has also failed. The receivers take over all belongings and one of the stockholders assumes all obligations. The depositors will lose nothing. No action has been started against the missing cashier.

Ten indictments against Nick M. Ellis, former cashier of the defunct Planters and Merchants Bank of Oklahoma City, were dismissed last week.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, September 4.—Optimism seems to be gaining among the St. Louis banking fraternity. Men who five months ago seemed to doubt all future progress, are to-day allowing their features to relax and beginning to admit that things are looking up a bit. The demand for funds during the past week has been all that could be desired from the viewpoint of the banker. Both city and country are in the market, and indications point to no slacking for some weeks to come. Just the routine business in sight, such as the crop movement and regular mercantile transactions, are sufficient to keep things going at the present pace for at least six weeks, and if the indicated general revival actually sets in, as few seem to doubt it will, the demand is likely to extend well into the new year. Shipments of currency are augmenting from day to day, and the zone taking them is broadening. Total volume of shipments this week is the largest for the season thus far, but engagements for the coming week indicate that a new high record for the year will be made. This condition of affairs contrasts sharply with the apathy of borrowers, both in the country and city, at this time last year or the year before. Rates now are considerably higher, and there is a healthy tone to the inquiry which shows it is based on material prosperity and of a character which is in no wise spasmodic. There are at present no indications of stringency, as all the leading banks have been preparing for months for the present state of affairs, and many of them were forced so to prepare, as they were unable to lend their funds anyhow. The belief prevails that there will be a further hardening in money rates, especially when the agricultural demand reaches its meridian, but withal regular customers are receiving assurances that they will be amply and easily provided for. Wholesale concerns and manufacturers report mainly that not in years has the outlook been more promising for fall and winter trade. Buying by southwestern merchants is heavy and reflects the success of farmers' operations in that region this season. The hand-to-mouth policy, of the last three years, has for the moment been abandoned, and there is a disposition to fill shelves. Clearings here hold up in excellent shape, the total for August being \$321,723,612, as compared with \$290,653,000 for the same month last year. Interest rates range between $5\frac{1}{4}$ and 6 per cent.

Floods Did Not Hurt Crops

Now come representatives of the flood districts in Missouri, Arkansas and other states along the Mississippi river and proclaim aloud that the waters did not injure their crops.

They desire to pin the lie on certain persons and newspapers who gave out that those lands were unproductive this season. Among the representatives are bankers, real estate men, farmers and business men generally from the affected districts. To disprove the damaging assertions which have been sent broadcast, the flood district will have an exhibit of agricultural products raised this season at the National Land Congress and Exposition, to be held in the Coliseum in October. Besides this exhibit there will be stereopticon views and lectures to further emphasize the point which the gentlemen from the bottom lands desire to make. They declare hotly that they will not have their land talked about.

Will Receive Subscriptions

Thomas H. West, Jr., secretary of the St. Louis Union Trust Company, has announced that his institution has agreed to accept subscriptions for the campaign funds of the Republican, Democratic and Progressive parties. The request to perform this office, says Mr. West, was received in a letter from the Democratic national committee headquarters at New York. Just why the Democratic committee should interest itself in the Bull Moose and G. O. P. does not appear, and this feature is causing considerable speculation among local politicians. Mr. West is quoted as saying that even he did not know on what basis this unusual request was made. The St. Louis Union Trust Company thus constitutes the only neutral ground upon which the three parties meet, and, as one banker expressed it, this is "some distinction."

New Banks Chartered

A certificate of incorporation was issued this week by State Commissioner Swanger to the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Eureka, Mo. The capital stock is $15,000 and the incorporators are John T. Byrnes, Patrick McKeever, Otto Edward and Christian Plaga-mann, J. A. Smith, Alois Steigerwald, Henry Heitman and Joseph M. Bland. A charter was also granted to the Bank of House Springs, in Jefferson county, with a capital of $10,000. The directors are R. E. Bonaker, V. J. Light, John Petgen, Henry T. G. Boemer, Hohn Heller, John P. Boemer and Ferdinand Meber, Sr.

Missouri Association Meetings

W. F. Keyser, secretary of the Missouri Bankers Association, has just issued a card which announces the dates and places of the association group meetings for 1912 as follows: Nos. 1 and 6 joint meetings at Hannibal October 17th; No. 2, Brookfield, October 18th; No. 3, St. Joseph, October 16th; No. 4, Kansas City, October 15th; No. 5, Lexington, October 23d; No. 7, St. Louis, date undetermined; No. 8, Jefferson City, October 22d; No. 9, El Dorado Springs, October 24th; No. 10, Neosho, October 30th; No. 11, Springfield, October 29th; No. 12, Charleston, November 8th. Mr. Keyser says he is in possession of correspondence which indicates that more attention will be given to the group meetings this season than in former years. The meetings at Springfield, St. Joseph, Kansas City and St. Louis are expected to be particularly "large and important."

Washing Machine Expected

The St. Louis subtreasury is to have a money washing machine, as a result of the recent bill providing for machines to clean up and rehabilitate unclean currency. The machine is on its way to this city, and according to Ralph P. Johnson, cashier of the subtreasury, will be set up and ready for action within the next few days. It has a capacity of 25,000 bills per day. He says that soiled bills turned in in the morning will be returned the same day, or early the following day.

Fight Tax Amendments

More strenuous and determined every day grows the opposition to the proposed single tax amendments, to be voted on by Missourians at the election in November. The St. Louis Real Estate Exchange and exchanges in other cities are heading the fight, and are sending spellbinders into the country to admonish farmers that they will be hard hit if the amendments carry. The opposition extends to various classes of society, and the measure is favored by quite as diverse classes. There is little chance for the success of the amendments, but those who fear their passage are none the less active. As a rule the banking fraternity in St. Louis and throughout the state generally is indifferent to the issue, and opinion is divided. On the whole it is believed by students of economics that the issue is one of the most important ever presented to the voters of Missouri. Its effect in certain ways would be revolutionary, and would require entire readjustment of the present status of things.

Membership Now 500

Colonel W. F. Keyser, the very excellent secretary of the Missouri Bankers Association, with headquarters at Sedalia, has announced with considerable satisfaction to members that Missouri's membership in the American Bankers Association has reached 500, thereby entitling the state to three members on the A. B. A. executive council. The credit for this achievement is ascribed primarily by Colonel Keyser to the persistent efforts of the present members of the council, S. J. Calfee, of the Mechanics-American National, St. Louis, and C. G. Hutcheson of Kansas City, who were very ably assisted by other bankers of the state. The third member of the council is A. D. Buckner, cashier of the Paris National, of Paris, Mo.

FARM BUREAU ORGANIZED

Peoria, Ill., September 3.—What will be known as the Peoria County Farm Bureau was organized with F. A. Jones of Dunlap president at the annual picnic of the Peoria county grange at Alta yesterday. C. H. Feltman of the Peoria board of trade was made secretary. The object of the new organization is to improve crops and the breeding and raising of cattle and horses. A farm manager will be employed, whose duty it will be to analyze the soils, and every means will be adopted to promote better crops and preserve the life of the soil.

MONTANA CONVENTION

The ninth annual convention of the Montana Bankers Association was held at Kalispell on Friday and Saturday, August 23d and 24th.

The attendance exceeded by far that of any previous convention and the meeting was a success both in a business and social way. A splendid program for the business sessions was carried out, including the following addresses:

"Commercial Arbitration," by J. W. Spangler, vice-president of the Seattle National Bank, Seattle, Wash.; "Corporate Surety Bonds," by J. P. Donnelly, state manager of the National Surety Company, Helena; "Responsibilities and Liabilities of a Bank Director," by Edw. T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank, Spokane, Wash.; "Financial Problems," including a discussion of the Aldrich Bill, by H. von der Weyer, cashier of the National German-American Bank, St. Paul, Minn.; "Agricultural Development and Education," by W. D. Vincent, cashier Old National Bank, Spokane, Wash.

President Smith's address reviewed the work of the year and included many recommendations of importance. The secretary's report showed the association to be in a flourishing condition.

Much business of importance to Montana bankers was accomplished and strong committees on legislation, agricultural development, education, etc., were appointed.

Too much cannot be said of the splendid entertainment features provided by the Kalispell bankers. The program included a number of automobile trips through the beautiful Flathead Valley, a boat excursion on Flathead Lake and dinner at Stone-Croft-on-The-Lake, and on the Sunday following the convention an automobile trip to the famous Lake Mc-Donald in the Glacier National Park. On the evening of Saturday, August 24th, a reception was tendered the visiting bankers and their wives by Mrs. A. D. Conrad of Kalispell, at her residence.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, James T. Wood, cashier, First National Bank, White Sulphur Springs; vice-president, D. R. Peeler, president Bank of Commerce, Kalispell; secretary-treasurer, M. Skinner, cashier First National Bank, Great Falls. Executive committee—H. V. Alward, cashier First National Bank, Kalispell; R. O. Kaufman, cashier Union Bank and Trust Company, Helena; Roy J. Covert, cashier Merchants National Bank, Billings; C. C. Swinborne, cashier Daly Bank and Trust Company, Butte.

The 1913 convention will be held at Helena.

RICHMOND BANKS CONSOLIDATE

At a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank and the National Bank of Virginia, held on Thursday, August 29th, the action of the boards of directors of the two institutions, in favor of the merger of the two banks, was ratified, and the consolidation became effective on September 1st. The First National Bank will, as soon as is practicable, move to the present quarters of the National Bank of Virginia, where the combined houses will be quartered until such time as the new First National Bank building, diagonally across Main Street, is ready for occupancy. This will be several weeks yet, as the interior plans have been altered to accommodate the merged banks, and an extension of time has been granted the contractor.

Daggett, Mich.—The Daggett State Bank has been chartered.

NEW YORK BANK LAW AMENDED

In April of this year the New York legislature passed an amendment to the penal law relating to borrowers' attempts to obtain property or credit by means of false statements, a practice which has resulted in heavy losses to banks. The legislation was secured at the instance of the New York Bankers Association, and the law became effective September 1st. The act applies to persons who knowingly make untrue representations respecting the financial condition either of themselves or some other individual, firm or corporation, by means of which is secured either the delivery of personal property, the payment of cash, the making of a loan or credit, the extension of a credit, the discount of an account receivable, or the making, acceptance, discount, sale or endorsement of a bill of exchange, or promissory note. The act also applies to any person, who, knowing that a false statement in writing has been made relating to his financial standing, procures on the strength of such statement any of the benefits above enumerated; it also refers to statements previously made, which, though true at the time they were made, are false at a later date. Any person violating the act is deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, the punishment for which is imprisonment for not more than one year, or by a fine of not more than a thousand dollars or both.

The wisdom of such a law readily is apparent, and other states would do well to follow New York's example and secure legislation which materially will reduce the hazard on loans, and enable banks to render that service for which they are created,—the safe-keeping of the public's money.

UNFAIR REPORTS

The huge Taft landslide in Michigan on Thursday of last week was not even mentioned in the Chicago bull moose newspaper. The Record-Herald says that Taft defeated the Roosevelt forces by a vote of twenty-five to one. How can the voter continue to believe in a candidate or his cause when his newspapers suppress the news? It is altogether indefensible and almost inconceivable what chances ambitious young men will take with a great newspaper property. A loss of reputation for fairly printing all the news that's fit to print is fatal to any newspaper.

Claims for the third party should be judged somewhat by the success of such movements in the past. The 1912 convention of the Populist or People's party was held this year in St. Louis with but eight delegates in attendance—all candidates. Yet 20 years ago Gen. James B. Weaver, the first nominee of the party for the presidency, polled 1,041,028 votes. What has become of the other 1,041,020? Weaver, who had been the Greenback party's nominee in 1880, won 22 electoral votes in 1892 under the Populist banner—4 from Colorado, 3 from Idaho, 10 from Kansas, 3 from Nevada and 1 each from Oregon and North Dakota. The only other third party that ever gained more electors was the movement of the Bell-Everett Constitutional Unionists in 1860, who won 39 electors in three states and polled 589,000 votes. If Standard Oil revelations continue it seriously is doubted if Col. Roosevelt will do as well as Gen. Weaver did. At all events he will not go beyond the Bell-Everett results in the electoral college—if third party history repeats itself. This third party is weak in having no big issue as Weaver had, but looses daily in strength as it becomes clearer that it merely is a matter of personal ambition of Roosevelt in national affairs as it is of "Boss" Flinn in Pennsylvania; of Ex-Senator Beveridge in Indiana, and so all along the line down to certain newspapers which would ruin where they cannot rule.

BAR ASSOCIATION ON ROOSEVELT

The sessions of the American Bar Association held in Milwaukee the past week presented a variety of opinion on every subject up for discussion except on the "recall of the judges" as proposed by Roosevelt in his vote-catching platform. Condemnation of this was unanimous and vigorous. The associated press report says:

Every one of the six formal speeches delivered before the association had some attack upon Roosevelt or his policies. The one which received the most applause was read by Henry D. Estabrook of New York. Referring to the recall he said:

"It is a dastardly, cowardly, cruel contrivance that would make the iniquity of the inquisition almost respectable by comparison."

That Roosevelt was not condemned for his opposition to trusts but for playing favorites among them was brought out strongly. Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, the government's "trust buster," was elected president of the association for the next year, succeeding Stephen S. Gregory of Chicago.

COUNCIL CLUB BANQUET AT DETROIT

The annual banquet of the Council Club will be held in Detroit on Wednesday night, September 11th and be presided over by President George H. Russell, who also is president of the Detroit Clearing House and will make an address of welcome at the opening session of the big convention. Most of the details of preparing the program and arranging for the banquet have devolved upon Secretary Lucius Teter of this city, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Co. Among the speakers who have consented to give short talks are August Blum of the First National Bank of this city, on "Legends of the Rhine." Festus J. Wade of St. Louis will speak on some of the hobbies to which up-to-date bankers devote their spare moments. William George of Aurora is expected to drive a team of Shetland ponies for a race against time around the balcony of the dining hall. Cornelius N. Pugsley will explain what a hard time he has had to conduct the New York Bankers Association along conservative lines. E. R. Gurney of Fremont, Nebraska, will speak on "The Kansas-Nebraska Act." Other prominent bankers present will be invited to talk on various topics, and all of them will be ruthlessly beaten down by the gavel if they attempt to talk too long. It is the intention to make this occasion a strictly social one and all references to "shop" will be barred.

All ex-members of the executive council of the American Bankers Association are eligible to attend this banquet. This naturally includes all ex-officers of the association because of their membership ex officio in the council. Members are especially reminded that they may bring along their wives and daughters, and under certain conditions guests may be invited. Secretary Teter will be at the Ponchartrain in Detroit and will arrange to care for all late comers or for those who have failed otherwise to make table reservations.

AGRICULTURAL MATTERS RECEIVING ATTENTION IN WASHINGTON AND OREGON

Matters pertaining to agricultural development and education are receiving attention in Washington and Oregon. The state reformatory at Monro, Wash., recently has engaged the services of Ronold E. Chapman as director of agriculture. It is intended to have a model farm, from which will be obtained enough food to supply the needs of the institution. At East Gaston, Oregon, there exists a community system of raising crops and live stock and a community system of advertising and sale. There also is a social side to the plan, and from time to time lecturers are secured to talk on some live subject. A movement has been put on foot at a meeting of bankers, educators and commercial club and live stock exchange representatives by which the Oregon legislature will be asked to appropriate $50,000

PRESIDENT HARRIS APPOINTS COMMITTEE

President B. F. Harris, of the Illinois Bankers Association, appointed a committee this week for the purpose of drafting a bill to be presented to the Illinois legislature, the object of which is to establish agricultural and vocational education in the schools of the state. The project involves the expenditure of approximately $1,250,000 as an initial cost to the state of installing the agricultural and vocational courses of study. President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois is chairman of the committee, the other members of which are George M. Reynolds, Julius Rosenwald, Edwin R. Wright, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor; Prof. Frank M. Leavitt, president of the state teachers association committee; E. G. Cooley, former superintendent of schools, Chicago; F. G. Blair, state superintendent of schools; Frank I. Mann of Gilman, Ill., and O. J. Kern, superintendent of the Winnebago county schools.

THRIVING MISSISSIPPI BANK

F. W. Foote, active vice-president of the First National Bank of Commerce, Hattiesburg, Miss., a member of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, is calling the attention of his banking acquaintances to the seventeen years of successful business of his bank. The seventeenth anniversary of the institution occurred on September 2d. Its deposits now are $1,823,045.71, which is a glowing tribute to the confidence in which it is held by the people of all classes who are numbered among its many depositors. The bank now has a paid-in capital of $350,000 and undivided profits of $90,800.83, and has more deposits than any other bank in Mississippi, and more than any other bank in the South located in a city no larger than Hattiesburg.

ANOTHER HORRIBLE EXAMPLE

Another "horrible example," as the temperance workers put it, occurred in Southwest Chicago this week. Three hundred twenty-dollar gold pieces were melted into a solid chunk and five hundred in currency burned up. A prosperous truck-farmer—afraid of the banks—had stored them in his corn crib which, in his absence, burned to the ground. Most of the gold can be recovered.

GOOD ROADS CONVENTION

Printed pamphlets are being sent out calling attention to the state good roads convention to be held at Peoria, Ill., September 27th, under the auspices of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. The title of this little pamphlet is "Pull Illinois out of the Mud." The convention will be in the nature of a conference, at which advocates of good roads will determine upon a plan of action which, when carried out, will bring Illinois up from a low position in the list of states considered from the standpoint of highway improvement, and give it a standing in keeping with its agricultural, business and social supremacy. It is believed that the time now is ripe for action, and that an endeavor should be made to secure for the state roads that may be used all the year around, and which do not have to be abandoned for weeks at a stretch in bad weather. Other states in the Union have forged ahead of Illinois in matters pertaining to this most important subject. People naturally desire to live in communities in which there are good roads. Therefore it is believed that it is up to Illinois to put the good roads sentiment of her people in action, and to see that she is not outstripped by other states which are anxious to wean her citizens to their farms and cities. It is universally conceded that the present road laws of the state are antiquated and inadequate. Indications are that at the 1913 session of the legislature a new road law will be adopted. A committee of the legislature is investigating the matter thoroughly.

At this convention the Illinois Highway Improvement Association will formulate its legislative policy or program, after a thorough discussion of the road situation in Illinois by representative men and women from all parts of the state. Speakers of national prominence have been secured, and the detailed program now is being prepared. It will consist of a meeting of various groups in the morning, a general business meeting in the afternoon and a mass meeting in the evening. The business men of Peoria will entertain the delegates and visitors. W. E. Hull is chairman of the Peoria committee in charge of arrangements.

Some of the good things which it is expected improved roads will bring to Illinois are better schools and larger attendance; better health and quicker medical attention; better farms and more cultivated land; better crops and cheaper transportation; better economic conditions and more producers; better social conditions and less isolation; better church attendance and better citizens and better postal service and closer friends.

William G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois and secretary of the agricultural committee of the Illinois Bankers Association, is president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, and S. E. Bradt, vice-president of the First National Bank of DeKalb and chairman of the good roads committee of the Illinois Bankers Association, is the first vice-president of the organization. C. A. Kiler of Champaign, chairman of the good roads committee of the Illinois Commercial Federation, is second vice-president; C. G. Miller of Cairo, president of the Cairo Automobile Club, and a member of the Cairo Commercial Club, is third vice-president; Mayor F. A. Garner of Quincy is fourth vice-president; Thomas Sudduth, director of the Farmers National at Springfield and a member of the Springfield Commercial Association, is the treasurer. Richard J. Finnegan of the Chicago Motor Club is secretary.

How Can Bankers Assist Agriculture OMAHA CONVENTION

Tells bankers they are doing a splendid work and that results will be far beyond their highest expectations

It affords me special pleasure to be able to express to all of the bankers of the state of Nebraska my appreciation of the splendid work they are doing in assisting all lines of agricultural work. When we hold a Farmers' Institute, a Week's School of Agriculture, a Boys' and Girls' Contest, or when we desire to start any special line of agricultural work in a community, we always are certain now that the bankers will turn a sympathetic ear and lend friendly as well as substantial aid.

Your deep interest in the cause of agriculture is shown conclusively by glancing at your list of association committees. I find that the first two on the list are strictly agricultural committees, while the fourth is a committee which cannot go very far in its works without considering agricultural questions. This would make more than one-third of all your committees dealing with agriculture. This is right, for agriculture is really the foundation of all the industries of our country. The people in towns and cities are sometimes accused by the farmers of undue interest in something which cannot go very far in its work without remembering that the prosperity of the farmer is the prosperity of the nation, so an intense interest in agriculture by all is only natural.

A very brief review of the work which is being done at the present time is necessary to an outline of future work. From June, 1911, to June, 1912, there was held by the Department of Agricultural Extension a total of 215 Farmers' Institutes, with a total attendance of 113,169. In addition to the institutes there were three Senior Short Courses held with a total attendance at all sessions of 12,174. These Senior Short Courses lasted for one week, and were of the nature of schools. Six Junior Short Courses were also held with an attendance of 8,737. Eighteen Boys' and Girls' Contests were held at county seat towns with an attendance of 10,000. The corn trains run in co-operation with the Omaha business men reached directly 51,721 and indirectly every citizen of the state of Nebraska, besides starting a campaign which spread to practically all corn belt states. We have reached by correspondence and by special meetings enough more people to bring the total easily to over 200,000. For this work we have had $17,500, but $2,500 of this was spent for permanent equipment which will be used for several years to come, and in taking care of some obligations which were incurred before the year's work started. This leaves $15,000 to take care of 200,000 people, or an average of 7½ cents per individual.

While we are confident in our own hearts that the work of the year has gone into every home in the state of Nebraska as well as into many homes in adjoining states, yet we are not satisfied. We feel that our methods can be so changed and perfected that the amount of work accomplished will be very much larger. In order to do this, however, we need a larger amount of money to put into the work. A number of plans have been developed to a point where they must be financed very soon or permanently dropped. We are especially anxious for the advice and help of citizens of Nebraska who are interested enough to give the matter serious thought. I have been in charge of the Extension work in your state but one year. Before that I was a farmer just over the Missouri in Iowa, and for ten years a student and worker at the Nebraska State University, spending a great deal of time in extension work in the field. My personal contact with the farmers, and the fact that I am a farmer myself, is the only excuse I offer for some of the following statements.

To aid us in the consideration of what follows we should first get the proper viewpoint of the mind of the average farmer. An X-ray of the composite rural mind of Nebraska would startle a good many of those who are not familiar with our rural citizenship. I believe that the Nebraska farmers are the cleanest thinking class of citizens in the world. I also believe that they are the deepest thinking class. They think slowly, but they think surely, and when the time comes for them to make a definite decision on an important matter, you can be certain that the decision is going to be right.

The Nebraska farmer is typically American. He wants to do things for himself. He doesn't want anything handed to him on a platter. If it does not belong to him, he does not want it. If it is an idea, his natural conservative inclination will keep him from accepting it until it has proven better than the idea which he already possesses. Above all things dictation and paternalism are repulsive to him, and this is the reason why some of the pet schemes of agricultural educators have failed, and why others being tried will fail.

There is in the mind of the Nebraska farmer the knowledge that production is not the only thing which needs attention. He is anxious and willing to improve his methods of production. He regards, however, marketing problems of a great deal of importance. Just at the present time, we are in the dawn of a serious consideration in the minds of the farmers of this particular phase. He will continue to consider it until he has arrived at some conclusion. He desires to know why he receives less than one-half of what the consumers pay for his produce, and the consumer would like to know why he has to pay more than twice as much as the farmer receives. The question of the necessity of so large a margin for distribution is being agitated from both sides.

He would like to have an investigation of farming as a business. He feels that his business should be placed on the same basis as that of the manufacturer. The large business concerns always consider that they must have interest on their total investments, salaries, taxes, endurance and running expenses, before they begin to count profits. The farmer of to-day is beginning to figure in the same way. When he does he finds that he must improve his methods materially to keep ahead of the game. He also is thinking deeply along the lines of rural credit systems, and before any very distant day will demand that public consideration be given this question. He will not be content until some just system is established.

Another campaign of this sort is the one which is now being conducted with the boys of the state and is known as "The Nebraska Boys Corn Growing Contest." It is a small part of a large Nebraska Boys' and Girls' Club plan. The South Omaha Stock Yards Company are co-operating in this campaign. They have contributed a sum of money which is to be used for prizes in the various counties and at the State Contest. The campaign is resulting in an increased interest in agriculture on the part of the farm boys. The questions and sheets sent them are so directed that they are led to think instead of merely do. It does one good to read the letters they write. They are proud that their extra work in applying manure and in properly cultivating their acre of corn makes it look much better than their fathers'. Occasionally a father writes that his son's corn is the best in the neighborhood. In a postscript on the back of the page he says, "I've learned lots in helping my boy." Of course he did. Get the boy and you'll get the father. How sad the following quotation when compared with the former: "I am sorry I do not know how much rainfall we have had. I wanted to make a gauge out of a tin can as you told us how, but my brothers laughed at me and said it was foolishness."

The second kind of co-operation is that which looks to the establishment of some permanent policy. This, to my mind, is the co-operation which will result in the greatest good. Temporary co-operation is the easiest and simplest, because after the propaganda is over there is nothing to maintain. Plans looking to the establishment of permanent policies must be carefully worked out, if their good work is to continue for years.

There is this important difference in the two plans: The first requires a definite amount of money. The second requires an ever increasing amount. In the second the people who are putting up the money in a co-operative way are finally going to tire of the work even though it is very successful. Work which is for the permanent benefit of the entire community should ultimately be paid for by the community and not by a few people. In order, however, to get the work started and to demonstrate the importance of a line of work, it is often necessary to secure funds from men or associations who are willing to donate of their time and money to aid in the permanent establishment of something which is worth while. The plan should be so made, however, that as soon as the policy is working well, the burden of support shall be largely shifted to the communities benefited, instead of borne by a few who are especially interested.

It will perhaps be wise to very briefly review the plans of the extension work now most commonly in use. Agricultural bulletins have been used for years as a means of extension work, but there is a feeling on the part of the farmers that they do not have enough personal element, are not simple enough, and are not widely enough distributed. The work receiving the most attention, and requiring the major proportion of the funds, is that of farmers' institutes. The institute has been very useful in its day, but has the objection of being a rapid fire affair, and of not bringing the workers in close contact with the people. It has resulted in great good and should be continued in certain communities, but for the older places something must be developed to take its place. Short courses, or six day schools of agriculture, have the advantage of bringing the workers in close contact with the people of the community, and as fast as funds are available will doubtless take the place of the institute work. They are, however, more expensive than institutes, from the standpoint of the number of people reached, but cheaper when the thoroughness and effectiveness of the work is considered.

Demonstration farms are just now being advocated very extensively. The general plan is to have some farm located in a community which is run by an expert agriculturist. It is the general notion that such a farm will, by the results of its superior methods, teach the people of the community how they can make the greatest success of farming. It is weak in several essentials. In the first place it can never be made to pay financially because a true demonstration farm must of necessity demonstrate poor practices as well as good. A demonstration farm which is not a financial success would have little influence for good. The weakest point, to my mind, is the lack of personal contact with the people of the community. The mere fact that the farm is owned by the state, puts it in a class apart, and the demonstrator's possible usefulness is greatly diminished. A demonstration farm is seldom operated under real farm conditions. There is always suspicion in the minds of some that supplies are secured cheaper or produce sold higher, or that the state is not hampered by lack of capital.

Concerted action on the part of all will mean rapid advancement. If many interests are working separately they can accomplish something, but if they join forces, and all work together, the results are going to be worth while. There is already a certain amount of machinery at your university and your experiment station and sub-stations. This machinery has been bought by you as taxpayers of Nebraska, and is being operated at your expense. It is true that there is not enough machinery to do the most economical work, or a sufficient force of operators to do the best work with the machinery you now have, but you have a splendid plant started. The people you have placed in charge are anxious for your advice and co-operation that their usefulness to the state as a whole may be increased.

BANKS MUST OBSERVE LAW

W. R. Williams, state superintendent of banks, has advised the national banks of California, in a circular letter, that they must observe the state law prohibiting banks from receiving public moneys for deposit in excess of 50 per cent of their capitalization. While the state superintendent of banks has no jurisdiction over the national banks, Mr. Williams declares that if the practice is not discontinued he will direct the state banks which use the national banks referred to as depositories, to withdraw their funds. People who always seek to find a political motive in the acts of the bank superintendent assert that the circular is aimed chiefly at a certain bank in Sacramento whose political affiliations are widely apart from those of Mr. Williams.

AN EVENT IN LOCAL THEATRICALS

An announcement soon will be made of the coming to this city of one stellar aggregation of stars that may surprise even the regular theatre patrons. In the last few years we have had several all-star revivals, the Lambs and Friars Star Gambols, etc., but the first and only burlesque jubilee will be seen here the week of September 15th at the Columbia Theatre. This signal honor was tendered Al Reeves, who will head this big organization, as Mr. Reeves is considered without a peer in his line. When he consented to do so, it was agreed that this would be an event second to none in the history of refined burlesque.

Such well known stars as Andy Lewis, Georgie Thatcher, Billy Durgin, George Scott, Johnny Walsh, Tommy Cochrane and others of note will be cast for important parts. Lucille Manion has been loaned to Mr. Reeves' company for this tour. Blanche Martin, Vera George and Catherine Crawford, to say nothing of Zella Russell, positively the highest salaried women in burlesque, Annetta, the beautiful Spanish violinist and dancer, Sisters De Graf, Catherine Horter and others will positively appear.

The "Four American Belles," direct from three years' European success, will be a special feature. The Big Jubilee Company will travel by special train and only the more important large cities will be visited on the tour. Orders will be taken at the box office by mail or phone now. No speculators will be sold any seats.

AGRICULTURAL CAMPAIGN

The Oklahoma Bankers Association is feeling rather well satisfied with the results of what might be termed its compulsory educational campaign. In common with the other associations of the country the Oklahoma bankers have awakened to the importance of the spread of agricultural education, but have adopted a rather unique way of preaching the gospel of diversified crops. It was decided by the bankers that the chief need of the Oklahoma farmers was to grow enough fodder crops to assure the feeding of their stock in the event of the failure of other crops, and the stock in turn would be security for the bankers for loans made to the agriculturists. To bring about this condition of affairs the member banks all made the agreement that for every $10 loaned to a farmer he had to promise to plant one acre of Kaffir corn, milo, or cow-peas. The result has been that the seed houses report an increase of about 75 per cent in the acreage of these crops, and as all the crops of Oklahoma seem to be of the bumper variety this season, it would appear that the farmers with enough rough feed for their stock can turn their other crops into cash, a condition which will inure to the benefit of all concerned, not excepting the bankers.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

All banking cities of the Central West have shown rapid gains in clearings within the past month and there is now little doubt that the financial condition in this territory will continue to improve steadily. The splendid crops and high prices of farm products have given the farmers renewed assurance of prosperity. On Tuesday, September 3d, which was settlement day at the Kansas City wheat market, all records for business in primary grain were broken. Omaha experienced almost the same degree of wheat activity. The cotton movement has been active and the reports from all sections indicate a very satisfactory amount of this staple at the gins and in warehouses. Following are the percentage increases of clearings for the last week in August in Central West cities: Kansas City, 9.06 per cent; Omaha, 16.9; St. Joseph, Mo., 8.09; Wichita, 16.3.

Kansas Group Meeting Dates

Following are the dates decided upon for the fall meetings of the six divisions of the Kansas Bankers Association. November 13th at Great Bend; November 14th at Harper; November 15th at Chanute; November 20th at Beloit; November 21st at Kansas City, Kan.; November 22d at Lawrence. Preliminary arrangements for these meetings were made last week when group chairmen met in Topeka. M. H. Malott, of Abilene, president of the Kansas Bankers Association, and W. W. Bowman, secretary of the association, were in charge of the meeting. The subjects to be discussed at the group meetings will include currency reform from the viewpoint of the Kansas banker, and agricultural instruction and development as well as the daily problems of the bankers. Those who attended the Topeka meeting were J. W. Howie, cashier of the First National of Hiawatha; W. E. Hayden, assistant cashier of the Watkins National of Lawrence; George Kuhne, cashier of the Lawrence National of Lawrence; J. E. Smith, cashier of the Concordia State Bank, Concordia; F. A. Mergen, of the German State Bank of Beloit; J. G. Parker, president of the National Bank of Harper, and Marcel DuPhorne, cashier of the State Bank of Harper.

Pushing the "Blue Sky Law"

State Bank Commissioner Dolley, of Kansas, the originator of the Blue Sky law which has attracted such widespread attention, is perfecting his system of investigation into details of stock-selling concerns seeking to dispose of their securities in Kansas. He has perfected a set of blank forms which doubtless will be used in other states that have adopted the Blue Sky law. The blanks cover four pages and when properly filled out give the entire business history of the company in concise form and in such a way that no tricks can be hidden in the statement without being easily detected. The blanks require a correct statement showing the amounts of common and preferred stock, the different classes of bonds and other securities, authorized and issued the exact amounts of real money received from the sale of stocks and securities, the notes, mortgages, real estate, patents, equipment, commissions, salaries and other items given to secure the stock. The companies are also required to give a complete list of the holders of stocks, bonds or notes of the company and the exact consideration given by them to obtain the securities. The statement must show also the list of officers and directors, the number of shares each owns, the actual cash each has invested in the company, the salary paid each officer and the amount of time each officer devotes to the company each year.

George F. Sawyer

George F. Sawyer, who was elected president of the Nebraska Bankers Association at the recent Omaha meeting, is one of the most popular financiers in that state and he is also one of the many Nebraska bankers who are interested in the Bankers Mortgage Loan Company, which is a new Nebraska institution which has an authorized capital of $2,000,000. F. McGiverin, whom Mr. Sawyer succeeded as president of the Nebraska Bankers Association, is vice-president of the Bankers Mortgage Loan Company and more than 500 bankers of Nebraska are stockholders in the concern, making it one of the strongest institutions of the kind in the Central West. Mr. Sawyer believes that the Bankers Mortgage Loan Company will prevent money stringency among the farmers of Nebraska in the future and that it will help to keep them supplied with funds for improving their farms.

For Monetary Reform

Officers of the Citizens League in Kansas, headed by C. M. Harger, of Abilene, president, have succeeded in arousing great interest among the farmers and merchants of that state in the subject of monetary reform. Much literature has been sent out from the league's headquarters and earnest speakers have been going over the state for the past year on tours of education. As a result eighty-three of the 105 counties in Kansas have monetary reform organizations and the Kansas congressional delegation has been bombarded with letters demanding that the members vote for the currency bill which will be voted on next winter. It is said that practically all of the Kansas congressmen have been pledged to vote for the bill.

Suggests Legal Adviser for Banking Department

Commissioner of Insurance and Banking Gill, of Texas, has filed the estimates of the needs of his department for the next two fiscal years and the total amount asked for is $259,162, an increase of $34,410 over the amount appropriated two years ago. One of the important changes that is suggested by Mr. Gill is the employment of a legal adviser for the department. Commissioner Gill also wants the authority to appoint a number of additional state bank examiners as he contemplates a rapid growth in the number of banks which must be examined within the period covered by his estimates.

Central West Notes

The Oklahoma banking department has caused a warrant to be issued for the arrest of Bainbridge Jones, formerly president of the Oklahoma Trust Company, charging him with lending the bank's funds to himself while president of that institution. The trust company went out of business two years ago and it is understood that it cost the state guaranty fund $47,000 to liquidate its accounts. Jones is supposed to be in Chicago.

Fred E. Bodie, president of the First State Bank of Elk Creek, Neb., has sold a controlling interest in that institution to L. J. Dunn, cashier of the City National Bank of Lincoln. Neal Dunn, son of the purchaser, will become actively identified with the bank.

C. D. Waller, for several years identified with the Bartlett Trust Company of Omaha, has taken a position with the Drovers National Bank of Kansas City.

The Necona National Bank of Necona, Tex., has taken over the City National Bank of that place. There will be no change in capital or officers.

Suffering from mental derangement, Mrs. George Connor, wife of the cashier of the Fontana, (Kan.) State Bank, took her life last week. Her body was found hanging from a tree by a party of men who had been hunting for her for several days.

John A. Flack, absconding cashier of the Abilene (Kan.) State Bank, was brought from New York to Abilene last week and arraigned for forgery. He waived examination and gave bond for trial.

The Texas banking department has approved the following reserve agents for state banks: for the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Kenedy, the National Bank of Commerce of San Antonio; for the Citizens State Bank of El Campo, the City National Bank of

NEW MISSOURI BANKS

A certificate of incorporation has been granted by Commissioner John E. Swanger to the Farmers Bank of Wellington, in Wellington, Lafayette county, Mo., to operate for fifty years. The incorporators are Andrew T. Mahoney, Henry C. Kehr, Charles G. Grunke, Otto Reismeyer, H. E. Neese, et al. The capital stock is $15,000, consisting of 150 shares of $100 each, all paid up.

A new bank to be known as the Bank of Holstein has opened for business at Holstein in Warren county with a capital stock of $10,000. The officers are: President, Bernard Macke; vice-president, Dr. A. M. Underwood; cashier, H. M. Smith.

GEORGE B. CALDWELL RETURNS FROM EAST

George B. Caldwell, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, recently has returned from the East, where he spent his vacation. Mr. Caldwell remained in that section of the country after the meeting of the new Investment Bankers Association.

CANADA'S BANKING POSITION

The Canadian July bank statement, one of the monthly statements which usually reflects the position of the financial organism of Canada in respect to the task of crop moving, shows a phenomenal increase for the seven months of the current year. The paid-up capital of the banks of Canada has increased from $102,626,500 to $113,410,700 or considerably over 10 per cent up to the present time this year. This, of course, has effected a corresponding increase in the authorized circulation of the country, apart from the special circulation of the crop period. Reserves have increased from $88,352,000 to $101,735,500 or at the rate of 15 per cent. The strain on the circulation is shown by the fact that the maximum issue of bank bills during the month has grown from $93,273,000 to $105,188,000, or over 13 per cent, and considerably greater than the increase of capital. Liabilities have increased in a corresponding proportion, the total being $1,111,465,500 last year and $1,264,541,800 this year, a growth of slightly under 14 per cent.

The disposition of the assets is much the same. Call loans outside of Canada were $104,009,000 in 1911, and are $117,961,400 now, or 13 per cent increase, but the increase in the call loans in Canada has been notably less, showing that the banks are in a better position this year to displace loans without impairing the Canadian markets. These loans were $65,339,300 last year, and are $70,407,700 this year, an increase of only 7.7 per cent. There is a notable reduction in the holdings of government and municipal securities. Current loans in Canada show the heaviest increase of any class of business, reflecting the extreme activity of industry and commerce and the confidence and security prevailing. The sum in July, 1911, was $723,765,358 and is now $852,256,651, an increase of 17.7 per cent.

Canadian demand deposits rose from $316,973,780 to $372,012,494, or over 18 per cent; time deposits rose from $570,789,435 to $640,592,345, or 13 per cent. The larger rate of increase in demand deposits also indicates a very active condition of business, the demand deposits being current accounts of trade. The chief changes during July were a reduction of $6,184,314 in circulation and of $2,608,375 in outside call loans. Canadian call loans rose $1,705,879. Total deposits in Canada rose $7,786,963 in spite of the reduction in the demand deposits class, but deposits outside fell $4,228,286. Current loans in Canada increased $3,316,562 and outside Canada $1,487,430.

BANKS AS AGENTS

Nashville, Tenn.—The Tennessee Insurance Department, that has taken a firm stand against banks and trust companies engaging in the insurance business, and that caused all of such institutions in Memphis that engaged in such business to dispose of their agencies, now appears to take steps to stop the practice generally, and in looking to that end the commissioner is mailing out to offending banks and trust companies a letter in which it is set out that the custom is in violation of the laws in two ways.

The department holds that an individual holding a license for the benefit of the bank cannot pay to the latter any commission without violating the resident agent's law, and furthermore implies that under the charter of such institutions there is no authority given to transact the business. The question has long been the subject of controversy in Tennessee, and during the last general assembly a special law on the subject that was fought by the banks generally came within one vote of being enacted.

GEORGE WOODRUFF BACK IN TIME FOR DETROIT

George Woodruff, president of the First National at Joliet, who is in Europe, sends word from London that he expects to return to the United States in time to attend the convention of the American Bankers Association in Detroit.

Northwest Letter

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

The Northwestern National Bank Review seizes on the crop situation with avidity as the basis of its monthly editorial. Improvement of the crop situation due to scientific agriculture is emphasized. The early years' crops in virgin soil in several states of the Northwest have been of satisfactory measure, says the Review, but these, even from the standard of scientific farming, were below the possible permanent standard that will become general when all of our agricultural work shall be done according to the best known methods.

"This year's good crop, and it is a good crop," says the Review, "is after all but a matter of a few bushels per acre more than the crop of last year, and yet those few bushels represent just so much net gain over the yield of last year produced at practically the same expense of money and labor. It is the truth that a further increase of a few bushels per acre lies within the productive power of every farmer with the same effort as, or a little more than, this year's crop has cost him. Agricultural science is far ahead of agricultural practice and increased production will follow as soon as the knowledge that is now available becomes universal. How to spread this knowledge and make it practically and permanently effective is the problem that brought together representatives of 17,000 of this country's 26,000 banks in a conference in Minneapolis and St. Paul early in August.

"General business conditions throughout the country continue to improve. Now that it is certain that the harvest will net a profit, restocking by merchants is going on apace. There will be money to spend in the Northwest, and in other sections of the country, in excess of that demanded for bare necessities, and the retailers are preparing for a brisk fall trade. Their activity, of course, means business for the jobbers, and in turn for the manufacturers. This means that the labor market offers ample employment at fair wages, and this fact minimizes the chance of serious labor troubles. The opportunities in the harvest field have been in excess of the demands of the unemployed and this condition has resulted in relatively high wages for the workers in the field.

"The weather for the past month has been abnormal for this season of the year, being generally cold and wet. Harvesting has, however, progressed satisfactorily and the moisture has been good for the later crops in a degree to compensate for the damage done to those harvested earlier.

"The demand for money has caused a marked hardening of interest rates, amounting to from one-half to one point increase in the rate that has been in force during the summer.

"Money is moving from the reserve centers to the rural districts to finance the crops. The country is in pretty good shape financially to handle the harvest, the national treasury is in a position to aid the banks, if necessary, by deposits of public funds, and our foreign trade balance remains as an ultimate asset in case it becomes necessary to import gold."

Minnesota State Fair

One of the feelers as to the condition of the country people is the annual Minnesota state fair which has been on full blast this week. Storekeepers, hotel men, and café owners say that more $20 bills are offered for change by the rural people than they have ever known. The automobile dealers who are exhibiting at the annual show in the grand stand building say that the demand for agencies for automobiles and for private sale of cars is heavy. This is taken to mean that the stories that the farmers have money to spend after paying bills is true. The bankers are taking occasion to run in to the twin cities for the fair and talk over the situation with the city bankers and their friends from the country. The exhibits are profuse and indicate that the estimate of crops must be correct. The fair is like the grain exhibits in the Northwestern National Bank lobby, only larger. The fair management is using 50 cent and 25 cent slot machines at the entrance stiles and E. L. Mattson, cashier of the Scandinavian-

American National Bank, who is treasurer of the state fair association, is said to be dreaming nights of half dollars as the sole crop in the Northwest. He figures in his dreams that such a crop can be rolled in under its own power and that there therefore will be no car shortage.

Awarded Library Bonds

E. H. Rollins & Sons of Chicago have been awarded the St. Paul $50,000 4½ per cent library bonds at $50.450. Two Twin City firms bid $50.325 and a Boston company $50.350. All of six other bids were above par, except one. Several series of small issues of sewer bonds are on the market.

Back From Montana Convention

R. E. Macgregor, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National, with P. J. Leeman, First National of Minneapolis, and E. J. Grimes of the Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, have returned from the Montana Bankers Association convention at Kalispell. Mr. Macgregor says more cattle have been raised in the state this year than ever before, from the sale of which the farmers are making money. Much of the beef reaches the Twin City market. J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National, went on west to Glacier National Park with his son. He tasted the glories of the park last year and decided to go in this year from Belton and horseback through from the Glacier hotel at the head of Lake McDonald. Being of sedentary habits Mr. Pomeroy decided that the change from an office chair to the saddle of a Montana trail horse would be easy and feasible.

Back From Fishing Trip

E. W. Decker, president of the Northwestern National, has returned from trout fishing in Boulder creek, Montana, south of Billings. He says the creek is the fastest he has fished in. While away several business friends of Mr. Decker died, including Judge M. L. B. Koon, the vice-president of the bank, and Joseph Chapman, father of Joseph Chapman.

Minneapolis Bank Clearings

Bank clearings in Minneapolis were $8,000,000 greater than last year and the total for the eight months is $652,198,135 greater than for the same length period in 1911. The highest price for local bank stocks has been reached. Every month of the eight has shown an increase. It is estimated that the total clearings for the year will reach $1,250,000,000.

Security bank stock at $500 a share asked and $475 bid. Northwestern National and First National at $290, Scandinavian-American at $138, Metropolitan National at $140 and St. Anthony Falls at $150 were new high prices. German-American was quoted at $185 bid, Hennepin County $265, East Side $128, Union State $115, South Side State $250, Minneapolis State $130 and Merchants and Manufacturers $128 asked.

The clearings for the eight months with last year's comparisons show:

January	$85,699,581.99	$85,684,404.74
February	77,712,657.11	70,861,772.47

EDMONTON NEWS

Edmonton, Alta.—Four and a half million dollars of Holland capital will be invested in loans on farm property and inside real estate in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan by the Hypotheek-bank Voor America, according to H. S. Gratama, manager of the bank at The Hague, who was in Edmonton a few days ago arranging with the National Trust Company to handle the money, a large portion of which is to be placed in the Edmonton district.

Mr. Gratama expressed the opinion that from the viewpoint of the corporation he represented, there exists to-day in Alberta and Saskatchewan the best field for investment in either Canada or the United States. Continuing, he said:

"Farm properties I consider the best securities in this country. Next to these come inside business properties in the larger cities of the West. So long as there is a big demand for money in these western provinces at prices approximately 8 per cent, our people will no doubt continue to invest in good securities. When the price of money goes down we shall look out for a field where the high rates can be obtained."

John Galt, of Winnipeg, president of the Union Bank of Canada, who was in the West with a party of directors and officials of that institution, said in the course of an interview in Edmonton, on August 24th, that the bank has more than 170 branches in the prairie provinces and is adding others in new towns along the transcontinental railroads. "On all sides," Mr. Galt continued, speaking of the progress and development of central and northern Alberta, "we see solid progress and the stability of agriculture, as exemplified by mixed farming. The crops are in excellent condition everywhere in the western provinces and the prospects for a profitable season are the best."

Spokane, Sept. 3.—Business conditions in Spokane have felt a decided revival as a result of the announcement of the successful financing of the New Davenport hotel, work on which is to be started immediately. The outlay will be a little more than $2,000,000. The underwriting by the Mercantile Trust Company of St. Louis, through the Union Trust and Savings Bank of Spokane, of a bond issue of $750,000 for the hotel, which is thought to be the largest issue ever floated for a hotel west of Chicago, is taken as a marked evidence of faith of eastern capital in the stability of Spokane and its future. The terms of the issue call for 1,500 bonds of $500 each, bearing 6 per cent interest for ten years and maturing serially. The underwriting of the bond issue completes financial arrangements for the erection of the hotel, which will be one of the finest in the West. The total cost of building, ground and equipment will be $2,050,000. This amount is handled by 9,000 shares of preferred stock at $100 each, 4,000 shares of common stock at $100 each, and the $750,000 bond issue. Excavation of the site will begin about September 15. During negotiations for the bond issue several directors of the Mercantile Trust Company were in the city, including Festus J. Wade, president; John Scullin, head of the Scullin-Gallagher iron works of St. Louis, and J. B. Moberly, director and loan officer. It was not until a thorough study of conditions in Spokane and the Inland Empire had been made, including reports of three groups of officers and examiners who visited this city, that the trust company determined to take the issue.

Able to Move Wheat and Fruit Crops

Judge Robert S. Lovett, chairman of the executive committee of the Harriman lines' directorate, while in Spokane expressed the belief that the railroads will be fully able to move the large wheat and fruit crops of the Northwest. "But the roads will have to bend all energies to the big task," he added. Discussing financial conditions in the East, Judge Lovett said the banks are overflowing with uninvested capital, due to apprehension of investors of possible disturbed conditions of the country's finances. He expressed the belief that these fears are unfounded, and predicted that the limit has been reached in enactment of legislation restricting railroads.

Union Stock Yards for Spokane

Eleven acres of land in the Spokane valley, just east of the city, have been leased by the J. H. Roberts & Brother Company, on which they plan to erect union stock yards, with the object of developing the industry in the Inland Empire. The company has made provision for enlarging the space as necessity arises. An open market for all kinds of live stock will be maintained. An indication of the volume of stock business may be had from the fact that the same firm, operating in its present cramped quarters, shipped out $100,000 worth of horses alone during the first seven months of this year. The Inland Empire sends large sums of money East for meat products, and a decided impetus has been given the stock-raising industry in this district recently.

Edwin T. Coman

The rapidly growing significance of the Pacific Northwest in the financial world is demonstrated by the increased attention of banks of the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast, according to a statement made by Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank of Spokane, on his return from the Montana State Bankers convention. "The importance of our conventions in the Pacific Northwest is shown by the fact that banks of Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul and San Francisco are represented at the meetings," said Mr. Coman.

Washington Crop Conditions

Washington crop conditions for 1912 are above the average for the last ten years by 5.9 per cent, according to statistics gathered by the Railway Age Gazette. According to statistics on all states, the general or composite conditions of crops combined on August 1st, duly weighed, by states, on the basis of 100 as representing the average condition (for most crops the 10-year average) of Pacific northwestern states follows: Washington, 105.9; Montana, 104.5; Idaho, 104.2; Oregon, 110.6. Harvesting is in full swing throughout the Inland Empire, following a short delay caused by rain in many sections. The splendid yields reported in all parts of this territory have had their effect on business conditions, and the situation looks decidedly hopeful.

Banking Notes

In an official opinion rendered to the Washington state bureau of inspection, J. T. S. Lyle, assistant attorney-general, held that the bank examiner should collect the fees for examining banks at the time the examination is made, and that he should transmit each day to the state treasurer all money collected by him on the preceding day. The bureau, in checking up the bank examiner's office, discovered that sometimes the banks did not remit for examinations until from one day to two weeks after the completion of the examination.

The National Bank of Commerce has received from Washington, D. C., confirmation that the bank has been made a United States depository.

Returning from the Kalispell convention of the Montana State Bankers Association, Lewis E. Gary of Chicago, with Mrs. Gary, was a guest of W. L. Clark of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company. Mr. Gary, who is assistant cashier of the Corn Exchange National of Chicago, left for the coast to complete a vacation trip.

A number of farmers in Lincoln county, Wash., took advantage of the recent lull in threshing operations, occasioned by rain, to sow fall wheat. Robert Gunning, who had Gold Coin winter wheat that yielded 45 bushels to the acre, is seeding 800 acres to fall wheat, using the dry farming method.

Inland Empire bankers who visited in Spokane this week included: F. F. McGuire, cashier of the Citizens State Bank of Juliaetta, Idaho; W. W. Downie of the First National of Harrington, Wash.; and J. L. Gualp of the First National of Burns, Ore., accompanied by Mrs. Gualp.

Charles Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, his wife and mother were visitors in Spokane last week. They went from here to Portland, Oregon.

Herbert Witherspoon, vice-president of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, has returned from a New York trip.

Washington Membership in the American Bankers Association

Secretary Kauffman reports the following additional Washington member in the American Bankers Association, Oak Harbor State Bank, thus giving Washington the remarkable total of 306 members in the American Bankers Association out of 360 banks. This is by far a larger percentage of members than shown by any other state in the Union and called forth the following letter from Secretary Farnsworth:

Business Outlook

The business outlook for the Puget Sound region, and in fact for the entire state of Washington, has greatly improved during the past few weeks. The bumper cereal crops and record breaking fruit crops have stimulated all lines of business on the east side, while the steady increase of prices for lumber, shingles and lumber products in general has had a like effect in western Washington. While there has been as yet no increase in the rates for money, there is evidently a decided stiffening up, and when the crop movement becomes active, the heavy demand for money will necessarily increase the rate somewhat. The presidential campaign seems to have little effect upon business, showing that the underlying conditions are sound, and manufacturers and business men have determined not to allow politicians to disturb them. Take it all in all the outlook for this section of the United States at this time seems to be particularly bright.

City Expenses

During the month of July the city of Tacoma spent $501,089.27. Of this amount $307,317.12 went into the construction work of the Green River gravity water system, the Nisqually power plant, and the Eleventh Street bridge; $37,030.09 went into the sinking and interest funds, and the balance, $156,742.06, covers the expenses of the light and water departments and general city expenses of government.

Personals

Arthur E. Cory, cashier of the Chehalis National of Chehalis, the leading candidate for the nomination as state treasurer on the Progressive ticket, was a visitor in Tacoma during the past week.

E. T. Wilson, vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce, attended the Montana bankers convention at Kalispell last week.

John F. Harris, of Harris-Winthrop & Co., bankers of New York and London, spent several days in Tacoma, the guest of Howard Elliott, president of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, inspecting the progress of the work on the new Point Defiance line.

Arthur G. Prichard, cashier of the Fidelity Trust Company, returned home last week after spending a month's vacation motoring with his family through Vancouver Island.

Chas. Rayhorn, cashier of the Farmers State and Savings Bank, of Grant Park, Illinois, spent several days last week in Tacoma.

SENTENCED TO PENITENTIARY

Marietta, Ohio, September 3.—Arraigned before Judge Jones in Court of Common Pleas here to-day, Harry Crooks, former cashier of the Waterford Commercial and Savings Bank, pleaded guilty to a charge of falsifying a report of the condition of the bank. He was sentenced to the Ohio Penitentiary for two years. His brother, J. C. Linton Crooks, former manager of a land company, pleaded guilty to aiding and abetting Harry Crooks in the embezzlement of $7,500 bonds. He was given three years in the pen.

CROPS IN MASSACHUSETTS

Attention cropwise is now occupied with the big crops in the surplus states. But the smaller eastern states are not to be overlooked in their contribution to the annual total. Massachusetts, for instance, produces crops valued at about $10 a head, amounting this season to fully $33,000,000. The vegetable crop alone, which does not cover more than 40,000 acres, must be worth not less than $6,500,000. This kind of produce is grown on small farms of four acres with an average yield of $248 an acre, compared with the country's $13.26 average for corn, and nearly $16 an acre for wheat. The older states should take up the propaganda of increasing the amount and variety of vegetable farm products, especially within easy reach of the city markets.

GROWING COLORADO SPRINGS BANK

Colorado Savings Bank of Colorado Springs, Colo., a comparatively new institution, is making a splendid showing. With a capital of $50,000, surplus of a like amount and undivided profits of $44,000, they now have a line of deposits around $800,000. The president of this bank, E. J. Eaton, is one of the leading citizens of Colorado. Mr. Eaton formerly resided in LaSalle county, Illinois, while their cashier, F. P. Evans, is a former resident of Aledo, Mercer county, Ill. The bank is well located in well appointed quarters, and with a strong stockholders list and directory, are bound to be one of the big financial institutions of Colorado.

C. H. BOTHWELL

Sedalia, Mo.—Frank W. Hixson has resigned as cashier of the Sedalia National Bank and will be succeeded by C. H. Bothwell of Clay City, Ill., within the next few weeks. Mr. Bothwell is vice-president of the bank and formerly chairman of the Republican State Central Committee. Emmet J. Hurley has been promoted by the directors from book-keeper to assistant cashier.

Accounts of Iowa banks invited. Reserve agents for national banks

Theodore Simmerman, W. A. Solon and C. M. Hanson are organizing a new bank at Ashton, Iowa, which is to be known as the Ashton State.

R. A. Crawford, president of the Valley National is visiting relatives at Liverpool. Mrs. Crawford is with him.

Des Moines, Sept. 4.—An important meeting of the council of administration of the Iowa Bankers Association was held in the office of Secretary P. W. Hall during the state fair last week. The main question before the bankers was what the attitude of the bankers of the state will be on the new crop improvement bureau which booster organizations of Des Moines have launched. The bankers are enthusiastic for better crop conditions but the members attending the conference were not certain as to the best means to be followed. C. H. McNider of Mason City, chairman of the agricultural committee of the I. B. A., was not able to be present. In his absence his associates thought it best not to take definite action. Hence it was voted to refer the entire matter to this committee with a request that it meet at once and arrive at some conclusion. In addition to Mr. McNider those who will confer on the question are J. L. Edwards of Burlington, C. A. Larson of New Hampton, J. A. Dunlap of Keokuk and Secretary Hall. It is probable that the committee will meet in Des Moines in the near future. The crop movement is being started and it is incumbent upon the bankers to take some action definitely establishing their stand on the question.

The question of employing a general attorney for the organization was brought up and referred to a committee. President Shade was instructed to send a committee to the National Good Roads Congress at Atlantic City, N. J. Those who were present were of the opinion that the Iowa Bankers Association should do everything in its power to further the cause of better highways. Those who attended the session were Charles Shade, president, Rock Rapids; F. B. Yetter, Davenport, vice-president; Group Chairmen, C. J. Wohlenburg, Holstein; E. W. Townsend, Lake City; T. S. Hanson, Northwood; F. A. Schuetz, Lawler; Eugene Sullivan, Panama; A. E. Hindorff, Newton; Webb Hultz, Chariton; H. S. Young, Winfield.

Crop Prospects for Iowa

Crop prospects for Iowa this year seem to improve as the season progresses. While it was stated some days ago that corn had fallen two weeks behind because of the unusually cold season, the warmth of the closing days of August improved conditions materially. It will probably be late in September, however, before the crop will be entirely safe from frost. Dr. Chappel of the Iowa Crop Bureau refuses to make an estimate on the size of the corn output. But figures based upon the government crop reports have been the basis upon which some experts figure that Iowa should produce 395,000,000 bushels this year and should take the lead of Illinois which is estimated to have a total yield of 370,000,000. George A. Wells of the Western Grain Dealers Association has made an estimate placing the total yield for the state at 348,310,000 bushels which would be a big increase over last year's total which was 281,366,600. He estimates the oats crop this year at 207,000,000 as against last year's yield of 120,208,300. He estimates winter wheat and barley at about twice the output for last year. The corn yield per acre, according to Expert Wells, in Iowa will be 36.6 bushels. In connection with the handling of these tremendous crops, there is some apprehension as to a car shortage. Des Moines bankers disagree on this question. Lee Stevens, president of the Century Savings, does not anticipate a shortage because he says he does not anticipate that all of the farmers are going to attempt to ship their grain at the same time. He thinks that with the care that will be taken by the railroad companies and co-operation on the part of the shippers, it will be possible to avoid any serious difficulty in crop shipments.

Estate of O. H. Perkins

The inventory of the estate of the late Oliver H. Perkins of Des Moines shows that the estate is worth $557,845 of which $215,667 is in real estate. His bank stock, which is included in his personal holdings, is appraised at $274,147. This is invested in stock in twenty Iowa banks. He had an open checking account in the Peoples Savings of Des Moines of $8,011.97. It is stated by those who know that the estate is worth more than the inventory shows because the properties are appraised at very conservative figures. Much of the bank stock is in the Des Moines Savings.

Death of R. L. Huston

The death of R. L. Huston, cashier of the Madison County Savings at Winterset, one day last week, has proved a source of much comment throughout the entire state. The body of the man was found in the back yard at the home with two bullets in the head. One bullet had entered the forehead and the other the ear, and both bullets had passed out the back of the head. The cashier had arisen early in the morning during a rain storm. He put on a rubber coat and apparently took his revolver with him. Those in the house heard the reports of the revolver. His son ran into the yard and found the corpse. There seems to be no reason for suspecting suicide. Huston was only 40 years of age, the father of two children and successful in his business life. His accounts with the bank and the customers of the institution were found in perfect condition. Huston was very fond of chickens and had maintained a pen of fancy birds. The theory has been advanced that he heard someone in his chicken coop, that he went out to investigate and that the robbers shot him. Relatives say that had he wished to commit suicide he would have left some explanation for the deed.

F. M. Lorenzen Elected Trustee for Pilot Mound Bank

There was lively voting for trustee in bankruptcy for the Pilot Mound Bank, a private concern which recently went under because of unfortunate loans. Cashier W. H. Meservey, of a new bank which has been formed at Pilot Mound since the other went defunct, and F. M. Lorenzen, president of the City State at Ogden, were candidates for the place and Lorenzen won out. The depositors met in the office of a Boone firm of attorneys and there was a big crowd on hand.

Turns Over Property to Creditors of Failed Bank

John Swan, president of the private bank at Story City which went on the rocks when Swan's son, the cashier, skipped with all of the bank's assets and more besides, has been discharged in the bankruptcy courts. The aged man turned all of his property over to the creditors. He is broken-hearted and his health has failed rapidly since his son's departure. Detectives worked on the case a while but have failed to find trace of the missing cashier, who not only bankrupted his father, but deserted his young wife a few days before an expected visit of the stork.

Accused of Forgery

John H. Coleman, arrested at Danville, Ill., is under bonds to appear in the district courts at Keokuk and explain some transactions which resulted in a loss of $40,000 to one Edward Braun, so the latter alleges. Three indictments returned in the courts of Lee county in 1904 accuse Coleman of forgery. The man was arrested under the name of J. D. Hill. When arraigned in court, Coleman pleaded not guilty and was released under bonds of $5,000 to appear September 24th.

Iowa Public Service Corporation

The Iowa Public Service Corporation is the name of a new concern which is being organized at Cedar Rapids and which will be capitalized at $6,000,000 if present plans go through. It is stated that the Harris Trust and Savings of Chicago is to bond the concern and that the plan is to organize subsidiary corporations, including various public utility companies. Dows, Smith, Reed & Cook of Cedar Rapids are most largely interested, it is stated.

Suit Result of an Old Controversy

It is given out that the suit filed in federal court at Cedar Rapids to collect a fine levied against the Citizens Savings of that city is not of a particularly serious nature. It is stated that it is the result of an old controversy growing out of reports filed, or rather not filed, some time ago when W. E. Simpson owned an active interest in the bank. Mr. Simpson, the government avers, failed to file required reports, but as he sold out and went to Minneapolis a year ago, the officers at present are not alarmed.

Fight on Office of School Treasurer

There is no doubt that the perennial fight on whether or not Iowa is to retain the office of school treasurer is to come up at the next legislature. The Better Iowa Schools Commission which met in Des Moines during the state fair last week passed a resolution calling upon the lawmakers to abolish the statute as it is at present on the grounds that the office is unnecessary and that Iowa would save $175,000 per year by the change. Most of the school treasurers are bankers and every year the legislature is called upon to wrestle with the question.

Iowa Banking Notes

Bonds for $20,000 for water works improvement at Logan have been bought by the Geo. M. Bechtel Company at Davenport.

The Commercial Savings of Des Moines has filed a notice of foreclosure of a mortgage for $10,000 on the Highland Park I. O. O. F. Building.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Whisenand have returned from an outing at Harbor Springs, Mich., and Mr. Whisenand is again on duty at the Central State.

William M. McGuire, banker at Buffalo Center for many years and prominent in the financial affairs of the vicinity, died quite suddenly one day last week while on one of his farms in that locality.

Steve Blain was arrested at Mason City and held for investigation on the charge of forging a check upon his employer.

The Bank of Ashton, a private institution, has been incorporated at Ashton under the name of the Ashton State with a capital stock of $35,000. W. L. Benjamin is president, J. E. Townsend is vice-president and T. A. Olcott, cashier. The transition from private to state bank took effect September first.

A. S. Dukes has been elected cashier of the Unionville Savings at Unionville.

The State Bank of Bancroft has chosen W. H. Capsey as president and H. T. Whitaker as cashier. The capital stock is $15,000.

C. C. Jameson, assistant cashier in the Sac County State Bank at Sac City, was married August 20th at Toronto to Miss Jessie Laing, deputy county clerk for some time.

Frank J. Eighmey, president of the First National at Waterloo, completed his twenty-fifth year of continuous service with that institution last week. He was tendered a full dress banquet at the Ellis Hotel by the officers, directors and employees of the bank. Covers were laid for thirty-five. A six course luncheon was served, after which came an interesting line of toasts. On behalf of the officers and employees Mr. Eighmey was presented with a handsome watch. It was a very pleasant gathering.

The Bank of Terril which has been converted into the First National, has a capital stock of $25,000. Harry H. Buck is reported president, C. C. Gravatt cashier.

The Farmers Savings has been organized at Cushing with Glen Gracey president, George A. Dewell, vice-president and Ralph Evans, cashier.

BIG GAIN IN BANK CLEARINGS

New Orleans, September 3.—With an increase of fifteen and a half million dollars in bank clearings, midsummer finds New Orleans banks in a position second to that of few cities of its size in the country. While figures given by the New Orleans Clearing House Association showed that clearings for the month of August were $77,370,052, or a million under those for the same month last year, this apparent falling off was amply made up by a comparison of the figures for two years, which showed total clearings for the year ending August 31, 1912, of $1,032,173,568, as compared with $1,016,748,040 for the year ending August 31, 1911, or a gain of $15,425,527 for the year.

By JOHN J. BIDDISON.

A movement of much importance to the agricultural and business life of the community and state is that now well under way in this city to provide for county commissioners of agriculture in Iowa, started by the directors of the Sioux City Commercial Club locally and by similar organizations in other parts of the state. It is proposed that the large cities shall unite in demanding of the next legislature a law permitting county boards of supervisors to engage such agricultural experts, whose duties shall be to give free advice to farmers, make experiments and otherwise make themselves useful in improving and enlarging the products of the soil of the counties they serve. It is proposed that supervisors shall be permitted to levy special taxes for the maintenance of such experts. The Commercial Club would be willing to pay part of the cost, and has been assured by the crop improvement committee of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce that if an expert is engaged for Woodbury county who has been approved by the authorities of Iowa State College or by the federal agricultural department, it will pay $1,000 toward the expense the first year. The federal government thereafter will assume $1,000 a year of the cost. An interesting sidelight on the attitude of farmers toward the idea is conveyed in the fact that, a few months ago, when the Commercial Club proposed to raise a fund for such purpose solely by private subscription, the city of Sioux City to raise half and the remainder of Woodbury county the other half of $5,000 for a year's work, the county would not take up the project.

Banking Notes

Paul I. Nichol, of Sioux City, is assisting in the management of the Farmers Savings Bank of Manson, Ia., during the extended illness of B. E. Sebern, cashier, who was stricken with paralysis nearly three weeks ago and continues to lie unconscious. President Fitz is daily expected home from a trip abroad.

A novel method of helping business has been put into practice by the First State Bank of Faith, S. D., which is endeavoring to revive the cattle industry in western South Dakota. The bank is offering cattle to homesteaders on shares and selling them on easy terms.

Miss Marguerite Darling, a clerk in the Security National, after an operation for appendicitis, is resting easily.

The condition of Judge C. E. Floete, a banker of Armour, S. D., who was recently operated on in a Sioux City hospital for gangrenous appendicitis, is at this time decidedly grave. The expected rally has not come, and surgeons in attendance fear he cannot survive.

Among the visiting bankers in the city this week have been the following: E. L. Bridge, assistant cashier First National, Mt. Vernon, S. D.; J. H. Anderson, cashier Farmers National, Bridgewater, S. D.; J. M. Brooks, president First National, Newell, Ia.; J. H. Tentinger, cashier German Savings Bank, LeMars, Ia.; H. A. Dixon, president First State Bank, Presho, S. D.

TEXAS BANK LIQUIDATES

The Farmers and Merchants State Bank, Kenedy, Texas, which was organized there last week, has purchased the entire stock and assets of the Kenedy National Bank, and the latter concern is now being liquidated through the new institution. The capital of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank has been increased from $30,000 to $50,000, and headquarters will be moved into the Kenedy National Bank building.

Institute who are daily brought into direct contact with the depositors, either in the bank or out of it, can render signal service through educating them as to the true nature of money, and the real service which the bank renders.

Obviously the foregoing is a digression from our topic, which you may remember was the Banking Possibilities of the West. I hope that I have not given you the impression that the West is still a raw, undeveloped country. On the contrary, there are many large cities with fine buildings and beautiful homes, up-to-date shops and well equipped factories; there are libraries and churches, schools and universities, theatres and country clubs, and there are many strongly capitalized banks. There are still a few, but only a very few, places where the country store is serving as a bank, and these are being sought out and banks are being established, often in advance of the immediate needs. The banker has often both to serve and to wait for his profit. The essential thing about the West to-day is that it is a region that has found itself; that has been shaken together until each place has learned the use for which it is fitted, and is filling that use. It is a region of exceptional richness, exceptionally favored by nature, and capable of supporting in comfort a population ten times as great as that which it now has. In such a region, with such conditions, there must be, and there are, a great many possibilities for the banker. The farmer, the merchant and the manufacturer alike require accommodation; short time loans against salable produce and usable merchandise; this furnishes the field for the commercial bank. The home builder and the farmer, while he is improving his land or while he is paying installments on it, requires more permanent loans, based on mortgage security; this is the opportunity for the savings bank; the building and loan association, and the farm loan company. The builders of railroads, irrigation works, power developments and trolley lines require capital for a long term of years; here is the opening for the investment banker and for the bond house.

All of these fields are now filled in a measure, but each half decade will show wider and larger fields which will take more men and more capital to fill. It is probable that we are on the eve of a considerable change in the banking business, which will grow out of the establishment of a national reserve association or a central bank or an institution by whatever name it may please Congress to call it, which will act as a main reservoir for the gold reserve of the nation. When I say eve, I do so in the sense in which a historian might use the word, having in mind a day which covers a considerable period of time, for there is no immediate prospect that Congress will pass the needed legislation. In spite of the fact that the currency commission was non-partisan in its character, and that the work of the commission, as embodied in the bill creating a national reserve association, shows the most scrupulous care to keep the association free from either political or speculative control, the demagogues in both of the great political parties cannot resist the easy opportunity to make political capital out of a subject that is no more political in its nature than is the multiplication table.

I think the principal change to follow the establishment of a central reserve association will be a more careful segregation of commercial banking and investment banking. Whether the idea of the department store bank in which the same institution conducts a commercial business, a savings business and an investment business, proves successful or not, does not matter. The important point is that, whether conducted by separate banks or by one bank, the essential difference of each must be recognized and each form of liability must have its appropriate investment. Particularly in the West it is true that a large proportion of the assets in which commercial deposits are invested are fixed instead of being liquid in character. In a new country requiring roads, buildings and permanent improvements of all kinds, yet having but little capital seeking permanent investment, it is almost inevitable that this should be the case. As capital increases in the banks with the recurrent harvests and sale of produce, in the absence of safe short time investments, it is apt to be placed in loans which are based, more or less, on real estate, even if not in form mortgage loans. It is a well established principle that only funds repayable after notice, and funds that from their nature will not be required by the owners for a considerable time, should be put into fixed investments. The gradually increasing savings accounts and the building loan go together as naturally as does the suddenly made commercial deposit with a ninety-day or a four-month note.

The increasing investment by the western banks, in what we have come to call commercial paper, is a step in the right direction, for it gives them an asset that is paid when due without disturbance of local finances. That there are possibilities of loss in connection with such loans we all recognize, but in diversifying the loans the probability of great loss is lessened, and the bank in the most remote quarter of the country obtains an asset that is negotiable in any of the commercial centers. The bill authorizing the national reserve association not only makes such assets a necessity, but by giving banks the right to accept time drafts it leaves the way open for the establishment of a discount market where the highest grade of paper can always be sold at a price; a price that will vary with the supply of, and demand for, capital, but a market that is always open. When this has been achieved, and not till then, will the commercial interests of the country be adequately financed; and when I say commercial interests, I mean not only the merchandising interests, but the manufacturing interests and the agricultural interests; in fact, all the great industries which give employment to labor. Such an apparently remote subject thus comes home to all of us throughout the length and breadth of the land.

It is instructive to note that about all we can ever expect of legislation is the removal of artificial restrictions which have been placed by law on the natural development of economic forces. Had the business of banking been unregulated by law, these problems would have been already worked out to a satisfactory solution. The only regulation that is really needed is an adequate and non-technical enforcement of the laws against grand and petty larceny. An excellent example of the way in which banking business, when unrestrained, adapts itself to commercial needs is found in the evolution of the check system which, in the United States, has reached a development greater than in any other country, and which had helped to supplement deficient capital and has made it more responsive to varying demands.

The troubles of the bankers in this country have not all been due to the perversity of depositors, and to the ignorance of legislators; many of them have come from the inexperience and lack of training of the bankers themselves. There was much excuse for such defects when the country storekeeper by force of circumstances became the banker, and let me say that many of them have become most excellent bankers; prudent, cautious and sagacious. But the occasions that brought inexperienced and untrained men into the banking business have gone never to return, and with them the excuses must go also. Now, more than ever, the need is for trained men; men who know the principles and the ethics of banking, those fundamentals which precede and in the end must supplement, if not supersede, law. The American Institute of Banking gives all of you an opportunity to become grounded in these principles and with opportunity comes responsibility. The excuse of ignorance is no longer good, for the way to knowledge is open.

The ideal that the young banker must keep before him is to so administer the trust committed to his charge that the bank will help the community to grow and prosper, to the end that the community will help the bank to grow and prosper, and it can be done only by showing the depositors that their interests and those of the bank are identical. If this is your ideal, the West wants you and holds for you great possibilities of success, not always, it may be, great in point of money return, but great in the satisfaction that is the reward of needed work well done.

THE OLD AND THE NEW

BY A. RODMAN

The quiet little village of Sheldon lies sprawled out on the flat bosom of Mother Earth in an agricultural district where crop failures are unknown. Here corn is king, and year after year the golden harvest is gathered in such abundance that the word poverty is not in their dictionary, and the community is at peace with all the world.

Sheldon has enjoyed the privilege of having two banks for many years, and both have been prosperous. Neither one had treated itself to any improvements for so long that they simply got into the habit of being slouchy in appearance without being conscious of it.

Mr. Snow, the cashier of one of these banks, lived in a home in which he took great pride. He kept his grounds in fine condition, and had most of the city conveniences, some of them obtained at great expense. He had the nicer banking quarters of the two, but one morning upon coming into the old bank an inspiration struck him, the result of which was that the writer of this story was sent for and the bank remodeled and refitted and decorated in what was considered an extravagant manner.

But the public liked the idea.

They got just as good treatment as before, were not charged any higher rates of interest, and, naturally enough, business grew and the cost of the improvement became a good investment.

Arthur Bishop was the bookkeeper in this bank, and it was not long after this that he got an inspiration. He would start a new bank somewhere, fix it up in fine style, and become a cashier instead of a mere bookkeeper—"a cog in a wheel," as he put it. But where could he start a bank? There didn't seem to be any place where another bank could start with any assurance of success.

But the old saw says: "Where there's a will there's a way." (The cynic paraphrases it into "Where there's a will there's a lawsuit.") The opportunity lay right at his door, and when he discovered it he made all possible haste, for it seemed to be staring everybody in the face.

The village of Kentland was almost a twin to Sheldon, and only seven miles away. The one distinctive difference lay in the fact that it had but one bank, which had been "monarch of all it surveyed," financially at least, for lo, these many years.

Of course, it was rich,—and not a few said it was haughty and arbitrary and not so obliging as it ought to be, and here was Bishop's opportunity, although those whom he first approached on the subject gasped at the very audacity of starting another bank. But Bishop had his convictions. He knew where he could get practical ideas for the banking plant, and before his building was started the old bank began to realize how shabby their quarters were, and in order to head off these nervy fellows who dared such a piece of affrontery they called in an architect widely experienced in general practice, but who had never built a bank. Plans were drawn and practically accepted when the designer of the new bank happened to drop into the old bank (at Bishop's suggestion!). But his offer to make plans for them was promptly declined, for two alleged very good reasons, the first being that they already had very good plans, and also for the best reason of the two, to wit: He had the other bank, and they didn't propose having their bank just like the other one! A single statement, however, showed the utter fallacy of their argument, and in a couple of hours preliminary sketches were made and accepted, and the bank was built and equipped accordingly.

What became of the new bank? Well, this is just what happened to it: By the end of the first six months they had $100,000 on deposit! And yet here was a community where there was no room for another bank.

No, the old bank didn't go out of business; they kept right on, and while the other bank was scurrying around for depositors the old bank managed to do a little scurrying too, and succeeded in annexing about $25,000. Not so bad for what had always been looked upon as a one-bank-town.

But if you would see those two banks, and the remodeled one where Bishop was before, you would understand what created the new business. Both banking plants are up-to-the minute in every detail, and being such inspire the confidence of the community, and without confidence there would be no banks.

EXPORTS OF AMERICAN AUTOMOBILES IN THE FISCAL YEAR 1912

Thirty million dollars' worth of American automobiles found markets abroad last year, against less than one million dollars' worth ten years ago. Figures just completed by the Division of Statistics of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show that the exports of automobiles to foreign countries in the fiscal year 1912 were valued at twenty-one and one-half million dollars, and of parts thereof, including tires, six and three-quarter million dollars. If to this were added the shipments to Hawaii and Porto Rico, we get for the year's sales of American automobiles outside of continental United States a round thirty million dollars, since the value of automobiles and parts thereof sent to Porto Rico was nearly one million dollars and to the Hawaiian Islands a little over one million dollars. The total number of machines exported to foreign countries was 21,757, valued at $21,550,139, averaging slightly less than $1,000 each; while those to the noncontiguous territory were higher, averaging $1,600 each. The export price of American automobiles in 1912 averaged less than in any earlier year in the history of the export trade. The average for 1912, dividing the total number of machines exported into stated value, was $990 each, against $1,100 in 1911, $1,380 in 1910, $1,700 in 1909, and $1,880 in 1908.

On the import side, the automobiles imported last year amounted to but about two million dollars in value, against more than four million in 1907. The average import value of the automobiles brought into the country last year was $2,216 each, against $2,138 in 1911, $1,936 in 1910, $1,788 in 1909 and $2,392 in 1908. Thus the export price of American machines has fallen from $1,880 in 1908 to $990 in 1912, while the import price of foreign automobiles entering the country has only fallen from $2,392 in 1908 to $2,216 in 1912, the reduction in price on the export side being 47 per cent, and on the import side but 8 per cent.

Even the remarkable growth in the exports of American automobiles noted above has not kept pace with the growth in production at home, since the census of 1900 showed the value of automobiles manufactured in the United States in 1899 at $4,748,000, while that of 1910 showed $249,202,000 as the value manufactured in 1909. The wages paid in the automobile industry, as shown by the census report, aggregated $1,321,000 in 1899 and $48,694,000 in 1909; the capital employed in the industry in 1899, $5,769,000 and in 1909, $173,837,000; and the number of wage earners employed, in 1899, 2,241, and in 1909, 75,721.

English-speaking people are the chief purchasers of American automobiles. Of the 21,757 exported in 1912, 6,288 went to Canada, 5,716 to the United Kingdom, and 3,625 to Australia and New Zealand; the next largest number, 1,611, being credited to South America, while European countries other than the United Kingdom took 2,296. Of the 963 automobiles imported into the country in the fiscal year 1912, 401 were from France, 188 from the United Kingdom, 131 from Italy, 116 from Germany, and 127 from all other countries.

NEW TEXAS BANK

The Planters State Bank at Harlingen, Texas, opened for business last week in temporary quarters. The managers are on a trade for a permanent location. Stock will now be offered for sale to local purchasers. The Planters starts out under the most favorable auspices, with a capital of $10,000. The institution was incorporated by A. B. Slack, I. B. McFarland, E. P. Gregg, E. J. Yates and B. H. McFarland. Mr. Slack is president of the bank and I. B. McFarland cashier.

The phenomenal growth of Harlingen in the past year has made another bank necessary to handle the city's constantly increasing financial business.

E. J. Armstrong has been elected cashier of the Security State Bank, Terry, Mont.

Books on Banking, Finance and Economics

Credit. By J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, of the Department of Political Economy, University of Chicago. Postpaid, 53c.

The nature of credit and its effect on prices have long been a subject of disagreement among economists. Its basis is commonly assumed to be money or bank reserves.

Essentials of Business Law. By FRANCIS M. BURDICK, LL. D., Professor of Law in Columbia University. 12mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

This book shows how the rules of law governing the commonest business transactions have been developed, and it tells what they are to-day. Technical law terms have been discarded as far as possible, and when they are used they are so explained and illustrated as to be easily understood. The principles of law are simplified and expressed in clear, lucid everyday speech.

Foreign Exchange. Tables converting foreign money into United States money, and United States money into foreign money at all commercial rates of exchange used in financial transactions between the United States and foreign countries. All about foreign exchange, including various forms of foreign commercial paper and terms, abbreviations, etc. For banks, bankers, steamship agents, importers, exporters and manufacturers. Cloth, $5.00.

Government Regulation of Railway Rates. By HUGO R. MEYER. A Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Postpaid, $1.60 net.

Investment Bonds. By F. LOWNHAUPT. Postpaid, $1.90. Prospective investors who wish to make advantageous use of their money will do well to take notice of this volume. The author does not theorize, but tells only plain facts of the relation of the bond to its issuing corporation, and of the general investment aspect of the instrument.

Money and Credit. By WILBUR ALDRICH. Postpaid, $1.37. This volume contains much valuable information and much sound discussion on money and credit.

The Banking and Currency Problems in the United States. By VICTOR MORAWETZ. The author takes up the problem of the national monetary commission, appointed by congress, and discusses the means of providing a permanent safeguard against money stringencies and panics. Postpaid, $1.10.

The Principles of Money and Banking. By CHARLES A. CONANT. It is a new and complete exposition of its subject. Two volumes. Postpaid, $4.25.

The Pitfalls of Speculation. By THOMAS GIBSON. Postpaid, $1.20.

A book dealing exclusively with marginal speculation, and analyzing in a clear and simple manner the causes of failure in speculation, with a suggestion as to the remedies.

The Investors' Catechism. By M. M. REYNOLDS. Cloth, by mail, $1.10.

"Investors' Catechism." Contains all that is essential for the beginner to know, and opens the way for a thorough study of the whole subject of investment. The author has for the sake of clearness and simplicity adopted a catechetical style which is somewhat novel in this sort of literature.

special. He will be seated with A. V. Lane, wife and daughter of Dallas, Texas. Mr. Forbes began his banking career in Mr. Lane's bank. He has been very active in establishing a new country club at St. Joseph and in putting up a reform city ticket, which was needed quite badly. St. Joseph, like many other cities where certain fixed interests have been allowed to gain control, had fallen into a rut. The awakening has been very beneficial.

THE Bank of Rogers, one of the oldest financial institutions in northwest Arkansas, has been incorporated with a capital of $150,000. It was founded in 1883. Whether or not the new institution has taken out a charter for a sawmill or a leather factory, or some other form of corporation than banking, is not known at present. There is not any opportunity of taking out a bank charter in that state as yet.

MISSOURI as usual has made good. She has reached a membership of 500 in the American Bankers Association and thus will qualify A. D. Buckner of Paris as a member of the executive council at Detroit.

SECRETARY KEYSER gives the credit for this achievement primarily to the persistent efforts of J. S. Calfee of St. Louis and C. G. Hutcheson of Kansas City. Of course they were assisted by other bankers in the state, for it is the habit of the membership of the Missouri Bankers Association to co-operate.

THIS same "stunt" could have been pulled off in Illinois, most likely, under the same energetic system employed in Missouri. Illinois has needed but a few members for some time to qualify another member of council. Probably after the Peoria convention the association may take on a new lease of life.

SO we are to have another "Round-Robin" at Detroit, directed as usual at the Journal published at 5 Nassau St., New York City, by the A. B. A. That important publication is charged with creating improper competition with other financial papers.

THE original "Round-Robin" was filed at the Briarcliff meeting of the council, but was passed over to Detroit for further consideration. The signers of the latest one are those who signed the first one, and with few important exceptions include most of the financial and banking papers published in New York City. The new declaration claims that not one additional member of the A. B. A. ever has been gained by the publication of the Journal; that it costs too much and that the present policy of running it is all wrong.

OUT West the Journal occupies a very high position with the members of council, with the membership of the American Bankers Association and with the membership of the American Institute of Banking. Extended inquiry among users of the Journal gives it a very high rank as a distributor of information tending to prevent crimes against banks and toward the detection of criminals.

SOME persons think that the New York papers which are so violently opposed to the Journal and its publication by the American Bankers Association do not get a clear view of the situation owing to their environment.

THE Mechanics-American National of St. Louis gets out one of the very best monthly financial letters issued by any bank in the Middle West. It can be had free of charge regularly by those who apply for it. The September 2d issue points out a considerable expansion of business in St. Louis territory, and states that for a number of years the trade outlook at this date has not been nearly so encouraging as it is at the present time.

SECRETARY WILLIAM J. HENRY of New York has enclosed to all of his members a copy of "Chapter 340," which relates to borrowers who attempt to obtain property or credit by the use of false statements. Other references to this new law will be found elsewhere in this issue.

SECRETARY ARCH B. DAVIS has sent out invitations for the twentieth annual convention of the Kentucky Bankers Association to be held at the Henry Watterson Hotel, Louisville, October 2d and 3d. Bankers are invited.

AMONG the speakers will be C. R. McKay, manager of the transit department of the First National of Chicago. In addition to Mr. McKay there will be a number of other speakers, most of whom will represent member-banks within the state.

MAGIC moving picture post cards showing "our next president" are being sent out by the Blackhawk National of Waterloo, Ia. They are very clever.

STOCKYARDS NATIONAL at Fort Worth is using a fine, quadruple mounted calendar with fine landscape in soft, low tones, which is very effective.

"SPIRIT, Purpose and Method of Saving Money" is a little booklet of most unusual merit issued by the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, of Winston-Salem, N. C. It is so good that it is being attributed to the redoubtable Col. Fries himself, head of the bank and of the big trust company section, A. B. A.

QUITE a kick has been filed because John R. Washburn appears to be down for both first and second calls at the Banquet-on-Wheels. Fact is, J. R. was holding one of the seats for an out-of-town correspondent.

EDENS, after a month on the plains, is back on the job. He even looks like a farmer now and certainly he talks like one.

TWENTY-ONE reservations for Nebraska on the big special to Detroit. Pretty good work shown by Secretary Hughes.

HOW can you beat Iowa? R. E. Gamble, who travels out for the Drovers, discovered a bank out there which he thinks is entitled to the record.

DONAHUE SAVINGS is at Donahue, a town of only forty-seven inhabitants, and has deposits of $287,654.28, on a capital and surplus of $30,316. The eight officers and directors include nearly every male inhabitant of suitable age. Frank Keppy is president and Frank Keppy, Jr., is cashier. All the others appear to be German-Americans.

THE ratio is about $6,120 in deposits to each inhabitant and if you know of anything to beat it, let us know.

THEN there's the Blue Grass Savings, suburban to Davenport, with $320,900.36 in deposits and only 250 population, counting everything in sight. The capital is $25,000 with surplus of $20,166.43. Can any other state enter the prosperity competition with Iowa?

IT is doubted if any foreign country can show any equally small communities which can beat American small towns in thrift and saving.

MOST of those who are opposing bank supervision in Illinois and who are going to Detroit will go by boat via Mackinac. "Judge" Montgomery, vice-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, has been spending the summer there and he and the secretary have organized a "conference" trip. Do you get the idea?

THE "situation" in Illinois remains "peculiar" and a correct solution of the problem still is up to the young progressives, and up hard.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, A GROWING CENTER

Phoenix, Arizona, has been making rapid strides of late years. It is the capital of the new state of Arizona and its busiest city. The population is about 18,000, to which are added about 3,000 visitors during the winter months. The city has modern improvements; electric lights, car service, sewer system, water supply, paved streets and cement sidewalks. Substantial growth is shown by the increase in the postoffice business, which, during the year ending June 30, 1912, amounted to $84,890.23, an increase over the previous year of $10,229.23. Maricopa county, Arizona, has a total assessed valuation of $28,007,800, a gain of $7,000,000 over last year. This figure does not include county or state property, or school lands or buildings. Land under cultivation covers 164,191 acres with an assessed valuation of $7,968,572. On June 14, 1912, the four banks in Phoenix had total resources of $7,094,793.29; in April, 1911, the resources amounted to $5,965,569.33. The strength of the financial institutions of Phoenix is well established throughout the country. During the panic period of 1907 and 1908 its banks paid cash. It is estimated that at the present time an average of two houses per day are being built in the city. A year ago the estimate was a house and a half per day. Over 150 houses are in the course of construction at the present time. The federal building rapidly is approaching completion, and plans are being laid for an eight-story office building. Plans for further utilizing power possibilities of the Salt River project are being considered by Reclamation and Water Users Association officials. Offers to take 10,000 H. P. at a price of $400,000 have been received from important mining companies, and the contract now is under advisement. The Salt River project will develop a total of 27,000 H. P. when all sites are utilized. Big revenue will result from power features and be applied on cost of reclamation works.

President—Charles G. Huttig, St. Louis.

Vice-President — Arthur Reynolds, Des Moines.

The thirty-eighth annual convention of the American Bankers Association held in Detroit this week was one of the most successful ever held in the history of that sterling organization. The sessions of the A. B. A. proper were held in the Detroit Opera House on Tuesday and Friday, and were presided over in an able and dignified manner by William Livingstone, president of the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit. The various sections into which the association is divided held separate sessions on Wednesday and Thursday mornings in the Hotel Ponchartrain, presided over by their respective presidents. A detailed account of the proceedings of these various meetings will be found elsewhere in this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER.

The gathering resembled in every respect a national political convention. In solid rows in the parquet of the theatre sat the accredited delegates. In the balcony were the guests of the delegates, the majority of them wives and daughters. Wives and other relatives of the officers of the association were given seats in the boxes. The delegates were seated according to states, each section being indicated by blue silk banners, with the names of the respective states lettered in gold.

In the center of the stage sat President Livingstone. At his left was Governor Osborn, and at the right Col. Robert J. Lowry, of the Lowry National at Atlanta, an ex-president of the association, often referred to as the "grand old man" of the convention. Governor Osborn, in one of his characteristic speeches, extended the welcome to the visitors and delegates on behalf of the state, mystifying his auditors with the large number of unusual words which he handed out. He wound up by drawing a word picture of the morning sun lighting up the lands and waters of Michigan, and the ebony night settling down over all this expanse, and assured the bankers that while they were there it was all their own Michigan. In the absence of Mayor Thompson, Alderman John C. Lodge gracefully extended the welcome on behalf of the city. Other addresses of welcome were delivered by George H. Russel, president of the Detroit Clearing House, an ex-president of the association, and Homer Warren, president of the Detroit Board of Commerce. Col. Lowry delivered the response. He recalled the 1897 convention in Detroit over which he presided, and feelingly spoke of the entertainment that year. He declared that Detroit hospitality was equalled only by that of his own city.

A resolution was adopted by the convention on Tuesday afternoon, the spirit of which is that agitation for national banking and currency reform will be suspended except in co-operation with other organizations and individuals in devising a more efficient and satisfactory financial system. This resolution was the result of the discouraging report presented by the currency commission of the association. The report pointed out that there is very little hope for obtaining remedial legislation by the short congress which convenes this fall, and it is believed that it will be necessary to look to the new national administration for the desired reform. The resolution was presented by Festus J. Wade, a member of the currency commission, and president of the Mechanics Union Trust Company of St. Louis.

William Livingstone, the retiring head of the A. B. A., did much to increase the prestige and usefulness of the association during his term of office. His marked executive ability and efficiency have been potential factors in the growth and development of the organization.

Charles H. Huttig, the incoming president, is one of the most popular members of the association. His forcefulness and aggressiveness admirably equip him to guide the destinies of one of the strongest and most influential organizations in the world.

At the Tuesday session, John F. Seely, president of the Commercial Savings Bank at Caro, Mich., delivered an appeal for a new form of bank note which he believes will save incalculable time in counting. He proposed denominational numbers on the four corners of the face of the note only, printing the back in fine script, thus forcing the depositor to arrange the currency himself before handing it to the teller. He believes that while there is so much talk prevalent about the conservation of our natural resources, it might be advisable to pay a little attention to the conservation of our time.

Senator Charles E. Townsend of Michigan failed to put in an appearance at the first day's session. President Livingstone stated that no reply had been made to the invitation of the association. This session developed a number of reports on subjects vital to the interests of the banking fraternity. Thornton Cooke of Kansas City, reporting for the committee on express companies and money orders, told of the increasing demand for the travelers' checks of the American Bankers Association, and sharply criticized the express companies for monopolizing a large share of this business, which rightfully belongs to the banks. He pointed out the fact that express companies, while not operating under any kind of supervision or inspection, are doing a large banking business in competition with banks which are under the strictest control of the state and national governments.

Andrew J. Frame's resolution providing that an amendment to the constitution be adopted, the purpose of which was prohibiting ex-presidents of the association from membership ex-officio in the council until three years after their terms as president have expired, was not adopted. Secretary Farnsworth, after reading the resolution, stated that the council had considered it and recommended that it not be adopted. He said that plans were under way for a revision of the constitution. Mr. Frame then made a motion that no action be taken on the resolution until after the committee on revision had made its report. This was carried and a committee appointed to revise the constitution and report

CONVENTION notes:

VERY first on the ground was Louis G. Kaufman, president of the Chatham and Phenix National, New York. L. G. was president of the Michigan Bankers Association once—he was quite a youngster at the time.

SOME of them haven't quite forgiven him yet. His bank building operations in New York have justified even the predictions of his warmest friends—that he would make good even in Wall Street.

MR. KAUFMAN is the pioneer in the "Banking by Mail," now so popular and successful in many cities. He started it in Marquette and soon ran a fixedly prosperous bank with $600,000 deposits up to a growingly prosperous bank with two millions.

THE day he landed in New York he picked up a coin on the ferry boat. The date of the coin was the date of his birth—1874—and he kept it for luck.

JOHN R. NOEL of the Northwest State Bank, one of the most prosperous of the small banks in Chicago, has a mascot coin also. Seven years ago he called at THE CHICAGO BANKER office.

HE wanted information as to recently formed banks which had succeeded and to ask the status of the private banks. When he left, he headed for a new state bank and on the way found a coin. It decided him to incorporate, and his bank has succeeded amazingly.

DR. NOEL has never left the coin at home one day since. It is his lucky emblem.

FO. WATTS was one of the early birds, and likewise Oliver C. Fuller. They stole a march on their brother bankers and had an extra day's practice on the Country Club's links for the Bankers' Tournament.

JA. LEWIS of St. Louis did the same. He began by clipping ten strokes per round from his practice round—hence, must have started in three figures or have reached a record score.

WM. O. JONES, New York, and E. J. Curtin and wife of Iowa, went up to Mt. Clemens after the convention for a few days at the baths. The excessive heat during the convention week caused quite a longing for evening boat rides in lieu of the formal entertainments.

CHARLES H. HUTTIG came in on Monday morning looking as brown and hard as an Adirondack guide.

HE said he hadn't been within sight of civilization for so long that he had to get Mrs. Huttig to trim his hair—and it was a good job, too.

WERE they glad to see him? A bull moose demonstration wasn't in it with President Huttig.

IT is doubted if in the annals of banking a man has reached such a stage of popularity

WEST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 61 per cent. Population 54 per cent.

EAST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 15 per cent. Population 12½ per cent.

¶ If your business is increasing the new business of your bank, your field (the field of new accounts) is in the territory covered like a blanket by THE CHICAGO BANKER. The rest is obvious.

with his fellow bankers. His intense physical affliction and his plucky fight only revealed new qualities to them and furnished additional proofs that they had estimated him correctly from the start.

EST. ELMO LEWIS and the Burroughs people sent a strip of tickets on the street cars to every one, but to get a "card" to a club was like giving a guaranty title to a post-office site.

OF course, if no one but real bankers ever registered or got "books" at the conventions, it could be different.

PRESIDENT LIVINGSTONE was the happiest man on the straits. Registration on the first day (Sunday) ran up above a thousand, and the big Banquet Special with its 208 bankers from Chicago and the West was not included.

COL. FARNSWORTH estimated the attendance at 4,000 early in the week and saw the figures finally exceeded.

MCPHERSON was there with his Bankers Encyclopedia for September. There were others in Mack's line there from New York with a grouch, but they didn't get very far. McPherson is the Sunny Jim of the professionals.

THE new round-robin was a dead duck of a bird from the very start. Members of council are not the sort to try to limit the initiative of a splendid executive to satisfy the wailings of the disappointed ex-poachers. Col. Fred. may be "short" of perfect but he's a whale among minnows when the round-robinners are mentioned.

ABOVE is not personal, for the names of the signers were kept a secret from yours truly.

R. L. RINAMAN was over from St. Louis. The weather was cool to him, J. W. Hoopes and E. F. Swinney—by comparison.

THE Frame amendment to the constitution did not last as long when it got to the committee as a snowball would have in—in the grill room.

HE wanted to cut off the ex-presidents from the council and to do other things not provided for in the well digested plan for changing the rotation in office plan of electing the president and vice-president. The McNider amendment was considered quite drastic enough. Even the stand-patters thought the sage of Mason City "had seen his duty and done it" well.

CHAPMAN'S agricultural committee meeting was bigger and more active than many a section session has been. Even Breckinridge Jones got into the discussion but Festus J. wasn't there so there only was a skirmish.

BANKERS from every state represented at Detroit were there and the cause took on real shape and character. Nearly every one present engaged in the discussion with earnestness and interest.

ON the Banquet Special over from Chicago were fifty-three ladies. The Detroit program was just to their liking—something doing every day, from Sunday to Saturday.

W. G. EDENS was secretary of the agricultural sessions of the committee, and reported briefly on his recent participation as delegate and program speaker to the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress at Salt Lake.

GEORGE ORDE lost his rabbit foot and failed to connect with the big special at Chicago. Even at that his hoodoo had him locoed only four minutes.

JK. OTTLEY, chairman of the executive committee, clearing house section, was early on the ground and was a visitor at the grounds of the beautiful Country Club. On some of his visits he said he would have needed help to do justice to the lavish entertainment provided for him.

JOSEPH WAGNER, JR., just returned from Europe, was one of the strong delegation from Pennsylvania. Others were Wm. A. Law, R. E. James and W. K. Lloyd.

EARL REYNOLDS, cashier of the Peoples, Chicago, was there and kept closely in touch with his distinguished father, head of the big Continental and Commercial National of Chicago. "G. M." is very proud of his boy, who has made good in other banks than his own and on his own responsibility.

E. J. BOWMAN of Anaconda and W. D. Vincent of Spokane did some splendid team work at the social functions. P. C. Kauffman

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO

Invites the accounts of banks and bankers

The record of forty-nine years' consistent, conservative banking; the increase of capital and surplus to $20,000,000 and the growth of deposits to over $123,000,000, together with the service and facilities afforded, make this invitation worthy of careful consideration.

President William Livingstone at Detroit Delivers annual address, outlining activities of association during the past year

Fifteen years ago Detroit had the pleasure of entertaining the American Bankers Association, and those of you who attended the convention of 1897 remember that the association at that time was truly in its infancy; its membership numbering but 2,813, and its only adjunct the trust company section, which was then just one year old. It affords me the greatest pleasure to congratulate you to-day on the present organization, with its membership of over 13,300—representing a net increase during the past year of over 1,200, the largest increase in any one year since organizing, its various sections, departments and committees all working for the furtherance of the banking and business interests and for uniformity of laws in all of the states.

Trust Company Section

The trust company section, whose membership now embraces about two-thirds of the largest and most progressive trust companies of the United States, is on the alert at all times to improve conditions and facilities for the performing of the duties of the various institutions doing a trust company business; its book of trust company forms, compiled by the secretary, P. S. Babcock, widely is used by members of the section.

Savings Bank Section

The savings bank section is the largest section in point of membership in banks in the association. This section was successfully launched in 1902, and has been piloted by very able officers during its entire history. Too much credit cannot be given the late William Hanhart, who, as secretary, carefully guided its activities, and the work started by him has been carried on creditably by his successor, W. H. Kniffin, Jr., and since his resignation, by E. G. McWilliam. Not only has the section been active in securing new members, but also along various lines from which that membership has benefited. Perhaps one of the most important features of their work has been the campaign of education among the people of the United States on saving and thrift, and a continuation of the work toward fostering school savings banks.

Clearing House Section

The clearing house section, the youngest of the three larger sections, is by no means the least important. Its growth since the first conference of clearing houses in St. Louis in 1896, has been rapid, indeed, and at the last convention held in New Orleans, the section deemed it advisable to place a secretary in charge who could devote all of his time to this feature. The executive officers have been actively engaged in directing and promoting the work laid out by the section. The universal numerical system has been adopted by more than seven thousand banks according to actual reports in the secretary's office. Many other banks have been taken care of by their correspondents and no record has been furnished the office of these. Mr. Wolfe, the secretary, is untiring in his efforts along this line, and he has been attending chapter meetings of the American Institute of Banking and establishing committees among chapter members whose duty it is to see that all checks passing through their banks bear the transit numbers, for in order to make the plan as valuable to the banks as it should be, all checks and drafts should bear these clearing house numbers.

In the clearing house section seventeen cities now have a special clearing house examiner who is solely under the direction and control of the clearing house committee, and the reports from all of these cities show that the system is most satisfactory and that very beneficial results have been obtained, and all strongly endorse the system. Also not least in its work is the endeavor of the section to secure uniformity in clearing reports.

American Institute of Banking

The American Institute of Banking section has seventy-five chapters, including one in Cuba and one in Hawaii, with a total membership of over 12,000. With commendable conservatism, the Institute consistently has resisted the temptation to sacrifice quality to quantity in extending its membership, and any former misgivings that the organization might degenerate into a labor organization or a circle of social clubs have vanished. Sound and systematic educational work along orthodox lines seems to be the established policy of Institute management, and beneficial results are manifest in the improvement of banking methods in chapter cities. In fact, the success of chapters in large cities has created the erroneous impression that the Institute is solely a city proposition, and correspondence instruction among country bankers has not thus far received the consideration that it deserves. The Journal-Bulletin is not only an indispensable agency in Institute work but serves the purpose of an interchange of information between employers and employees regarding the activities of all and thereby promotes the vocational harmony for which the banking business is justly noted. The executive council of the Institute in whom its government is vested is composed of young bankers of exceptional capacity and conservatism, who are creditable alike to the membership whom they represent and to the American Bankers Association of which the Institute is an important section. George E. Allen, educational director, has been indefatigable in this work and is entitled to much credit for what has been accomplished.

the parent organization is the various state associations, through their secretaries, in what is known as the state secretaries section. This section has aided the association very materially in increasing its membership, in addition to many other factors which make for the good of the organization. Each has its field of labor, officered by able, diligent, courteous and congenial men with whom it is a pleasure to associate and to work, and each conscientiously carrying on his own prescribed duties.

Committees

It must be clearly understood, however, that while the association is very much indebted to the work of its sections, and without detracting in any way from the great credit to which they are entitled in their various capacities, it also has received very valuable assistance from its standing committees, which always have been active and energetic as occasion has demanded.

Bills of Lading Committee

The bills of lading committee, appointed seven years ago for improving the form of bills of lading and obtaining legislation which would make these documents a better security for the banker, has been one of the most active and insistent of the association's committees; and while it has not met with ultimate success, results are gradually being obtained, through the indefatigable efforts on the part of the committee. During its existence, the bills of lading committee has seen a uniform bill of lading in two forms for order and straight shipments recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission and adopted generally by the railroads; it has seen the uniform bills of lading act placed on the statute books of ten states; and it has seen a special bills of lading statute to safeguard these documents, framed by the general counsel of this association, enacted in four states prior to the time when the uniform bills of lading act was drafted. Among other great benefits of these laws is the providing of responsibility by the carrier for the act of his agent in issuing a bill of lading without receipt of the goods, which responsibility does not exist under the common law.

During the entire time of the existence of the committee, the first four years under the leadership of Ex-President L. E. Pierson, as chairman, and the past three years under the able direction of Clay H. Hollister, an active campaign has been carried on for the adoption of similar legislation by congress. In the sixty-first congress, in June, 1910, the Stevens bill, advocated by this association, was passed by an almost unanimous majority in the house, but failed in the senate. In the sixty-second congress, the campaign has been vigorously urged. Three hearings were held last winter by the senate committee on interstate commerce at which was considered both the Stevens bill and the Pomcrene bill, which is the state uniform bills of lading act adapted for federal enactment. On August 21st, the senate passed the Pomerene bill unanimously and it now goes to the house. As your president was a charter member of this committee, and served on same for four years, and, therefore, fully realizes its great importance, I cannot impress upon you too strongly the urgent need of every member lending his most active support to the furtherance of this legislation at the short session of congress next winter so that it will not be necessary to wait another congress to obtain a federal law governing all bills of lading used in interstate and foreign commerce. It was the great losses to the banks and commission men which led to the appointment of this committee. These losses, which run into the millions of dollars, have continued along through recent years.

Committee on Agricultural and Financial Development and Education

And now we come to the newest departure of the association—the committee on agricultural and financial development and education, appointed at the New Orleans convention.

Although many bankers realize that their institutions greatly are dependent on the farms for their success, it was not until Joseph Chapman, Jr., brought the matter forcibly before the association that they had a true conception of its importance, and deemed it within their province and really their duty to take some action looking toward the improvement of agricultural conditions.

It is interesting to note the progress made in this movement, by a comparison of its two annual meetings. At the first session, held last year, only seven states were represented. At the second annual meeting held at Minneapolis and St. Paul, August 7th and 8th, twenty-four states were represented. At last year's meeting the banker and educators who came to address the bankers, made up the conference; this year the field of education from university to common school sent in its undelimited men and women and the character of the gathering reflected the scope of influence of the first conference. Men from the department of agriculture at Washington and from the agricultural and vocational schools of many states were present as listeners. At the second annual conference the best authorities in the United States addressed the delegates, and the meeting was a most enthusiastic one, the proceedings of which were to be published immediately. The bankers are just beginning to become interested and to realize the great importance of this movement and the fact that agriculture is the basis of all wealth, and have been instrumental in a number of states in bringing about an agreeable change in educational institutions.

Protective Committee

The very able committee handling this work has devoted a large amount of valuable time and attention to it, but as the service is of necessity secret, it is impossible to give the members of the committee the credit to which they are entitled. I have but to call your attention to the large membership and the comparatively few depredations on members of the association, and to the expeditious manner in which all cases are cared for to demonstrate this. This department is also constantly increasing its facilities for quick detection of criminals, and its work in connection therewith is systematically dispatched. Each successive year has also demonstrated the fact that the American Bankers Association in its vigorous prosecution of criminals who prey on its members, constantly is becoming a greater deterrent to criminals.

Short Term Securities

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations.

Such securities, particularly of the larger issues, also usually command a ready market and are not subject to extreme fluctuations in price.

Our recent booklet, "Short Term Securities," met with so favorable a reception that we have been prompted to issue a second edition. This contains brief descriptions of current issues, brought down to June, 1912. We will furnish copies on request.

Administrative Committee

The members of your administrative committee in addition to holding several meetings in an advisory capacity to the general secretary in the interim between council meetings, have attended a number of state bankers associations conventions in an endeavor to impress upon the members of such associations the value of affiliation with the parent organization.

Law Committee

Outside of its regular routine work, this committee has spent a large amount of time and energy on the broad question of segregation of savings from commercial deposits in banks and trust companies and has held hearings in Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Paul, Des Moines, St. Louis, New Orleans, New York and Louisville on this question. Through the medium of these hearings and through investigations in other states, the committee covered quite fully conditions in twenty-four states holding a majority of the entire savings deposits of the country. After making these personal investigations, the committee prepared a statement of conditions in these states, adding a summary of the argument for and against the special investment and segregation of savings deposits, which was sent to every member of the association, together with a question-sheet designed to ascertain whether the members of the association were in favor of the further extension of the principle. In all, 3,119 banks responded, of which 1,447 were favorable and 1,489 were adverse, from which it would appear that sentiment among the members of the association is about evenly divided on this subject. Their report has been printed in pamphlet form and may be had from the general secretary. As Michigan is the home of segregation, any members desiring information on the actual and practical workings of segregation can get the most complete information from the state banks of Detroit and other Michigan cities.

Currency Commission

Your currency commission, along with the officers of the association, were called into conference with the National Monetary Commission in Washington on March 28, 1911, to consider Senator Aldrich's suggestions for monetary legislation. At a meeting of the commission held before the conference, it unanimously was agreed that the plan suggested by Senator Aldrich was founded on correct principles; that it is admirably adapted to present conditions, and that it will correct existing defects in our national banking system. That with further developments in some of its details it would be made thoroughly practicable. Later our commission discussed every feature of the plan, giving their reasons for the suggestions made and conclusions arrived at. At a later date our recommendations generally were adopted in the revision of the plan reported by Senator Aldrich's committee. On May 2, 1911, James B. Forgan, vice-chairman, reported to the executive council at their meeting held in Nashville, submitting to them Senator Aldrich's plan as revised by our own commission. After careful examination, the executive council, by resolution, unanimously approved the plan thus revised. Out of forty-six state bankers associations, over thirty have passed resolutions, at their annual conventions, also endorsing the plan.

It seems to be imperative that we should have, if possible, immediate action on this subject, and I most earnestly urge that every effort be put forth by our association for the passage of a good banking and currency bill, and that the currency commission's attention should be directed to the work of urging congress to action at their next session, and their efforts should be supplemented and aided by the association members throughout the country, who should be asked to take the matter up with their congressional representatives in order that prompt and favorable action may be obtained on the plan submitted by the National Monetary Commission; in other words, that the association should "stand by its guns" in this important matter in the fullest sense of the word and should continue to support the bill as previously recommended, and should again go on record as favoring its adoption.

Monetary Reform

I desire particularly to call the attention of the association to the bill recommended by the National Monetary Commission which was created by Sections 17, 18 and 19, of "An Act to Amend the National Banking Laws," approved May 30, 1908.

Legal Department

It hardly is necessary for me to dwell on the work of our general counsel. It speaks for itself. Many of your institutions are availing themselves of the opinions of the general counsel on various matters pertinent to banking. He acts in an advisory capacity on legal questions submitted by the sections, committees, the protective department, and by members all over the country; to the legislative committees of state bankers associations in aid of their efforts to improve the banking laws of their respective states.

The constructive work covers drafts of laws for the law committee of the association, Mr. Paton having worked out a standard form of bank burglary policy which has been copyrighted and now is being used by the different companies, and work is under way on a revision of the fidelity bond of the association. Mr. Paton, in addition to all of the above, appears for the association and its various adjuncts and committees in all legal matters.

Journal Department

The journal department, through its publication, the Journal-Bulletin, disseminates association news to all of its members, adhering strictly to the purpose for which it originally was installed. It is also a medium for the exchange of ideas between the employed and the employers as represented by the institute and the association, and it is also of great assistance to the protective department in sending out warnings to the banks.

Library

During the past year the association has added another department which sorely was needed, a library and reference department

Accounts of banks, bankers, corporations, firms and individuals solicited. Unsurpassed facilities for collections. Correspondence invited under the management of an able librarian. Though it has been in existence but ten months, the service which it has been to the membership has justified its installation. Its material comprises books, documents, statistics, proceedings, addresses, magazine articles, clippings, pamphlets, advertisements and pictures. Its methods involve the securing of this material in various ways from widely-scattered sources, classifying, mounting, preserving and circulating it in accessible form. Its results show the loaning of said material to our members all over the country. That they fully appreciate the advantage afforded by this department is evidenced by the growing de-some time to come. The new offices, on the twelfth floor of the Hanover National Bank Building, formally were opened Wednesday, July 10th, at which time your president, and chairman of the executive council, Arthur Reynolds, were present. There was quite a large attendance, and among others, notably the South Carolina Bankers Association, who were guests of New York bankers at that time. Those of you who have visited the rooms, I am sure will agree with me that they are in keeping with the dignity of our great body.

General Secretary

Your general secretary has been most earnest in his work, always with the interests of the association at heart, and has made a special endeavor to increase the membership of the association. That his efforts in this direction have been crowned with success is borne out by the fact that the increase during the past year is the greatest in the history of the association. His entire staff are both courteous and willing workers.

Conclusion

At the last annual convention of this association, my predecessor, President Watts, suggested and advised that the council dinner, which previously really had been a part of the convention, be abolished, as only a few participated in this special entertainment. It affords me pleasure to report that the executive council at its meeting held at Briarcliff in May last, acted on Mr. Watts' suggestion and abolished the executive council dinner.

While the association has grown and added several sections, each carefully following its various lines, and committees, the headquarters itself neither has stood still nor retrograded. As George M. Reynolds put it some time ago, "It is a veritable beehive of industry."

The results of the activities of the association during the past year speak for themselves. I believe we have nothing but hearty praise for all work accomplished, and I do not believe there is any need for the admonition, "Let the good work go on."

As to the future, I would say to one and all of you to lend your aid to the various committees, whenever you can do so conscientiously; also to the sections.

During my three years' official connection with the association, I have received nothing but the most hearty support and encouragement from my fellow-associates. It has been one harmonious period of activity in the interests of this great body, and I wish to express my deep appreciation of the courteous, kindly treatment I always have received at your hands.

New Offices

To provide for these sections and new departments, space was taken on from time to time until the offices had grown to large proportions, but were still inadequate and inconvenient. Your administrative committee, after a careful investigation of the situation, decided that new quarters would have to be secured, and the general secretary was authorized to negotiate for space which would be ample for

"The effect of politics has been discounted and they no longer are thinking of the political situation. Our customers constantly are telling us of the great amount of business that is coming to them. Business men of the country have become wiser and more conservative in their manufacturing and buying. Business in the country is on a sound basis, and thoroughly is prepared to enter upon a decided increase, not a boom, but a healthy revival of trade. It is noteworthy that we are receiving large demands for money from the West and South."

George M. Reynolds on Money Trust Inquiry

George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago, delivered the following address on the money trust inquiry on Wednesday, September 11th, before the trust company section of the American Bankers Association at its annual convention in Detroit:

Every great crisis wherein business has been seriously affected and which has had a tendency to accentuate any weakness in our system of business has brought out some object lesson for future guidance.

The lesson of the panic of 1907 was that of the value of co-operation.

The abuses incident to the unparalleled prosperity in this country for five years prior to that period caused an over-expansion in the use of credit, culminating in the latter part of October of that year in a money panic, which for a time paralyzed our commerce and threatened the destruction of our institutions; public confidence was disturbed and, the solvency of the banks being doubted, depositors were anxious to withdraw their balances for the purpose of hoarding money.

The amount of lawful money carried by the banks, while sufficient to meet all requirements under normal conditions, now that a state of chaos existed, was found to be inadequate to meet the demands made upon them, and since our banking and currency law contained no provision by which the banks could protect their outstanding credits, to say nothing of protecting the credits of their customers, the banks located in the principal cities throughout the country, as the only means of self-defense left to them, simultaneously went upon a clearing house certificate basis.

While this action seemed to some to be very drastic, it, in fact, proved to be the safeguard of the situation, since through it banks were enabled to meet the urgent requests for credit made upon them and renew credits already extended to concerns, many of which might otherwise have been forced into bankruptcy. At the same time, self-preservation, admittedly the first law of nature, forced the banks in the large reserve cities to stifle the spirit of competition existing between them and work in harmony for the common good—self-protection compelling them to apply the spirit of co-operation to their business in a practical way by utilizing, as far as was practicable, their combined skill and strength to defend the integrity of any bank or concern known to be solvent which required assistance.

Regardless of this commendable spirit and the aid rendered, much criticism has been heaped upon bankers by certain classes. These critics are dissatisfied because we do not in times of crisis furnish to the public credit and money in amounts sufficient to meet their needs, and, on the other hand, in normal times they criticize us because, as they say, the control of money and credit is not sufficiently diversified.

I am surprised that any student of the subject should pretend to believe that the banks in times of stress wilfully withhold from the public the use of such credit and money as it is possible for them under existing conditions and in accordance with the law to supply. Self-interest alone would not permit of their doing this, for no profit can accrue to a bank where an excess of reserve accumulates. Furthermore, the law of competition would not permit it, for in these days when it is the universal practice for banks to extend credit in proportion to the balance which a customer carries with the bank subject to his check, the banker knows full well that if he fails to meet the legitimate requirements of such customer it will result in the loss of that account, which, under the law of competition, will go to his neighbor, who will extend credit against such balances. Therefore, self-interest prompts the banker to do his utmost to serve the public under these conditions.

In thirty-two years of experience in banking, I have yet to learn of the first instance where bankers carrying the reserves of a community have wilfully, and for the purpose of punishing individuals or industries in that community, declined to extend credit against their reserves when there has been a disturbed public confidence and an unusually large demand for both money and credit; and, so far as I know, the only bankers who have failed in emergencies of this kind have been those who have themselves been filled with fear and who have been so panic stricken that they have placed their own safety above the public welfare. I am glad to say, however, that such bankers are so few as compared to the whole number that I do not believe there is just ground for the belief that the bankers of this country have failed to discharge this trust faithfully and well.

Whatever of criticism can properly attach to the banks because of their failure to meet the wishes of the public in times of stress is due to the system and not to the inclination of the bankers, whose actions are circumscribed by a law compelling them to maintain certain reserves, no matter what the needs of a community for credit or money may be.

As I stated in the beginning, the object lesson of the panic of 1907 was that of the value of co-operation, and bankers, striving, as do also those engaged in other lines of business, to prevent losses where possible, and quick to realize the real value of that lesson, have since that time applied this principle of co-operation with great success to the affairs of such of their customers as through unforeseen circumstances have experienced difficulty in maintaining their credit when it has been assailed.

Instead of continuing to follow the old-time method of throwing such creditors into bankruptcy and getting a mere pittance on their claims—where conditions are such that they are justified in so doing, the bank and other creditors now form creditors' committees to manage the affairs of the disabled concerns, thereby very often through such harmony of action restoring the affairs of those concerns to a normal basis, thus averting their failure and consequent loss to the banks and other creditors.

The application of this principle of co-operation by the banks as a means of protection, both to themselves and their customers, thus conserving the assets and oftentimes the integrity of both by preventing failures as well as contentions between the creditors of concerns whose solvency is questioned, has caused many to misconstrue the real motives involved and apply the term "trust" to this harmony of action which always is prompted, so far as I know and believe, by the highest motives born of a sense of fairness and justice and reflecting a desire on the part of the bankers to conserve and upbuild rather than to tear down and destroy.

The fact that ninety-five per cent of the business of this country is done upon credit, and that the use of actual money in transactions has been reduced to the minimum, makes it very easy for people who do not properly discriminate between credit and money itself to become confused in the application of the terms; and especially is this likely to be the case with those who have given so little study to the subject that they look upon a bank as being an institution dealing in money, whereas, in reality, a bank deals in credit, and the money it carries in its vaults is only an incident to its business, being carried only in an amount sufficient under the law of averages to make it possible for the bank to pay its obligations upon demand under normal conditions.

This confusing of credit with money, as it is related to business, has caused much misapprehension on this subject and resulted in more or less honest criticism by those who do not realize that the "money power," as it usually is applied, relates to the power on control of the credit which may be extended against either money or other tangible liquid assets easily or quickly convertible into money; and, in view of the temper of the people toward large aggregations of capital, it is not surprising that there has also arisen much confusion and misconception through the use of the words "money power" and "money trust." Oftentimes, where quotations of alleged statements are made, the word "trust," either through confusion or arbitrarily, is substituted for the word "power," making it appear as "money trust," thereby changing the meaning of the statement as it was originally made.

I disclaim any knowledge, to say nothing of any connection, with any "money trust" of any character, and I feel I would be derelict in my duty if I were not to say to you that I do not believe any such trust exists.

I feel this class of citizen has an erroneous opinion concerning banks, their business, their earnings and their relations to the public. In the first place, any condition which adversely affects the public must react detrimentally on the volume of the business done by the banks, thereby reducing their earnings.

Reverting to the criticisms of the banks during 1907 for their failure to pay money against the balances shown upon their books. I sometimes wonder if the public realizes that those balances were to the extent of ninety-five per cent made up of items of credit and not money. I wonder, too, if the depositing public takes into consideration the fact that when the bank cannot pay its deposits on demand, it is only because it cannot realize on its credits extended to the borrowing public. Two men may be neighbors, one is a depositor of one thousand dollars in the bank, the other a borrower of a thousand dollars from it. If the borrower will pay the note when demand is made upon him to do so, the bank will also be in a position to pay the depositor the amount of his balance. Therefore, in times of panic the reason that banks cannot pay the depositing public their obligations on demand is because the borrowing public cannot pay their obligations to them. Therefore, in criticising a condition of this kind the public should have their criticism attach either to the law which of the community and the credits they control are subject to the ebb and flow incident to the fluctuations in business.

In one breath a man will criticise the banks for not extending credit to the public in times of stress; in another he will criticise the bankers for violating the national banking law by loaning money when to do so impairs their reserves, thereby showing an attitude of inconsistency which I am unable to reconcile.

I have heard more or less criticism of banks in this country upon the theory that the "money power" is in the hands of too few people.

Inasmuch as whatever control individuals may now have of our banking power comes to them under and by virtue of the national banking law, as the result of a concentration of reserves in the central-reserve cities and through legitimate practices in the ordinary trend of business, and not, mark you, through any violation or evasion of the law on their part, would it not be far more becoming to criticize the law which forces this condition rather than to criticize the men who under the law have the condition forced upon them?

As one who has been accused of admitting that the "money power" under existing conditions, or the power to extend credit in times of crises, rests in the hands of a few bankers in this country whose institutions carry the surplus banking reserve, I have for three years past been making a plea to the people of this country to assist in securing legislation pro-fails to apply the remedy or to the borrowers of banks who are unable to pay their obligations in crises.

If a little more of the spirit of fairness were to be injected into a consideration and discussion of this subject, the masses of the people would be less inclined to hold prejudice against or criticise banks, for, after all, the banks are only the "warehouses" of the credits viding for a system of banking and currency, which, it is believed, very materially will decentralize the money power by placing it within the control of several thousand banks, rather than to have it literally controlled by the bankers in the central-reserve cities, as at present.

So far as I know and believe, the majority of the bankers in the central-reserve cities recognize the enormity of the responsibility which rests upon them under the existing law and would welcome any legislation that is just and fair which would both minimize this responsibility and free them from the unjust accusations that constantly are being made against them.

The banks of the country are the servants and not the masters of the people, and it is always to their advantage to serve the people, provided conditions are such that they can do so without an infraction of the banking law.

We find a class of people referring to the financial institutions of this country as members of a "money trust" and "lawbreakers," of our people. Indeed, to those who have been most active in their efforts to encourage the enactment of currency legislation, one of the chief discouragements encountered has sprung from the fact that business men and individuals have been treated so considerately and well by the banks that they have not had a proper realization of the great necessity for currency legislation, and, therefore, have been more or less indifferently inclined toward it.

If the banks had failed to serve the public so satisfactorily or they had mistreated or attempted to take unfair advantage of their customers, do you think this great army of people would have been slow to make themselves heard; and in this event do you not think there would have been the greatest interest in and support by it of any movement which was calculated to bring about currency reform?

While I have heard much criticism of the policy of the management of banks in New York City during the panic days of 1907, which I know to be unfair and unjust, I regret to say that, on the other hand, I have seen but few expressions of commendation of the many examples of the self-sacrificing, noble and patriotic efforts made by many bankers of that city to allay the fear born of a disturbed public confidence and with a view of bringing order out of chaos, thus protecting our institutions at home and our integrity abroad—so aptly illustrating how quickly criticism will prevail and how tardy we often are in according justice to those who, by a close adherence to their fidelity to the welfare of the people, often sink personality and self-interest for the common good.

If the impending investigation can be divested in everything except an honest desire to find the cause of any unsatisfactory existing conditions, I believe it will result in good, for I feel confident it will be found that most of those conditions which have been the subject of criticism have been the outgrowth of the inadequacy of our system of banking and currency, and that bankers, in general, instead of entering into collusion with each other to control the money power for improper uses, are in fact only accepting such responsibilities as come to them naturally and by virtue of and under the law, and, furthermore, that they are striving to the best of their ability to render to the public a proper accounting of their stewardship.

I should like to say a few words upon what I regard as the duty of the banker, as well as the duty of the capital he controls, to the public, but since my views are so well known to you and the time at my disposal so brief, suffice it to say that we must, if we are to be free from cause for criticism, always have in mind the necessity for the practice of high ideals and the establishment of high standards in business, doing what we can to make the capital under our control do the greatest possible good in the upbuilding of our industrial and commercial enterprises; and in the extending of credit we should not ask: "Is the applicant a friend or an enemy," but rather we should determine as to whether or not the credit is wanted for legitimate purposes and as to whether or not it will be properly secured and repaid at maturity.

I should like to refer to the money planks in the platforms of the three great political parties, but time and the fear of overtaxing your patience prevents. If, however, any of you can see anything in those planks to encourage bankers in an honest effort to help provide a proper system of banking and currency—a system which would correct the evils of the system under which we are forced to work—I should be glad to have you point it out.

The failure on the part of those prominent in shaping the policies of the great political parties, to inspire in the members of those parties a patriotic desire to consider this and other great national questions honestly and fairly, on their merits, without respect as to whether or not it will make or lose votes for their party candidates, is causing a great deal of industrial and social unrest. If the time and thought given by some to the promoting of class prej-but, are not those depositors and intelligent business men who are in close relationship with the bankers, through daily business and personal contact, and who have an insight into their methods of conducting the business affairs of their institutions, qualified to judge intelligently as to whether or not bankers are the criminals they are portrayed by some to be? Can you reconcile these accusations with the fact that the business of such institutions constantly is increasing, and very largely, too, through the good offices of their customers and depositors, who, recognizing the value of the service rendered and the treatment accorded them, try to induce their friends to transfer their accounts to the bank with which they do business?

In view of the good treatment extended by banks to that army of active intelligent business men and citizens of this country who have been successful, I cannot but feel this acrimonious criticism of banks and their treatment of the public emanates from a decided minority justice and hatred could be devoted by them to an effort to promote qualities of mind and heart that would reflect fair treatment, justice and equity, much of the contention which now is so prevalent would be dissipated.

Being more or less optimistic by nature and of a philosophical bent, and trying at all times to believe that what is, ultimately may result for the best, I see in these contentions and differences of opinion upon this and other questions, this lesson, viz: the necessity for a careful study of all of our national questions with open, unprejudiced minds, in the hope that we may become factors in the creation of a public sentiment which will tend to insure their settlement along wise and just lines and result in the greatest good to the greatest number.

As bankers who have studied the philosophy of our business and think we know something of the laws of economics as applied to our organization of credit, we are impatient because others who are not students of this subject and whose activities and studies have been along other lines do not support our theories and recommendations with more readiness and enthusiasm, but I sometimes wonder if we, on the other hand, are any better equipped to consider and help determine other questions, such as the tariff, for instance, than our neighbors are to help solve the questions involved requiring the enactment of currency legislation. I very much doubt it, and I want to say that to my mind all these national problems that are becoming more frequent in number and more complex in character, if settled fairly must be settled by the force of a public opinion that reflects a knowledge on the part of the masses of the intricacies of our governmental policies as they relate to economics as applied in our business.

Believing, as I do, that open-minded, honest agitation of any question in which the public is interested, prompted by a laudable purpose and kept free from animus and prejudice, will tend to secure a proper solution of that question, I desire to disavow any antagonism for or opposition to the impending investigation of the so-called "money trust" by the house banking and currency committee; on the contrary, I shall be glad to do what I can to co-operate with the members of that committee so long as their activities are exerted along the lines of an honest endeavor calculated to promote better methods and higher ideals in business.

Inasmuch as under good business conditions all lines of industry are active and prosperous and labor is fully employed, and since the ramifications of business affect every class of our people, public agitation of any question which seriously can affect business and thereby minimize the measure of the prosperity of the masses should be prompted only by the highest motives, and public discussion of that subject should be along honest, honorable, conservative lines.

Good business conditions insuring the full employment of labor means the free use of capital and credit. The greater portion of the credit thus employed has its inception in and is backed by the various banks of the country, and if those credits are stable our people must have confidence in our financial institutions which undertake to protect them.

Credit, even when based upon a proper premise, is extremely sensitive, and anything which disturbs public confidence at once impairs the quantity as well as the usefulness of credit which so largely enters into our general prosperity.

The business of the banks and the prosperity of the masses so intimately are related through the use of credit that you cannot harm one without adversely affecting the other.

Therefore, everyone, no matter how great or small his business may be, should be interested in encouraging only such a plan of procedure in the investigation as will be required to determine the actual facts, keeping it free from prejudice or political bias, for any plan of procedure which would result in disturbing public confidence would affect our institution of credit and thereby carry its blighting effects into every home.

Every banker in his relation to the public welfare should be in sympathy and co-operate with every movement which honestly is calculated to improve public conditions, but, knowing as we do that our system of banking and currency makes no provision for the protection of credit when public confidence is disturbed or impaired, we, as bankers, should not hesitate to direct the attention of the public to possible dangers to business that may be encountered if this investigation should at any time be shorn of an honesty of purpose born of a desire for improved conditions. In this event bankers should not be found lacking in the courage to discourage, or even resist, any movement created for the purpose of capitalizing any prejudice for the benefit of any political party or for the advantage of anyone.

I do not believe the bankers of the country will enter the slightest objection to the making of a comprehensive investigation of the banks by those charged by the house with that responsibility, so long as such investigation does not require them to disclose to the public the confidential relations existing between themselves and their customers, the divulgence of which might greatly embarrass the customer and thereby do serious injury to the banks. In my opinion the banks should, and I believe they would to the limit of their ability to do so, decline to make this information public.

If a banker can be forced to disclose a confidential relationship between his bank and its customer, it would require but a short step further to capitalize for the gratification of prejudice the confidences between the attorney and his client, as well as the secrets of the confessional.

I cannot believe a condition exists which can begin to justify such drastic treatment; no more do I believe congress will take any action which would strike so directly at the personal rights and liberties of the people.

Since the laws enacted must be of a character to meet the approval of public opinion, and since bankers, as well as those engaged in other lines of business, must be governed by these laws, surely we, as bankers, who are so keenly interested in the discussion of this subject so vitally important to our welfare, cannot reasonably be criticized for honestly expressing our opinion upon it.

I do not mean to question the attitude toward this investigation of any of those who have any connection with the work, for, until I am shown to the contrary by their work, I shall be pleased to believe that their efforts will be prompted only by the highest motives born of an honest desire to improve public conditions and free from any desire on their part needlessly to annoy, much less harm, our financial institutions, which are the very bulwarks of our national strength.

Tuesday Session, A. B. A.

The first day's session of the A. B. A. proper was called to order at ten o'clock by President Livingstone. Invocation was delivered by the Rev. Joseph A. Vance, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Detroit, and addresses of welcome were made by Governor Osborn, Alderman John C. Lodge, George H. Russel, president of the Detroit Clearing House, and Homer Warren, president of the welcome more than I have words at my command to express. However, we expected this before we came here—that is, those of us who have enjoyed your hospitality in years past, and those of us who have not been here before will know hereafter what Detroit hospitality means.

Looking back through memory's eye, not bedimmed by the fifteen years which have elapsed, I see two magnificent steamboats linked together, filled with the most tasteful viands to eat, the most exhilarating liquids to drink and the most beautiful and attractive ladies to admire, for all of which your great city enjoys a merited fame; which was a most enjoyable treat to all of us who had the opportunity and pleasure to attend the 1897 convention of the association here. I recall, also, that magnificent luncheon given by Walker good results began to show, and in the subsequent years the history of the country has vindicated the judgment of the association on that question.

As bankers, we are patriots, and are interested in everything that interests our country. Our vocations are such that we could not be otherwise than patriotic. Integrity is the cornerstone upon which the superstructure of our business and our association stands. We have asked for no special laws, but we favor general laws which are applicable for the good of the people of the whole country, for we stand for the growth and uplift of the nation, and we are only successful individually when the whole country enjoys prosperity.

Aside from our interest in home development and progress, we stand for the betterment of our consular service abroad, for the building up of a strong American merchant marine and the strengthening of our navy. Much has been done along these lines, but I fear not as much as should have been done, for this great country should have all the prestige on the high seas and in foreign lands which its wonderful growth, industry and intelligence at home should warrant.

I will not take more of your time, as there are other gentlemen to follow me who can entertain you better, but let me in closing tender to you the greetings of the beautiful South-

Detroit Board of Commerce. The response was made by Col. Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National at Atlanta, Ga. After the annual address of President Livingstone, reports were heard from the general secretary, treasurer, general counsel, executive council and of the standing protective committee. An address was made by the Hon. Robert W. Bonyng of Denver, a member of the National Monetary Commission. Mr. Bonyng talked on banking and currency reform. In the afternoon the various sections reported and amendments to the constitution were reported out from the executive council by Chairman Arthur Reynolds. Reports then were heard from the committees on law, bills of lading, express companies and money orders and forms for national and state banks. After announcements, adjournment was taken.

Response to Addresses of Welcome by Col. Robert J. Lowry

It has been with great pleasure that I have listened to the words of welcome of these gentlemen, and I know that I voice the sentiment of all the members of our association and visitors when I say that we appreciate them. Indeed, we appreciate these words of cordial

Brothers across the river in Canada, on that beautiful green plot of four or five acres; a most inspiring and enjoyable occasion. With that distinctly in my mind, who could wonder that I say that those of us who have been here before know what Detroit can do when she gets "on the job?"

In this city fifteen years ago I laid down my commission as president of this association, to which office the association had been good enough to elect me the previous year in St. Louis. It was indeed gratifying to see the good work that had been done beginning to show results, for it will be remembered that our association declared for sound money, when we were importuned by all political parties to consider the free coinage of silver, bimetallism, and other propositions. After this declaration in 1896 it was here, in 1897, that

Report of Secretary Farnsworth

Col. Fred E. Farnsworth, in making his annual report to the members of the association, prefaced his remarks by giving a brief summary of the early banking history of the state of Michigan and the city of Detroit. The twenty-third annual convention of the association was held in Detroit in 1897, at which time there was an attendance of about 1,100, as compared with an attendance of over 4,000 this year. In 1897 the membership was 2,813. On August 31st of this year it numbered 13,323. The total assets of the banks comprising the association in 1897 amounted to $4,200,000,000; they now are estimated at $15,000,000,000. The association receipts from all sources for the year ending August 31, 1897, amounted to $86,000. For the year ending August 31, 1912, they aggregated more than $215,000.

Mention was made of the spring meeting of the executive council held at Briarcliff, and of the splendid work being accomplished by the various sections into which the association is divided. The Journal-Bulletin is increasing each year in popularity with the members of the association and with the members of the institute. From time to time it has been found necessary to issue a larger edition in order to supply the demand. Correspondence with members has revealed the fact that it is one of the most valuable adjuncts of the association. Mention also was made of the work done by the various committees, and of the efficient manner in which they have performed their duties. Reference also was made to the work being done by the general counsel for the association, Thomas B. Paton, and the high valuation placed by members upon his work in connection with the rendering of legal opinions, which are published in the Journal-Bulletin, and which have been greater in extent than ever before.

The new offices of the association have been commended by all who have had an opportunity to visit them, and it is believed that they are in keeping with the dignity of the association. A new feature which has been adopted during the past year is a library, under the supervision and direction of a competent librarian.

During the fiscal year just ended there have been sent out from the general offices more than 415,000 letters, etc. This does not include what has been issued by the sections and committees.

The membership has increased 1,251 during the year and 4,072 within the past five years. The increase for the month of August was 433.

Treasurer's Report

Treasurer J. Fletcher Farrell of Chicago reported the cash balance on hand September 1, 1911, as $1,433.43. The total receipts for the current year were $215,719.11, and the total expenses $213,159.66 leaving a credit balance September 1, 1912, of $3,992.88.

In August the treasurer received from the general secretary 12,500 drafts on account of current membership dues aggregating $205,592.50, all of which have been forwarded for collection. Owing to the fact that these drafts are dated September 1, 1912, which is in accordance with the constitution, and which is one week prior to the date of the convention, only a small percentage has been collected. It is expected, however, to receive remittances from all by October 1st.

The association has its surplus funds invested in stocks and bonds which are deposited with the Bankers Trust Company of New York under the control of the executive committee. The trust company collects the interest on these securities and remits to the treasurer for the credit of the association account. The securities are as follows: $11,000, C., B. & Q. joint 4's of 1921; $30,000, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe 4 per cent bonds of 1995; $50,000, C., B. & Q. Illinois Division 4 per cent bonds of 1949; $30,000, New York City registered corporation stock, 3½ per cent, due 1490.

Under the authority delegated to it in the interim of meetings of the executive council, the administrative committee authorized the sale of $10,000 government 4 per cent bonds of 1925, the proceeds of which were to be converted into C., B. & Q. joint 4's. The sale of the government bonds was made and out of the proceeds, on July 18, 1912, the $11,000 C., B. & Q. bonds (already referred to in the list of securities held for the benefit of the association) were purchased and the same was confirmed by the executive council. There is a balance of $769.10 on account of this transaction, which is on deposit with the Bankers Trust Company, and on which the association receives two per cent interest.

Report of Executive Council

Chairman Arthur Reynolds, in reporting for the executive council, mentioned the full attendance at the two meetings held since the last convention of the association as indicative of the continued great interest felt by the members, not only in the work of the council, but in that of the association as well.

At the meeting held after the convention at

New Orleans, the finance committee presented the budget, recommending the annual appropriations, covering the expenditures of the association for the then ensuing year, which was approved. The finance committee also reported the following, which was duly approved by the council:

"The committee has been confronted in its deliberations with an apprehension that there may be some unnecessary expenses by reason of different committees working practically on the same topic and with the same object in view, and hence recommend that the incoming finance committee consider carefully the subject of effecting such consolidations or eliminations as may be practicable to avoid the unnecessary expenditure of money and to place the whole finances of the association on what would seem to be a better business basis, and to report at the spring meeting of the executive council."

The matter of the report of the committee on fidelity bonds and burglary insurance, after being thoroughly discussed, was referred back to the committee, with the understanding that a report would be made at the May meeting of the council. A resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee to report upon amendments of the constitution at the Briarcliff meeting.

At the Briarcliff meeting there were seventy-two members present, every section of the country being represented. At this meeting there were presented over twenty reports of various officers, committees and sections, representing all branches of business to which the association is devoted. A resolution introduced by the finance committee and providing for the selection of members of various committees, in so far as is practicable, from the members of council, thereby saving the expense of additional members to the meeting of the council, was adopted. The following changes were recommended by the committee on amendments to the constitution, appointed at New Orleans:

1. The creation of a membership committee whose duty it shall be to pass upon the qualifications of candidates for admission to our association. (Approved by the council.)

2. A constitutional recognition of the office of general counsel. (Approved by the council.)

3. The formation of a new section to care for the interests of investment bankers. (Disapproved by the council.)

4. A constitutional provision rendering the chairman of the executive council ineligible for election to any other office within a year after his term of office shall have expired. (Approved by the council—not to become effective until the year 1913.)

5. A provision permitting the executive council to group adjoining states for the purpose of selecting representatives on the council. (Approved by the council.)

6. By-law provision for an increase in the membership dues from private bankers and banking houses. (Approved by the council.)

The matter of a section for investment bankers was discussed at Briarcliff and upon vote was disapproved by the council, the feeling being that it would be unwise to create a new section at this time. As provided in the New Orleans meeting, the committee on fidelity bonds and burglary insurance made a report to the council at Briarcliff, in which they made a number of recommendations and asked to be discharged. Their report was adopted and the committee was discharged, subject, of course, to the action of the convention. In conformity with the recommendation of this committee, the chairman was authorized to appoint a permanent committee of three to keep in touch with the rates charged by companies and the general situation, and from time to time make recommendations to the council.

The reports of the various sections indicated much activity, together with a harmonious cooperation for the general good of all bankers. The law committee made a very exhaustive report, indicating much time spent and labor involved, covering the conditions under which savings deposits are received throughout the country, and the character of the investments which now are being made with such deposits. The committee also outlined what they regarded as appropriate investment for savings deposits, and took up quite fully the question of segregation of such deposits.

No special recommendations were made except the committee believed the question of segregation of savings deposits should be taken up at the Detroit convention, which was not approved by the council, it being believed that it would be impossible to reach anything like unanimous action at that time. The committee on agriculture and financial development and education gave a very interesting report.

A resolution was adopted recommending to congress the adoption of legislation and liberal appropriations for the aid of field demonstration work. The work of the protective committee of the association has continued unabated through the year in furthering one of the prime purposes of the organization. Through the vigilance and activity of this committee thefts from members and friends in their various forms have become so hazardous to the perpetrators, that instances of that character materially have diminished.

The belief was expressed that the political horizon has not yet sufficiently cleared to expect any modification of the currency laws. With the opening of the Panama Canal the commercial geography of the world will be changed, and the United States should be in a position to take rank with other great nations in banking and commerce. Without a change in our laws, however, this will be impossible. The culmination of similar enterprises in times past has been followed by periods of depression and panic. If all of the efforts of the country are needed to care for business at home, foreign nations necessarily will absorb the commerce, which by nature of the change should be ours.

It still is the prime object of the association to urge the adoption of remedial legislation, and the belief was expressed that the currency commission be urged to continue the work, even though adverse conditions may prevail.

Report of the General Counsel

Thomas B. Paton, general counsel for the association, in making his report, told of the work done in connection with the proposed legislation in regard to bills of lading, the making of false statements as a means of procuring credit and of the enactment by the New York legislature of a statute relating to malicious attacks on the standing and credit of banks. All measures recommended by the association have been actively urged this year in the comparatively small number of states whose legislatures met during the year of 1912. Special pamphlets were prepared early in December, containing proposed laws and annotations, and these were forwarded in due season to legislative committeemen and secretaries of state bankers associations. In concluding his report Mr. Paton made several suggestions which he believes to be worthy of the consideration of the association:

The numerous requests for opinions upon disputed questions growing out of the collection of checks and drafts, as well as the conflicting laws of the different states governing responsibility of collecting bank for default of correspondent and of banks forwarding items direct to payer or circuitously by methods not sanctioned by legal decisions, as well as the attempts of banks to secure relief from responsibility by means of clauses in pass books, deposit slips and credit advice cards, suggested to general counsel some time ago the desirability of framing for the approval of the association a uniform code governing collection of commercial paper which, if enacted in the different states, would establish, first, that a bank receiving on deposit paper payable at a distance took the same as agent and not as owner or debtor and also would limit the responsibility of the bank for correspondents to the selection of suitable agents and further provide rules as to methods of forwarding in harmony with reasonable banking customs. The benefits of such a code would be uniformity and simplicity in the law and relief of the first bank from risk and responsibility to its depositor for paper lost in the mail and for losses caused by the neglect or bankruptcy of subsequent collecting agents, as well as the legalizing of proper banking customs in the forwarding of paper for collection. A draft of such law was commenced several months ago but has not yet been completed owing to press of other duties. When the first rough draft is completed, it is proposed that its provisions be thoroughly discussed before it is finally submitted for approval.

The many disputed questions and the conflict and uncertainty of state laws relating to forged paper and also the uncertainty in the law concerning the position of a bank which receives on deposit or pays checks signed by an official, agent or fiduciary to his individual order, further suggest the desirability of framing statutes which would regulate and simplify the rules of law governing these subjects. It is proposed to take up this work at the earliest practicable moment.

A further suggestion which has occurred to general counsel, as the result of his correspondence with members, is the establishment under the auspices of the association of a court of arbitration, governed by proper rules and regulations, to which disputes between members over matters of small amount might be submitted for decision or adjustment. There are many cases where differences arise between banks as to which is responsible for protest fees or should bear the loss growing out of mistake, fraud or forgery in connection with the collection of commercial paper or some other transaction, in which the amount is comparatively small and does not justify the expense of taking the matter into court. Each contestant believes its own side of the case to be right, fruitless correspondence often results and ill-feeling is sometimes engendered. Several cases of this kind have been submitted to your general counsel by agreement of the parties. The suggestion would seem worthy of consideration whether the establishment of a court of arbitration, such as proposed, would be practicable and beneficial.

Report of Standing Protective Committee

The protective committee reported that there are 79 cases of people arrested prior to September 1, 1911, which have not yet been disposed of. The total arrests since that date are 249, making a total of 328. Of this number 145 have been convicted and 58 have been released, escaped, killed and died, leaving 125 awaiting trial on August 30, 1912. Since the beginning of the fiscal year, September 1, 1911, up to and including August 30, 1912, there have been 39 burglaries, attempted burglaries, hold-ups and sneak thefts reported on members and 96 similar crimes on non-members. These crimes have been the most numerous in Arkansas, Illinois, Oklahoma and Texas against non-members, as there have been very few attacks in those states on members. The loss by attacks on members by burglars amounts to $3,375.36, while the loss from attacks on non-members amounts to $147,422.99. During the past year the protective department has received 15,972 reports and other communications from its detective agents; it also has received 1,260 letters and telegrams and has written 3,365 letters and telegrams. These figures do not include circular letters and similar communications. The committee feels that the Burns National Detective Agency is entitled to much credit for the satisfactory results which have been attained.

Report of American Institute of Banking Section

F. A. Crandall of Chicago, chairman of the executive council, American Institute of Banking, made the following report:

The American Institute of Banking section embraces 12,917 chapter members and correspondence students who are undergoing the process of education with more or less system and seriousness. The success of chapters in large cities has created the impression that the Institute is solely a city proposition, and correspondence instruction among country bankers therefore remains latent through lack of publicity and promotion. The advantages of personal association among students outside of chapter cities are unattainable except through attendance at Institute conventions, but it is confidently hoped that the Institute spirit may be extended by the association of country students in a correspondence chapter of constitutional standing, and closer relationship thus established between country and city bankers. So far as actual acquirement of knowledge is concerned correspondence study is equal in results to the work done in a majority of city chapters and manifestly superior to the work done in many such organizations. New chapters are desirable in about a dozen sizable cities, but wherever it is impossible to maintain substantial membership correspondence instruction seems to be more expedient than chapter association. A correspondence chapter has, therefore, been established for the purpose of putting country students upon an equal and identical footing with their city brethren. Chapter organization is thus made uniform and universal.

Practical experience has demonstrated the fact that Institute success depends upon adherence to the constitutional objects of (1) educating bankers in the theory and practice of banking and such principles of law and economics as apply to the banking business, and (2) establishing and maintaining a recognized standard of banking education by means of official examination and the issuance of certificates. The standard study course of the Institute as crystalized by the process of evolution has become recognized as the universal basis of institute work. The fact should be understood, however, that the purpose of the study course thus established is to provide elementary education for thousands rather than advanced education for hundreds or less, and that graduation as evidenced by the Institute certificate should be regarded as the beginning rather than the end of Institute activity. In other words, the Institute study course represents educational necessities rather than educational luxuries. Such fundamental work, however, has so stimulated the spirit of investigation that a system of post-graduate study has been established for the benefit of Institute graduates and other mature students of banking and kindred subjects.

The arrangement under which members of the American Bankers Association are constituted associate members of the Institute section provides necessary revenue and incidental supervision, and the amalgamation of the Institute Bulletin and the Association Journal has proved to be a mutually satisfactory medium of publicity. Chairman Hollister Reports for Bills of Lading Committee

The efforts of the committee during the past year have been devoted to urging bill of lading reform laws before congress and the various state legislatures. The most serious of the defects of the common law proposed to be remedied is the doctrine which prevails in all the federal courts, and in a number of the state courts, that although a bill of lading acknowledging the receipt of described goods is issued by the authorized agent of a carrier, and passes to a "bona fide" holder for value, who takes it relying upon the truth of the statements which it contains, the carrier is at liberty to show the fact, whenever it is a fact, that the agent never received the goods, but issued the bill through mistake or fraud, or as an accommodation to a shipper, and upon such showing free himself from responsibility on the ground that the agent had no authority to issue the bill of lading before the goods were received. It also is desired to have a uniform bill of lading act adopted in all of the states, which will be in the nature of a code of the rules of law relating to the issue, transfer and redemption of bills of lading. A meeting of the committee was called in January of this year, and held in New York. At this meeting there were present several representatives of shippers' organizations. Plans were discussed for urging the proposed legislation, and the duty of carrying out such plans, the arranging for legislative hearings, and the collection and presentation of evidence at such hearings was delegated to Mr. Paton, general counsel for the association. At this meeting a suggestion was made to the committee that it might be possible to obtain the co-operation of the railroad interests to a bill of lading measure fashioned along the line of the request of the committee, which also permitted the railroads to make a charge for the extra service which they claimed thus would be rendered to the shipper. This suggestion was made in such a way that it seemed advisable to submit it to all the members of the committee by mail, and this was done. The reasons for and against the proposition were outlined and the whole matter was submitted in detail to each member of the committee. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was not wise to undertake the treatment of that important phase of the question in the bill; that the question of rates was one which properly might be settled by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and that if the railroads could show that there was an extra service, that they had their recourse through this commission.

The next meeting of the committee was held in Washington on the evening of February fifteenth. This was preliminary to the first hearing before the senate committee on interstate commerce. Three hearings were held, consuming five days, on February 16th and 17th and on March 1st, 2d and 15th. The bills under discussion were Senate Bill 957, the Clapp-Stevens bill; and there was also before the body Senate Bill No. 4713, which had been introduced by Senator Pomerene of Ohio, being a copy of the Uniform Bills of Lading Act approved by the commissioners on uniform state laws for state enactment, modified in certain respects to adapt it for federal legislation. The hearings were in charge of the attorneys for the bankers and shippers. Professor Williston conducted the case for the bankers; Mr. Paton was associated with him. There were present other attorneys represent-bills; liability on order bills not taken up when goods delivered and took care of duplicate bills.

During the course of the hearings the bankers were asked to state their preference as between the Pomerene and the Clapp-Stevens bills. They stated that the Pomerene bill was perfectly satisfactory to them, being the same law the bankers were advocating in the different states, but that their advices from members of the house were that the shorter measure was the only one practicable to be passed; therefore they favored the latter.

A week before final adjournment of the senate on August 21st our committee was much gratified to receive advices that the senate had on that day passed the Pomerene bill by unanimous vote. The measure now goes to the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce, where it will be urged by our committee at the short session of the 62d congress next winter. Our latest advices from members of the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce are that that committee is not favorably inclined toward the Pomerene bill, while they do favor the Clapp-Stevens bill, and that the house will not consider the Pomerene bill without additional hearings before the committee, which would not have been necessary had the Clapp-Stevens bill come to them from the senate. It is to the interest of every member of this association to do all in his power to urge the passage of the Pomerene bill by the house at the next session in order that the banking and commercial interests of the country may have placed on the federal statute books before the close of the present congress a measure so long sought for and so much needed.

With regard to the promotion of the uniform bills of lading act in the different states our committee would report that we have made active efforts this year on behalf of this law before a number of state legislatures and we are glad to announce that the uniform act has been passed this year by the Louisiana legislature. This makes ten states now having the uniform bills of lading act; namely, Maryland, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Louisiana.

The delays in getting remedial legislation are very tedious but there is a growing feeling in Washington that these measures are worthy, and while the railroads maintain a definite opposition to them they themselves realize that sooner or later we will get a satisfactory law enacted. Messrs. Ingle and Wexler of our committee both have been of great service in advice, counsel, and effort. Patience seems to be the prime virtue required, for our contentions are worthy and soon will impress themselves upon a body which listens first to the indistinct voice of the people and then to the more thoughtful logic of those who are doing constructive and enduring work in legislation. We cannot speak too highly of the quality of thought that has been given to these vexed questions by Messrs. Paton and Williston, our counsel in the case.

ing shippers' organizations. Mr. James of Cincinnati presented the case of the shippers, who were urging the passage of the Pomerene bill. The discussion went on at great length, very many witnesses for shipper, banker and railroad being called. The result of this hearing, as far as the committee is concerned, was the final modification of the Clapp-Stevens bill by a short draft presented by Messrs. Williston and Paton to Senator Clapp, the chairman of the committee. This short bill was drawn because of the apparent willingness on the part of the senators to report some short measure, which was not complicated and seemed to meet the necessities of the situation. This modified draft provided responsibility of the railroad for the act of its agent in issuing false

THE AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION

With membership the greatest in its history and at the very zenith of its power, the great American Bankers Association held its thirty-eighth annual convention this week in the city of Detroit. All of the four sections into which the membership is subdivided held separate conventions, each under the supervision of its own officers and with speakers of its own selection. The sessions of the general association were largely attended and the entertainment provided was of the very highest character.

The American Bankers Association had a small beginning. In a great many quarters the purposes of the association were misrepresented, and in the earlier days it was flouted by all of the leading political parties. The association, however, kept steadfastly to its purpose, and to-day is admitted to be the most powerful organization in existence. The reforms which it has accomplished have had much to do with the prosperity and general welfare of the country. Practically all of the statutes for the protection of banks against frauds have been secured by the co-operation of its membership. But for the American Bankers Association it may well be doubted if the United States soon would have adopted the single gold standard, and it is unquestioned that it was the American Bankers Association, by the appointment of its currency commission, which finally led to the creation of the National Monetary Commission and its splendid plan for reforming the currency and banking of the country. Only within a fortnight the national congress has placed its endorsement upon the efforts of the A. B. A. by passing the bill of lading bill, which for many years held a prominent place on every program at every convention held by the organization. From its membership developed the agitation which resulted in a world-wide money order system, and also in the banks retaking to themselves functions which had been absorbed by private enterprise. Owing to this intervention in the field of foreign exchange we now have the traveler's check, good in any country in the world. It was the American Bankers Association which built up a protective organization against bank workers and yeggmen, which rapidly is stamping out the once powerful organizations which operated largely upon the moneyed institutions of the country. Within the last two years the association has gone upon record in the better-farming movement, and in the reformation of the school system and at Detroit one entire session of the convention was given over to such subjects. It was conceded by those who even have given but casual attention to such subjects, that the bankers have done more to forward soil improvement in two years than had been accomplished by all other organizations in the past half-century.

LARGER PAID CIRCULATION IN THE MIDDLE WEST THAN ANY THREE OF ITS COMPETITORS COMBINED

Another field in which the American Bankers Association has taken a strong position is in securing the adoption in most of the states of uniform negotiable instrument acts. Its efforts in legislative direction have been directed only toward subjects which have a direct or indirect bearing upon banking. Even the farm movement has been found to be upon investigation one of the most productive ever undertaken by the bankers. The doubling of the soil products of any community will more than double the profits of the banks of that community, and for this reason some persons have attributed self-interest to the bankers as a controlling motive in the present movement. Bankers, however, stand upon the broad principle that whatever is good for the business or farm interests of any community is good for the banking business. Conversely, most of the things which benefit the banking business of a community will improve other conditions in a direct ratio.

Nothing entirely new or novel was produced by the meeting at Detroit. The general consensus of opinion seemed to be that the business conditions of the country are resting upon a firm basis and that in nearly all sections there is a degree of prosperity quite unusual in recent years. The country never has had better general crops than this season. Bankers expect to be taxed to the utmost to supply funds to care adequately for the crop movement and for the improved collateral business conditions in every community, which are benefited directly by large crops. Railroad men who were in attendance at Detroit admitted freely that the transportation problem of the present crop season is the greatest in the history of the trunk lines. The political situation was not admitted by any speaker at Detroit to have any adverse bearing upon the business or banking situation. Nothing which happened

BIGGEST COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISE IN AMERICA

The big waterpower dam nearing completion at Keokuk, in the Mississippi river, is nothing short of an economic revolution. It will leave the river more useful in other ways than ever before and will furnish cheap power for manufacturing in the richest agricultural center in the known world. There will be thirty huge turbines, the largest ever built. Comparison is the easiest way to get a proper concept of this huge undertaking. This one power plant will have turbines which whirl their shafts with a capacity equaled by the total water power of only three states, Maine, California and New York. It will have three times the power on the shafts of any other single power house in the world; it will have half the total output of the five plants on both sides of the boundary at Niagara; it will be equal to three times the total steam power used in manufacturing in Iowa to-day, and the agricultural products of that great agricultural state barely exceed its manufactured products. There is really no other single water power development that approaches it in size in the whole world.

The cheapest coal in the world, and the cheapest steam power in this country, is in St. Louis, adjacent to the Illinois coal field. Yet St. Louis has contracted for ninety-nine years for 60,000 horsepower to be transmitted there from the Keokuk dam. The facts in this paragraph are what make the Mississippi River water power development so important—it is already resulting in the building of a great manufacturing region, two hundred miles long, in the heart of the United States. When the tremendous horsepower of the Keokuk installation is translated into machines and factory output, it reads a shifting of the manufacturing center of the United States westward. Many believe that the coal famines of future ages thus are being discounted. Next let us solve the flood-water question and store the excess for use in the arid southwest. The possibilities of the Mississippi Valley have no limit but the capacity of the engineer. Without a Hugh L. Cooper we might never have put the Father of Waters in working harness.

DULUTH'S BANK DEPOSITS

As disclosed by the quarterly statement, the deposits in Duluth's banks amount to $26,418,134.09. This is by far the largest amount ever on deposit in Duluth at one time. It is an average of more than $330 for every man, woman and child in Duluth; and few communities are so rich. These figures show a solid prosperity, and they show that this prosperity is growing.

Trust Company Section

The trust company section of the A. B. A. met on Wednesday and Thursday mornings in the convention hall, Hotel Ponchartrain. The meeting was called to order by President Fries at ten o'clock and the invocation delivered by the Very Rev. S. S. Marquis, D.D., dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. The address of welcome was made by the Hon. David E. Heinemann, comptroller of the city of Detroit. The reply was made by President Fries, who then delivered his annual address. Reports of the secretary and of committees then were heard. George M. Reynolds of Chicago delivered a very able address on the money trust inquiry, being the first banker so publicly to declare himself on this subject. Henry M. Bates, dean of the University of Michigan, talked on "Some Unscheduled Liabilities," and Breckinridge Jones of St. Louis, often referred to as the father of the trust company section, told of the achievements of the section during the past fifteen years. The following subjects had been selected as of interest to the section, and were productive of much discussion by the members present, who spoke freely on them: "Segregation of Savings Deposits Held in Trust Companies;" "Advantages of Co-operative Publicity of Trust Company Functions," and "Annuities and Pension Funds for Employees." There was a roll call by states, answered by the vice-presidents of the section in brief written reports dealing with the history of trust companies in the several states during the preceding year, and with the conditions under which they now are operating. An opportunity was afforded the vice-presidents to be heard from in brief addresses amplifying or explaining any topics contained in their reports.

Address of President F. H. Fries

It is our good fortune to meet this year in the charming, progressive and historic city of Detroit, where fifteen years ago the trust company section of the American Bankers Association held its first annual meeting.

We note the marvelous growth of this city and the great development of its business since last we were here, and we realize that it is a part of the general prosperity that has blessed our entire country. During these fifteen years the population of the United States has increased thirty-three per cent, and its trade and commerce has doubled; bank deposits indicative of this growth have increased in the same ratio and the bank clearings show that all sections of the country have shared in this prosperity.

If the trust company, as an institution, is a natural result of our business and financial development, as we believe it is, this great prosperity must have affected the growth of trust companies and be quite apparent in the growth of the trust company section. There was no statement made at the first meeting as to the number of trust companies then in existence, but their total capital and surplus was stated as $224,606,000, with assets amounting to $405,516,714.22. To-day the trust companies of the United States number over 1,800, with resources aggregating $5,500,000,000, besides which they control in some trust capacity $35,000,000,000 more. The membership of the section has grown during this time from 120 to 1,250, and their resources from four hundred million to four and one-half billion dollars. Thus, while the population of this country has grown 33 per cent, and the business 100 per cent, the trust companies of the section have increased in number and resources about 1,000 per cent.

The responsibility upon the trust company section cannot be avoided, because trust companies are and probably ever will remain state institutions. The trust company section is the only common ground upon which they can meet, and its influence the only one that successfully can be exerted to bring about uniform and improved methods and practices and the passage of better laws in the different states, and from it should emanate every good thing that will help to standardize or improve this work. The varying interests involved and the character of this work broadens the scope of the business necessarily undertaken and opens a larger field of effort that necessitates the handling of details that may differentiate this from other sections of the American Bankers Association, and yet these very interests draw us into more intimate relation with all the other sections and should tend to cement in a peculiar degree the ties of mutual interest and esteem.

There have been evidences in the past that the general association may not have appreciated the peculiar conditions that have surrounded the trust company section and that some of the members may have become impatient with the interest and zeal that has been shown at times in its affairs; it even has been stated upon the floor of the general association that the trust company section contemplated withdrawing from the parent body.

This is not correct and these impressions should not exist, for it is desirable that the union should be maintained, not only on account of the greater efficiency in matters of general legislation, but because of the greater advantages that arise from closer sympathy and wider acquaintance, and the strength and influence that comes by reason of this union. The best thing possible for all concerned lies in working for the real benefit of the individual members, which can be accomplished through the material advancement of their interests. For this reason, I am sure that you will listen with a very great deal of pleasure to the paper entitled, "Achievements of the Trust Company During the Past," and I recommend a careful consideration of the reports of the various committees which will show what is being done in the present and to the discussions of this meeting which doubtless will forecast the possibilities of the future.

Perhaps the most important of the possibilities is the passage of the bill proposed by the Monetary Commission for monetary reform which is at present held in abeyance on account of the political situation. It is hoped, however, that this is only temporary, that the merits of the measure will win for it a favorable consideration, and that its importance to all branches of business and all classes of citizens will ensure its adoption.

The legislative committee has given this measure much careful thought and has secured for trust companies full and favorable recognition, which should recommend the bill to the earnest support of all members and their representatives in congress. The success attending the efforts of this important committee would seem to warrant the belief that a determined effort on the part of its members might result in obtaining uniform trust company laws in the various states. We realize the almost chaotic condition of the laws affecting trust company business and what a stupendous undertaking this would be, and yet the success attending the passage of the negotiable instrument law and the present condition of proposed legislation for a uniform bill of lading should afford every encouragement to hope for reasonable success. The possibilities along these lines are very great.

F. H. FRIES

President Trust Company Section

The excellent work done by the protective laws committee also is encouraging as the report will show, but the prohibition of the use of the "Trust Company" name to unworthy institutions that seek a chartered existence, is not sufficient to save it from slander if companies already chartered and bearing the name are guilty of questionable practices, and this is the case. There are at present promoting companies in three different states, bearing the name of "Trust Company," whose object and aim, as well as work, is reprehensible. If it is at all possible the powers and work of the committee should be enlarged.

The rapid growth of business has necessitated the introduction of methods of accounting and reports that are different in almost every institution, but no one will say that all are equally efficient or equally good, and all will say that there must be a best one. Cannot a more effective effort be put forth to standardize these forms and methods, than the publication of a book of forms for choice, admirable as that method was a few years ago?

Trust company advertising and publicity work is necessary in a business where so little is known and so much information is needed, and this branch of the work is attracting much attention. The intelligent direction by experienced leaders would be appreciated and valued by most, if not all, of the members.

These and many other things claim the attention and the special interest of the section, but the most important of all is the influence that the section constantly can exert to raise the standard of service. The work accomplished is important but the spirit and faithfulness shown in the doing of it is still more so—absolute truth and honesty are the cardinal virtues that belong to the officials and work of the trust company. There is no room for falsehood in any form, from the advertisement that "cries our wares" to the final settlement with a most dependent ward.

The section has called into its immediate service in the past men of unblemished character and high ideals and they have had much to do with what has been accomplished. Appreciating this as I do, I want to emphasize the importance of securing the very best men in the trust company business as officers and members of committees, so that the "highest ideals" ever will remain the goal toward which all members are directed.

Allow me to recommend the continuance of the annual banquet of the trust companies of the United States, given each spring under the auspices of the section. No single agency has done more for the reputation and upbuilding of the section. So long as the high standards of the past two years is maintained the banquet will do the section great good. I would also venture to suggest a more intimate relation between the section and the state trust company organizations, the forming of which should be encouraged in every way; also the cultivation of the respective vice-presidents of the various states through whom more effective work can be done.

I cannot close without making due and grateful acknowledgement to the officers of the section and the members of the committees with whom it has been my good fortune and pleasure to serve.

May the coming years bring to the section and all its members the prosperity and success they deserve.

Report of Executive Committee

F. H. Goff, president of the Cleveland Trust Company, reported for the executive committee. The trust company section was organized in 1896 and its first meeting was held in Detroit in 1897. In that year there were 114 members, having combined resources of about $350,000,000; now there are 1,237 members with combined resources of approximately $4,500,000,000. Much notable work has been accomplished during the period which followed the organization of this important section. The laws of the several states relating to trust companies have been collated and published; a complete set of approved trust company forms has been carefully compiled; the duties and liabilities of trust companies in acting as registrar and transfer agent, as trustee under corporate mortgages and in conducting a safe deposit department, have been studied and defined; a beginning, at least, has been made in standardizing the method of accounting and the use of the word "trust" in corporate titles has been protected by legislation in most of the states.

In 1897 only nineteen of the states and territories of the Union had passed general laws providing for the incorporation of trust companies; to-day, not only have such laws been passed, but strongly financed and prosperous trust companies are doing business in most, if not all, of the states.

At the meeting of the committee at Briarcliff this spring it was decided that the work of the protective laws committee be enlarged to secure the adoption as far as possible of laws by the several states providing for supervision, regulation and control of trust companies acting in a fiduciary capacity. It is believed that the attention of the organization should be directed toward obtaining the adoption of uniform laws properly safeguarding the exercise of trust functions by corporate institutions. It also was deemed advisable to endeavor to make better known to the general public the advantages of corporate trusteeship, by a co-operative publicity campaign.

The membership of the section has increased 100 during the past year. With the office accommodations and facilities now afforded, it is believed that the value and efficiency of the work done by the secretary can be so increased that the advantages to be derived from membership will make it profitable for every trust company to join the association.

NO MODEL TRUST COMPANY LAW

At the meeting of your executive committee, held at Briarcliff on May 8, 1912, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that the tentative draft of the trust company law prepared by Mr. Paton, general counsel, be referred to a committee, of which Mr. Fuller shall be chairman, such committee to report any suggestions, corrections or amendments of such draft at the next meeting of the section."

Your committee respectfully reports that after careful consideration of the subject it has reached the conclusion that it is inexpedient at this time to attempt to draft a model law covering all of the functions of the various kinds of institutions using the word "trust" in their title, but that its efforts along that line at this time should be limited to the preparation of a draft of that portion of a trust company law which relates only to the handling of matters in trust and particularly to the conservation of trust funds and trust estates.

Therefore, your committee feels that the draft prepared by Mr. Paton, admirable as it is, covers in its scope a larger field than it is wise to attempt to bring under the action of a uniform law at the present time.

Although appreciating the desirability of having all the trust companies in the United States operating under identical laws defining and regulating all of their rights and powers, your committee believes that an attempt to introduce such a law in all the states of the Union under existing conditions would not meet with a favorable reception.

Your committee believes, however, that a draft of a model law, in so far as it relates only to the rules, regulations and safeguards of the trust departments of all institutions which accept and administer trusts, is practicable and would be interesting to all the members of your section, and especially advantageous to those who are interested in the enactment of new and better trust company laws in some of the states where the laws regulating trust companies are at present far from ideal. In the opinion of your committee a new draft should be prepared on the limited lines that it has indicated rather than that the draft referred to it for consideration should be amended. Such a draft should be the result of most careful study in its preparation, and this it has not been possible for your committee to expend during the limited time at its command.

It suggests, therefore, that it be discharged and that the duty imposed upon it be assumed

CITY NATIONAL BANK, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA

City National Bank of Council Bluffs, Ia., has made a very strong showing during the short period of its existence. Established only in 1909, it now has close to a million in deposits. The capital stock amounts to $120,000, with surplus and undivided profits of $40,000. T. G. Turner is president of this progressive institution; J. G. Wadsworth and Oscar Keeline are vice-presidents and Charles R. Hannan, Jr., is the cashier. Mr. Hannan is a son of the late Charles R. Hannan, who from 1885 up to the time of his death was very prominently identified with the banking interests of Iowa, having been president of the state association, a member of the executive council of the A. B. A. and a potential factor in the establishment of the group system in the state. The younger Mr. Hannan recently was elected treasurer of the Iowa Bankers Association. Through his extensive banking experience, he is well equipped to look after its finances. He is one of the younger members of the banking fraternity. His marked aggressiveness and pleasing personality have been largely instrumental in placing the City National in the foremost rank of progressive, up-to-date Iowa banks.

CHANGES IN FARGO BANK

Carrying out the original plan when the Northern Savings Bank of Fargo, N. D., was organized an important change in Fargo banking circles was effected recently, wherein H. P. Beckwith, treasurer, acquired the interests in that institution of Geo. H. Hollister, J. G. Thompson at the same time disposing of his interests in the Northern Trust Company to them. F. F. Grant, now vice-president of the savings bank, will become its president and Mr. Beckwith will become its vice-president and managing officer, devoting his entire time to the bank, while Mr. Hollister continues as president of the trust company, and he and Mr. Clemens, the secretary, will devote their entire time to that institution. The directorate of both the bank and the trust company will practically remain as heretofore and for the present both institutions will occupy the same banking room, No. 62 Broadway.

The Northern Savings and Northern Trust have each shown a remarkable growth since organization and now rank exceptionally high in the banking circles of Fargo and the state, and the large increase in business of both is responsible for the above change. The capital stock of the savings bank will be increased to $100,000 in the near future in order to more properly care for its fast increasing business.

NEW LORIMER BANK ORGANIZED

It is reported that the organization of the LaSalle Street Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago practically is completed. The new bank is to be run in connection with the LaSalle Street National Bank of which William Lorimer is president. Both institutions will have their quarters in the Farwell Trust Building, 226 South LaSalle Street. It is said that the real estate transaction will involve about $500,000. The capital stock of the new institution will be $1,000,000, the same as that of the national bank. The subscription price is to be $125, which will create a surplus of $250,000. The organization of the new bank is in conformity with the original ideas of the founders of the national institution. When a charter for the latter was taken out they also secured one for a state bank. It is said that stockholders of the national bank have approved the proposition, and have agreed to take an amount of stock in the state bank equal to their holdings in the national. The officers of the new institution probably will be the same as those in the national bank.

Clearing House Section

The clearing house section of the A. B. A. met in private dining room S, convention hall floor, Hotel Ponchartrain, on Wednesday and Thursday mornings, and was called to order by President Charles A. Ruggles of Boston. The invocation was delivered by the Rev. Maurice Penfield Fikes, pastor of the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church, Detroit, and the address of welcome was delivered by James T. Keena, counsel for the Peoples State Bank; the response was made by Walter H. Bennett, vice-president of the American Exchange National of New York. The annual address of President Ruggles was followed by committee reports and action thereon, and by the report of Secretary O. Howard Wolfe. C. R. McKay of the First National of Chicago, chairman of the numerical committee, led a discussion of the numerical system. Sol. Wexler, vice-president of the Whitney Central National of New Orleans, talked on the functions of the modern clearing house. On Thursday there was a discussion of the collection of country checks through the clearing house, led by Jerome Thralls, manager of the Kansas City Clearing House. This was followed by a paper on uniform clearing house reports and bank transactions, led by Frank Greene, managing editor, the Bradstreet Company, New York. The roll was called by cities. After the installation of officers the session adjourned, and was followed by a meeting of the executive committee, for the purpose of selecting its chairman and secretary of the section.

Address of President Charles A. Ruggles

A detailed account of the work and the results accomplished by this section the past year will be rendered by the secretary and the several committees, but it is the pleasure of the president to refer briefly to the various topics which have been presented for discussion and action. By many this is considered the most important section in the association, and it is quite certain that many important movements to facilitate the conduct and safeguard the interests of banking have had their origin with or have been referred to this section for consideration.

Perhaps the most important of these is the examination of banks by an official especially appointed and under the control of the several clearing house associations. It was hoped the comptroller of the currency would accept an invitation extended to him to address the section on this important subject at the present session. In declining he writes: "My views on the subject of clearing house bank examinations have been clearly set out in a letter sent to all clearing house associations in the United States. I do not believe that anything I could

CHAS. A. RUGGLES
Boston, Massachusetts
President Clearing House Section

say would add any force to that letter or have any additional effect."

In this connection to quote from his expressed views on this topic may be of interest:

"I strongly favor the plan, having urged its adoption in reserve cities especially, and, in urging it, have stated that one of the greatest forces to-day for safe and conservative banking is a well-organized clearing house association with comprehensive and efficient by-laws, having its own examiner to report directly to it any bad or dangerous condition found in any bank in the association.

"There is a corps of examiners, national and state, reliable, hard-working, conscientious men, doing the very best in their power under the various laws under which they work to ascertain the exact conditions in all of these banks and report them to the state superintendents and to the comptroller. The appointment of the clearing house examiners does not mean that these men are not doing their work well—for they are. But the clearing house committee does not have access to their reports and wants its own examiner to tell what the exact conditions are, and if they are bad the effective by-laws under which the banks in the clearing house are federated give the clearing house committee ample power to correct bad banking conditions very promptly.

"I believe that the whole plan of clearing house examinations can be very much improved and better results obtained by a wider scope of co-operation that now exists. The plan of co-operation now extends to practically a matter of clerical help between the national bank examiner and the clearing house examiner. In other words, if the clearing house examiner is in need of clerical help he draws upon the force of the national bank examiner and vice versa; in addition the clearing house examiner and the national and state examiners often go into a bank at the same time in order to avoid an almost continuous upset of the bank's business. I would go very much further than this. The national bank examiner, the state examiner and the clearing house examiner should consult very fully as to the condition of any bank whose condition was not satisfactory, and supplementing and carrying out this plan of co-operation, the clearing house committee and the state supervisor of banks should confer about a bank, if it should be a state bank, and the comptroller of the currency and the clearing house committee should have a like conference if the bank be a national bank. If the condition of a national bank is not good a conference should be had at once between the national bank examiner and the clearing house committee, and if the condition warranted it a conference should be held between the comptroller and the clearing house committee. If a state bank were involved, then a conference should be held between the state bank examiner and the clearing house committee, and, if conditions warranted it, ultimately between the clearing house committee and the state supervisor of banks. While this plan goes much further than any now in effect, it is the logical and businesslike way of handling the situation. It is workable and will bring about the very best results possible, provided that each of the parties involved will agree to co-operate."

lished, the quicker it becomes universal, the sooner will checks be collected and drafts issued on a more expeditious and scientific basis.

The subject of uniform reports of clearing house exchanges has received the consideration of the executive committee for several years, but owing to press of more important matters no definite action was taken until last year, when a special committee was appointed, who have given the question much time and thought, the result being that some fifteen clearing house associations have signified their intention to aid in establishing a uniform system of reports to this section, and as many more have the matter under consideration, with prospects of favorable action. In order that the work undertaken by this section may be carried to a successful conclusion, it is essential that the members give it their personal attention, and it is suggested that clearing house managers keep informed on all matters affecting the welfare of clearing house associations. It is more than probable that these associations will play an important part in the much-needed currency reform movement, which might be worked out by a system similar to that suggested for the exchange of checks, and it is therefore of the greatest importance that the administration of our clearing house associations be maintained at the highest standard.

Report of Executive Committee

John K. Ottley, Atlanta, Ga., as chairman, reported for the executive committee:

The detailed report of what has been done by the clearing house section will appear in full in the published proceedings of this body. I take this opportunity to urge upon you a study of the report. It is not lengthy and I believe you will find it interesting.

It will give you an idea of the definiteness with which the section is endeavoring to bring the banks of the country into closer and more mutually advantageous relations.

To this end, our attention has, during the past year, been centered on the development of the numerical system, the appointment of clearing house examiners, a system of uniform reports of clearings, and plans for securing uniformity in exchange charges on country checks.

The section also is trying to interest the fraternity generally in the organization of clearing houses, believing that the benefits of such organizations are very great even in towns where there are not more than three or four banks.

Whatever strengthens local banking interests adds necessarily to the influence and usefulness of this association. And the converse of the proposition is also true. With this in mind, your clearing house section believes that it can render the association no more valuable service than to develop a spirit of active co-operation and to awaken a desire among the banks of all our towns and cities for the adoption of such forms of organization and such methods as have been successfully worked out and will secure the most harmonious and profitable results.

Frank Greene on Bank Clearings; Uniformity Urged in Compilation

As my memory goes back to a time twenty-six years ago, when there were only thirty-two clearing houses in Bradstreet's American list, and I face the representatives of 128 cities now possessing clearing houses, I become more and more certain that, as a one time "infant industry," the clearing house has made good in a most surprising way. I do not now speak of the ever-widening beneficial purposes served by your organizations, their solidarity in time of stress, their effectual welding of strengthen the movement and add to the list of seventeen principal clearing house associations which now employ special examiners.

The question of how to facilitate collections as well as to reduce the cost of making them may be said to be improving with age. It has been a subject of general discussion by bankers in all sections of the country during the past year, and success has followed the efforts put forth in Atlanta, Boston, Kansas City, Macon and Nashville as well as in many smaller cities where the clearing house acts as collecting agent. The next step would seem to be to devise a plan to bring about harmonious action between competing centers, when favorable results would be certain to follow, and the solution of the question of exchange charges would be reached; the several central cities or zones could exchange items with each other on terms that greatly would reduce the cost as compared with the methods now in vogue, and also would enable the banker more readily to analyze his accounts.

The numerical system has made remarkable progress the past year, and nearly eight thousand banks now are using the numbers to be found in the key issued a year ago. Mainly through the efforts of the numerical committee, ably assisted by clearing house associations and local committees organized for this purpose in all the principal cities, this result has been attained. Chapters of the American Institute of Banking also have sent out literature urging its adoption, with highly satisfactory returns. It is estimated that between twelve and fifteen million checks per day are now being handled numerically. Progression being the order of the day, these numbers not only should appear on checks and drafts but also on all stationery, business cards and advertisements. The system having been proved a distinct success and its permanency estab-banking power for the public good, or their grouping of scattered units in harmonious circles for the better protection of the commercial fabric. I am here speaking of clearing houses as a source of public information, as producers of measures of trade volume, and of financial progress along an infinite variety of lines. A plea for standardization of statistics has, I submit, a good basis in the already ascertained data of past progress, and in the confident conviction that there still is a widespread need for the setting up of reliable trade signposts for the future.

In May, 1886, Bradstreet's first began the collection of weekly returns of bank clearings or, as they sometimes are called, exchanges. The field was then not an untried one. Several journals were collecting and publishing statistics of bank clearings. Bradstreet's effort was to collect them on Friday and publish them on Saturday of each week. This, for a country of the size of ours, was a large undertaking. The writer recalls well when the change was made closing the week on Thursday. In the last half of 1891 the Boston Post, which had for years collected returns for the week ending Saturday and published them on Monday, stopped this work. The writer likewise remembers calling on the press association managers and offering them Bradstreet's figures to take the place of those compiled by the Boston Post. Since then Bradstreet's weekly returns have appeared regularly on Saturdays in the country's leading newspapers.

A word now as to the part the press associations and newspapers play in the dissemination of this information, their chief, indeed their only, reward being the consciousness of a public duty done. I need hardly tell you that the work of carrying these returns out to the country, as of collecting and compiling them and their accompanying percentages, has grown with the years and with the starting of new statistical producing centers. Special efforts have been necessary both on the part of Bradstreet's and on the part of the news associations to handle this matter. New clearing houses are clamoring for admission to the list, and as there are fully 225 cities of the United States with a population of at least 25,000 inhabitants, the possibilities in the matter of future organization of clearing houses and this by-product of theirs, clearing statistics, seem simply boundless. Those of us who were present before this infant threw off its swaddling clothes sometimes are appalled at the problem that the prompt compilation of these returns present for the future.

As to the system followed by Bradstreet's in collecting and disseminating these returns, I would say that we request managers of the clearing houses to telegraph the weekly clearings, one side of the account only being asked for, each Thursday night to the editor of Bradstreet's at New York. These are received Friday morning, the percentage of increase or decrease from the like week a year ago is calculated, and totals are made. The figures then are set up in type, proofs are pulled, late arrivals, of which there always are some, are inserted, and clean proofs are given to representatives of the various press associations at the latest at 3 P. M. on Friday. That night the statistics pass over the wires to hundreds of newspaper offices, and the next day readers of the Saturday morning newspapers may see what their cities have done in the past week in a financial way.

As a measure of the pulse-beat of finance week by week, month by month and year by year, there is nothing like this compiled, distributed and published in any other country in the world. It is, of course, needless to lay emphasis upon the desirability of uniformity in the compilation of such statistics, whether they are regarded as a mere statistical record, or, as in the case of cities which are enjoying great banking activity, when they develop into eagerly sought advertising matter showing marvelous business growth.

I am afraid that this paper already has passed the bounds of your patience, but I cannot close without making a plea for intelligent care in compilation of these and other immensely valuable indices of financial and commercial progress. Whatever improvements you may decide upon as fitting for showing true banking volume as opposed to mere exchanges at the clearing houses only, I would suggest that the collection of clearings returns themselves be not abandoned. That the records of the past themselves are of great value goes without question. That at the same time a truer measure of real financial movement may be compiled with only a trifling addition to the work of you bankers is, I think, easily to be conceded. As an outsider, not familiar with banking practice, it seems to me that a total of the checks paid by a bank in the course of a day or week or month, might, perhaps, furnish an easily compilable measure of business. This is only a suggestion. Of course, we believe now, and we have worked hard in the past to have the view accepted, that the doubling of the sums of items simply results in useless stuffing of totals that bring the compilations as a whole into disrepute. Summed up, the situation seems to be something like this: Clearings, exchanges, call them what you will, must continue to be compiled as long as clearing houses endure, and as long as you gentlemen meet and exchange checks, drafts, etc. Returns of total bank business may be compiled in the future in any way to be agreed upon by you. The two different sets of figures can, and no doubt will, furnish interesting comparisons, for one thing as to the extent that a labor-saving institution, such as a clearing house, after all, is, renders easier and safer and more expeditious the settlements between banks. Here it may be possible to draw a sharp line between the purely credit side of banking as opposed to the total of all, including cash, business. Thus the two sets of figures will complement each other, and both will be highly desirable of ascertainment. In your hands, at all events, rests the future of true banking statistics. As reporters of facts in trade and finance, we would only plead for the preservation of bank clearings returns as they have been compiled at most of the large cities, one side of the account—say the total of checks presented at the clearing house for exchange—being counted, because of the value of these returns over the years. As for any new returns of business that may be compiled, we simply would ask that whatever is agreed upon be standardized. Given this, we count confidently upon an enrichment of the business world by the preservation of the many existing true statistical measures of progress, and the addition thereto of others which are destined to become more valuable as the numbers of your clearing houses increase and your association and its members grow in wealth, in power and in public service.

Savings Bank Section

The savings bank sessions of the A. B. A. were held Wednesday and Thursday mornings in the green parlor, convention hall floor, Hotel Ponchartrain. After the invocation by the Rt. Rev. Edward D. Kelly, auxiliary bishop of Detroit, greetings were extended by William Livingstone, president of the Dime Savings Bank, Detroit, and president of the A. B. A. After the annual address of President Alfred L. Aiken, reports were heard from the secretary and from committees. Theodore L. Weed, director of the postal savings system of the United States, delivered an address, the subject of which was "The Postal Savings Bank and the Banks." Edwin Chamberlain vice-president of the San Antonio Land and Trust Company, talked on European land and rural credit facilities. Mr. Chamberlain has but recently returned from a tour of Europe, where he has been investigating this subject, and his remarks were extremely interesting. John J. Pulleyn, comptroller Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, New York, talked on the savings bank and the community. After the election and installation of officers for the ensuing year, adjournment was taken. Immediately after the adjournment a meeting of the executive committee was held.

Address of Alfred L. Aiken

It is a pleasure to report the continued growth of our section through the tenth year of its existence. Starting from modest beginnings in 1902, the savings bank section has grown steadily until it now has a total membership of over 2,000. The detailed figures of this growth will be duly reported in the secretary's report at a later time in the convention, but the section has justified its existence as measured by standards other than by the mere matter of membership. Ever since its organization it not only has stood for whatever was good and sound and conservative in banking affairs, but it also has enabled its members to profit by close personal contact and interchange of personal experiences as varied as the various sections of the country.

The usual meetings of the executive committees have been held and have been well attended with profit to the section and to the members of the committees. The chairman, Mr. Sartori, later will report in detail of the committee's doings.

During the past year, the section has seen a change in the personnel of its central office staff, as W. H. Kniffin, our former secretary, resigned some months ago to accept a position with the Onondaga County Savings Bank of Syracuse, N. Y. No better evidence of the efficiency of Mr. Kniffin's services can be asked for than his selection for such a responsible position as that which he now occupies. The section is under distinct obligation to him for all that he did to increase its usefulness and further its growth. We have been most fortunate in obtaining as his successor, E. G. McWilliam, for some years connected with the Irving Savings Bank of New York, and actively and successfully interested in the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Banking. He already has demonstrated that he will prove a worthy successor to the late Mr. Hanhart and Mr. Kniffin.

The activities of the various committees of the section will be reported by their chairmen.

In this connection I would earnestly commend the work of the standing law committee of the general association, on which we are well represented. The committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. Jay, has made a most thorough and exhaustive inquiry into the matter of the segregation of savings deposits and I would commend to you a careful consideration of their report. The fact that the matter is not to be pressed to a definite conclusion is no evidence of lack of general interest. It is but natural that such a serious change for banks, that are not at present under the jurisdiction of a segregation law, should meet with serious opposition, but we believe that this campaign of education will in the end prove effective. The rapidly growing feeling of moral and social responsibility that is so much in evidence in our political and economic life, must of necessity work in favor of this cause and will bring home to the bankers of the country a growing feeling of peculiar responsibility as to the custody of the savings of the thrifty wage-earners who, in these extravagant times, have had the moral strength to save something from their earnings. They are obviously entitled, both because of their worthy endeavor and because of their lack of experience in such matters, to peculiar consideration.

ALFRED L. AIKEN
Worcester, Massachusetts
President Savings Bank Section

I would also call your attention to the campaign of education in matters pertaining to the encouragement of thrift which the association is carrying on under the supervision of the committee on methods and systems, and the committee on school savings banks. Such a campaign should be of far-reaching influence and should do much to encourage the practices for which we all stand.

It is unfortunate that political conditions have been such the past year as to make it impossible to achieve anything in the way of currency legislation. The campaign for such improvement has, however, but just begun, and I would bespeak most earnest co-operation from all the members of this section to the end that our banking system may be brought to a condition that will meet the demands of present business and economic needs. This question is broader than one of sections, and broader than one simply of banking, and it behooves us, one and all as good citizens, to put our shoulders to the wheel to do what we can to see that satisfactory banking and currency legislation is enacted at the earliest possible date.

It is but fitting in ending my term of service as president of the section that I should express my deep appreciation of the uniform courtesy and help extended to me, not only by the members of the various committees and the executive committee, but by the members of the section as well.

Report of Committee on Methods and Systems

V. A. Lersner, assistant cashier Williamsburg Savings Bank, Brooklyn, N. Y., as chairman, reported for the committee on methods and systems. Three matters have occupied the attention of the committee during the past year; namely, the savings bank centennial in 1916, the mechanical methods employed by savings banks of different size in handling their everyday transactions, and the campaign of education which was referred to the committee by the executive committee of the section at Briarcliff last May.

It is believed that active work in regard to the centennial should be deferred until 1914, but that this important subject should be continually referred to some committee who will keep it before the members. The various methods adopted by certain banks in handling savings deposits and withdrawals were gone into in detail.

Preliminary steps have been taken toward instituting a campaign for education in savings banking and thrift among the people throughout the United States. It is believed that the economic conditions of the country cannot be appreciably improved until the general thrift is far greater and the acknowledged extravagance of the people is curtailed. As a starter letters were sent out to members of the section requesting their views on the subject and inviting any suggestions which they might have to offer. About half of the letters received in reply, while commending the movement, did not contain any suggestions; the others detailed numerous ways in which this work might be accomplished. The hope was expressed that this work might be pushed forward by the committee to be appointed for the ensuing year. It was recommended that the committee be authorized to perfect a working organization in every state in the Union by appointing, or through state associations securing the appointment of, a committee in each state for the purpose of devising ways and means of prosecuting the work in a manner best adapted to the respective localities.

Address of John J. Pulleyn

No more important element in the economic life of the country exists than the resourcefulness, individual independence and character represented by the four and one-quarter billions of dollars on deposit in the savings institutions of these United States. This is true both in their bearing on the character and worth of the depositor as an American citizen and on the nature of the service performed by these savings in the hands of those who are entrusted with the conduct of these banks of the people. And if the men charged with the welfare of these institutions do not become awake to changing conditions, these institutions may lose much of these funds, now absolutely free from the combination of capital interests and serving the depositor solely. The loss in that contingency would be primarily a community loss.

To define this contingency and to point out the needs of the situation become a duty to one who can speak on savings banks. The desirability of applying the laws of New York to other states, the question as to the rate of dividend to be paid, the amount of surplus required as absolutely essential, the need of co-operation of mutual and stock banks and the necessity of watching banking legislation of all kinds are among the factors in a discussion of the problem now before savings bank officials. Do they realize for what the great system under their control stands? Are they mindful of the public's interest when they state that 3 or 3½ per cent is all the people should receive as interest on their deposits? Should

A comprehensive view of the situation demands an orderly statement of the origin and development of the problem. First, in order, is needed a short statement of the beginnings and purposes of savings institutions, together with their influence in inculcating thrift, as becomes the banks of the people. The evolution of these institutions to their present day status and their four and one-quarter billions of dollars on deposit come next, together with a brief classification showing how these deposits are largely concentrated in the states with the most careful laws and particularly in New York and Massachusetts. The duty of safeguarding deposits, the nature and conditions of the rate of dividend or interest paid upon deposits and the creation of surplus as a margin of safety need to be treated in turn, after which comes the high desirability of progressive management, facing frankly such questions as the advisability of branch banks and the function of postal savings. The benefits to the neighborhood and to the country in the investment of savings funds in local improvement liens and in public securities must be enumerated and discussed with reference to what would be the economic meaning of a transfer of these funds to the melting pots of the financial centers of the country, because savings bank officials were not alert to their public duty in its broader terms affecting the sound development of the national wealth and welfare. Foreign investment methods which might be imitated in the United States to the detriment of savings bank deposits require analysis, as does the delicate question of how far trustees of savings institutions are awake to the possible perils of new tendencies, perhaps inimical to the banks in their care. A few carefully framed queries to trustees, leaving the answers to be made by themselves, ought to suffice. Then the relation of conservative laws to strong savings institutions should be exhibited in the light of the remarkable illustration afforded by New York State. These points discussed in this order will give the problem and the remedy.

Savings banks or institutions for savings are of comparatively modern origin, both in Europe and America. They had their beginnings in efforts to better the conditions of the poor. In large part their purposes were in the nature of a charity, and the consequence is that they have come to be considered philanthropic or eleemosynary institutions.

The first savings bank of which we know in authentic manner was established in England in 1804. The first to be chartered in America was started in Philadelphia in 1816, the second in Boston in 1817, and the third in New York in 1819.

Regardless of the primary purposes of the founders, these institutions have in their results outgrown their early character. To-day they take their proud place in the front rank of the monetary powers of the country. In this development they have retained the provi-dent and beneficent features characteristic of their first years, so that to-day in them may be found the savings of the humblest toiler with his hard earned, carefully saved pennies, as well as the funds of the frugal man who resists temptation to indulgences that he may put safely away the means which would have given him improvident luxury.

In a spirit of justice, therefore, to the millions of depositors savings banks should be regarded no longer as charitable institutions, but as banks of the people. Depositors in these institutions are not objects of charity, but the bone and sinew of our people, whose accumulations we point to with pride as evidences of our national growth and prosperity. They are producers of wealth through labor effectively applied. They consume what they require. Their surplus is laid aside as an accumulating fund for future investment. Thus are the savings banks proud monuments, deserving well of the fostering care of the state.

Four and one-quarter billions of dollars are on deposit among the savings banks of the United States, and this vast sum represents the fruits of toil, the evidence of power, industry, thrift and independence.

the natural economic order, savings banks have far outgrown in significance, usefulness and power the comparatively narrow scope and purpose of their original intent. They have become an important factor in our political economy. Having no special rights nor privileges, they effect no combinations of capital and they have their existence only in their original capacity. They become public benefactors. Yet they acquire no favors and have no monopoly of savings business. Their depositor is a better citizen, neighbor and friend because of the restraint imposed upon him by the possession of property. His savings are not merely deposited. They are invested in his behalf in the bonds of the United States, in the bonds of his own state or town or county or municipality, in the bonds of well-conducted railroads, or in mortgage loans on real estate in his own city.

Is any local improvement projected? The savings bank is often the capitalist who advances the necessary funds. How many public or corporate enterprises have been carried to successful completion through the agency of savings we may never know, but the character and kind of securities in which the moneys of savings banks are invested will be a suggestive indication of the power of these institutions in promoting public improvements and in aiding in the discharge of public obligation. The mechanic and the artisan have at the beginnings of their labor possessed the ambition to succeed in life and they have contributed out of their weekly wage a sum, no matter how small, to establish a fund which some day would mean a capital large enough to enable them to branch out into business for themselves. Most of the savings banks number among their depositors men who began in this way, who are successful largely to-day and who as a matter of sentiment retain a sum of money on deposit with the bank where they made their start.

Statistics show that 80 per cent of all the deposits are in the Eastern banks and 20 per cent scattered over a vast territory, thus demonstrating that adequate facilities are not provided for a large proportion of our people. In the State of New York with its most carefully guarded savings bank law 40 per cent of the savings of the people of the United States is deposited. This important fact is due to the confidence inspired by a good law faithfully executed. The significance of this fact is accentuated by the realization that about one-fifth of the wealth of the Union and not quite one-twelfth of the voting population are in New York State.

Under the stringent provisions of the New York law and the extensive savings facilities accorded, we have an illustration of the best thus far provided for the safety of the accumulations of the people and because of such features of safety and convenience the savings banks of the state are liberally patronized by the masses.

Massachusetts ranks next to New York in excellence of statutory provisions relating to savings institutions, and as result of the confidence thereby inspired, such banks in that state hold one-fifth of the aggregate of all the savings deposits in the banks of the United States.

The people of New York and Massachusetts have on deposit in savings banks something more than 60 per cent of all the savings deposits in all the country.

The New England states generally have very carefully guarded statutes with reference to savings banks, because institutions of this kind there, and likewise in New York, are organized on what is known in common parlance as "the old style,"—that is, institutions organized under the law without capital, purely mutual and managed by trustees who serve without compensation. According to the intent of the law in these states, depositors should receive all the earnings less necessary expenses of administration.

In the eastern section of the United States almost every other person has a savings account. In the Middle West and far western states probably one in 500 of the population has a savings bank book.

In these outside sections we find savings banks organized as stock companies, where the interest of the depositor is equal to that of a stockholder and where the depositor secures a fair rate of dividend.

Outside of New England, New York, and a few other states we find statutory safeguards less carefully thrown about the depositor or laws not sufficiently strong to protect this great trust. Undoubtedly in other locations savings banks are as conservatively managed and conducted on as sound and safe a basis as in New York or New England.

Outside the sections discussed and in sparsely settled regions private capital cannot be expected to establish and maintain savings institutions for the mere purpose of encouraging habits of thrift among the community. Capital seeking investment in any profit-yielding venture does not as a rule adopt benevolence as a primary motive.

Since it is conceded that savings facilities, coupled with confidence in the banks, will encourage thrift, keep money in circulation, insure more home comforts and develop better class citizenship, the question naturally arises as to why an effort should be made to extend the beneficent influence of sound savings institutions to the large percentage of our population which does not now enjoy the advantages common to those residing in or near the great centers of population.

The duty of the state or federal government is to provide safeguards for the protection of the depositors of chartered savings banks and postal savings to the full amount of their claims. Every dollar deposited, together with what that dollar earns, must be held as a sacred trust, and no laxity in this or in the administration of the law can suffer it to become a loss.

The increase and development of this great business should be guarded by wise enactments and by rigid and careful supervision. The great body and mass of patrons of these banks are poor, and their deposits are the sole accumulation they could make during years of toil and privation. There are exceptional cases here and there of persons of ample means who are depositors but the number of such accounts is comparatively low. In a number of institutions, in the amount of pecuniary interest involved, in the character and ability of those interested and in point of honest and capable administration savings banks are on a par with every other moneyed institution or interest in the state or country. Their claim to wise, considerate and conservative legislation embracing rigid and thorough censorship of their affairs must not be denied.

If the conduct of the affairs of savings banks were not marked by prudence and strict integrity they could not have commanded the generous confidence of the people or grown to their present proportions, making them relatively one of the largest monetary groups in the United States.

Whatever faults are found in the management of savings banks, outside the human element, are due to the exercise of powers conferred by inconsiderate legislation. The great good which these institutions are doing in behalf of great public interests—federal, state, municipal and local—should not be impaired now or in the future, nor should the confidence of the public be impaired or undermined. If there could be shown to exist errors in management or direction, or if the safety of the banks were jeopardized by too liberal a distribution of profits the safest and most expedient method of correcting such defective condition would be through the intervention of the state executive, acting through his commissioner of banks, armed with the proper authority and charged with the obligation to correct the errors at once.

The theory of every savings bank is that so long as it is solvent all the depositors will not want their money at the same time, and that a large portion of the deposits will be required to be kept permanently invested to meet the running expenses and interest to depositors.

Thus the greater the freedom from petty restrictions upon the judgment of officers and the trustees of these institutions the more beneficent the results, so long as the fundamental laws of the state adequately safeguard solvency and provide for sufficient supervision of the comparatively unrestrained judgment of the men entrusted with the conduct of the banks.

Legislation limiting the amount of dividends would result in injustice to depositors and is entirely against the spirit of the law creating mutual savings institutions. But compulsory law as to the amount of surplus each bank should maintain would be entirely consistent with public policy.

The problem of dividends and surplus is engaging the best thought in New York state and a solution of the problem may be found in a compulsory regulation of the surplus required of each individual institution. The active competition for savings accounts by national and state banks and trust companies has placed the savings institutions at a disadvantage, since to hold their deposits a rate of dividend on a par with the other monetary institutions is needed.

Notwithstanding legislation prohibiting other than savings banks from advertising as savings institutions, an evasion of the law gives these banks the opportunity of obtaining savings accounts under the title of special interest accounts and interest departments. Unless New York state should insist on legislation compelling savings institutions by statute to maintain a 10 per cent surplus regardless of the judgment of the trustees, the result cannot be foreseen. But the mutual savings bank would be finally forced out of business, and the stock savings bank become the bank of the future, unless the trustees of the mutual banks should then come to a realization that a standard surplus of 10 per cent must be maintained. The intent of the law regarding mutual banks is that depositors shall receive all the earnings less the necessary expenses of administration, but it lacks force as a compelling influence in building up and maintaining surplus.

The problem in regard to surplus was much accentuated by the prosperous times following the close of the war with Spain, when savings banks deposits within four years increased about 11½ per cent. At the same time an economie tendency toward higher rates of interest the world over set in, thus bringing about a fall in the market value of outstanding investment securities. While this decline bore no relation to the intrinsic merit of the bond, this fall was accompanied by an additional increase in savings bank deposits. Inasmuch as these banks are not allowed to retain their funds in idleness awaiting the favorable market, the statutory requirements to invest at once compelled the purchase of bonds in a constantly falling market. On the first of July last year deposits had increased to such a point that by further reason of the fall in bond prices the margin of safety had declined from 186-10 per cent to 716-100 per cent of the liabilities in a period of eighteen years. In 1909 and again in 1910 Superintendent Cheney of the New York state banking department commented upon the growing unsoundness of the situation and the need for very serious consideration of remedial plans.

The margin of safety for deposits is of more importance than the rate of dividend and that which tends to preserve and still further strengthen the security of deposits is of more primary value to the genuine savings bank depositor than the income. The average savings bank account in New York state last January was $530.60 and the difference between 3½ and 4 per cent on that amount is only $2.65 a year.

The management of savings banks has not yet reached the highest state of efficiency, neither have savings banks throughout the United States yet realized the highest possibilities of these institutions.

Administration should be progressive. To that end a system under more uniform laws should be established and a more sympathetic feeling fostered in all the states, so that the best features of the laws and the practical rules of management might be made the common property of all. Progress then would be steady and wholly beneficial.

Each state should organize its system under the standard of New York experience. The individual banks should form groups, just as national and state banks are doing at the present day. After the formation of state associations and a national body the individual bank would remain the unit.

To start a savings bank, establish it in public confidence and build up its business to the point where its deposits make an impressive total, demand, besides a favorable field of operation, strict economy and careful attention and the exercise of wise judgment on the part of its management.

Branch banks were first considered in New York state about 1904, and the banking department then considered it feasible to establish branches in the counties throughout the state where no savings bank existed as a benefit to the community. Sparsely settled sections are not attractive fields for new endeavors and profits would not warrant operation. The strength of savings institutions may be impaired by the additional liability incurred by establishing branches. The cost of obtaining business and maintaining branches might not compensate either the mutual or the stock bank, and, further, the confidence of a sound, going concern may be jeopardized by this additional liability. It would be better to extend the facilities in all states for the convenience of the people and attract deposits before branching out in thinly peopled districts. Let the first consideration be the security of the savings. The less the expense of office maintenance the smaller the necessary initial drain upon the earnings of the deposits.

sesses a long record of vigilance, good judgment in handling investments and economy of management should not be curbed in dividend rates or hampered in its admirable and loyal service to its depositors, because some other savings banks have not done so well and are not in so good a condition. The rate of interest should be based upon the net earnings of any six months' period, after deducting a reasonable sum to maintain a 10 per cent surplus, and the net profits distributed to depositors. The maximum interest rate of 5 per cent named in the New York state law is as much of a barrier as should be erected. It can hardly be contended that for a relatively weak bank to have to lower its interest rate below that of its stronger competitor injures the smaller bank. The bank is not injured. Depositors who withdraw are paid in full, so that they are not injured. There is that much less liability for the bank.

The growth and prosperity of the postal savings bank is a sure indication that part of these vast deposits will some day find their way into the state savings bank. The postal savings offices thus will become feeders to the previously existing institutions. The depositor who hoards and hides his savings, because of lack of knowledge of the savings bank system, gradually will become educated to the fact that this money can command a higher earning rate than that paid by the government postals. Whatever opposition existed to the establishment of these postals by banking institutions generally arose from a misunderstanding of their purposes or from purely selfish motives. This opposition is now practically eliminated. No other agency could restore to the channels of trade the great hoard of money known to be in hiding. Many of the foreigners are ignorant of our language and institutions, and have no knowledge of the standing and responsibility of our banking system, and they will not deposit in our national or state banks. This class is timid and has faith only in government institutions and they must have a government depository. The absolute guarantee of safety furnished by the United States government has made a strong appeal to thousands who never had made use of the state savings banks. None of the postal savings bank deposits has been gained at the expense of the regular savings banks. The margin of safety between assets and liabilities to attract these postal depositors to the savings bank always must be evidently sufficient to assure the depositor that his account can be liquidated at any time beyond any doubt.

In France the average savings bank account figures hardly $75, but the Frenchman buys a government security, in small denomination, where the foreigner here opens a savings account, provided he has overcome his timidity as to any but government institutions. In the absence of ability to put his savings directly into the gilt-edged securities of the country, his course of action likely is to prove that the postal savings not only will increase thrift where it is most needed but will in turn prove to be a feeder to the savings banks.

The tendency to thrift as exhibited by savings bank deposits among the working classes is far more marked in the United States than in Germany, Great Britain, Austria-Hungary or France. For instance, in the United States in 1908 there were about $3,660,000,000 on deposit in savings banks and the average deposit was $420. In 1905 Germany had about $3,016,000,000 of savings deposits and an average deposit of $168. In Austria-Hungary in 1906 there were deposits of $1,086,000,000 and an average of $191, in the United Kingdom in 1907 deposits of $1,020,000,000 and an average of $82, and in France $921,000,000 of deposits averaging $74 per individual account.

Do the trustees of savings banks realize the obligations imposed upon them?

Have they a general knowledge of the extent of the New York standard investment law of 1906 with its automatic workings?

Do they fulfill their whole duty when they declare 3 to 3½ per cent interest is sufficient for the depositor to receive on the funds which he voluntarily brings to the bank?

Banking by mail is one outcome of conveniences which custom and time have found necessary. It began by a depositor moving away from the city in which he deposited. In his new locality he lacked banking facilities and bethought himself of his New York bank where his account was formerly kept. This out-of-town mail business has grown among the larger class of institutions. The cost of doing this business is practically nil at present.

There is also a desirable tendency in some large corporations to give their employees a savings bank book containing a credit of his share of the profits of the corporation.

The enactment of a general law in each of the several states of the Union for the conformity of savings bank charters to one statute, for uniformity in investments, for periodical examinations and semiannual reports is needed. The New York law is admirably desirable investments for the deposits of the thrifty should thereby hold a right beyond comparison with any other railroad corporation in its title to the confidence of the community.

Previous to this amendment to the New York state banking law in 1906, any syndicate or group of men could control a large block of railway bonds and then apply to the state to legalize the issue for investment of savings funds. The effect of the amendment was to standardize investments. The provisions of the law are automatic in their workings, in that the new general statute does away with the continually recurring need of going to the legislature in regard to specific securities.

There is a limit imposed on the proportion of its funds which a savings institution may place in railway bonds in New York. Not more than 25 per cent of the assets may be loaned or invested in railway bonds, nor more than 10 per cent in the bonds of a New York railway corporation or another railway corporation controlled and operated by a New York company, nor more than 5 per cent in the bonds of any other railway corporation.

Throughout the provisions of the banking law of the state of New York it has been borne in mind that savings banks exist there in order to encourage thrift and to inculcate the spirit of saving in the hearts of the working classes. That the resources of these institu-

BANK OF COMMERCE, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Bank of Commerce, Little Rock, Ark., expects to move into its new building about December 1st. This building will be one of the handsomest and most convenient banking homes in the South. The bank was organized in 1891. At the time that the present management took charge, January, 3, 1898, the deposits amounted to $167,755.98.

with undivided profits of $3,107.19. On January 2d of this year the deposits had climbed up to $1,609,856.20, with undivided profits of $214,733.33. The capital stock is $100,000. Herman Kahn is president; L. B. Leigh, vice-president, and George W. Rogers, cashier. Mr. Rogers has been active in the affairs of the American Bankers Association for a number of years, being a member of its executive council.

INVESTMENT BANKERS ACQUIRE NEW OFFICES

The offices of the newly formed Investment Bankers Association will be located in the Harris Trust Building, Chicago. The quarters now are being fitted up, and it is expected that they will be ready for occupancy in about two weeks. President George B. Caldwell, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, has called a meeting of the board of governors to be held at the Union League Club September 20th, at which time the report of the membership committee will be received. It is expected that about 200 applications for membership will be passed upon at that time. The list of committee assignments probably will be announced. Investment bankers who fail to be admitted before October 1st will be required to pay $100 initiation fees in addition to the annual dues.

BANKER LETSON AT DETROIT

Frank H. Letson, cashier of the Enid (Okla.) National Bank, was one of the interesting figures at the Detroit convention this week. Mr. Letson started the bank in 1893 in a tent, when the town was nothing but a struggling prairie village surrounded by waste spaces. His capital was $5,000. To-day the bank has a handsome building with a capital of $100,000 and a surplus of $45,000. He said:

"The ranchmen and farmers used to ride up to the bank with their money in saddle-bags and deposit it in the tent bank. We had to take mighty careful precautions in those days to keep the bank from being robbed, but we built up a substantial home as soon as we could. So far as I know, this is the only bank in the country that had its beginning in a tent."

A charter has been issued to the Farmers Bank of Liberal, Mo., capitalized at $10,000. Its incorporators are H. E. Fletcher, J. C. Pinkerton, James B. Smith, M. Darlington and H. R. Gilbert.

conservative. Its only disadvantage is the discretionary power given to individual institutions to name what amount shall be placed in a surplus account to guard against unforeseen contingencies. The wisdom and expediency of creating and maintaining a large surplus fund must appeal to all sensible conservative trustees who witnessed the depressing circumstances surrounding the panicky condition which existed at the close of 1907.

Whilst the New York state law does not insist upon a stated reserve in the shape of surplus it allows earnings to accumulate after the payment of dividends to depositors to the extent of 15 per cent of the total amount on deposit based upon the par value of securities. When surplus earnings exceed this percentage the excess must be paid to depositors in the shape of an extra dividend.

In New York the policy of the state is one of rigid control and inspection, semiannual detailed reports, yearly examinations by the banking department, limitations of investments, no capital, no stock, and, above all, a thorough provision for the absolute security and safety of funds on deposit.

Sharply in contrast stand the laws in many states, where legislation as regards savings institutions rests upon the assumption that they are business undertakings for profit to stockholders and gives them a latitude of management common to banking as a business and a freedom to employ funds in profitable channels, such as are sought by commercial banks of discount. About one half of the states of the union, as a matter of fact, have no savings bank laws whatever.

In 1906 the state of New York adopted a new standard law for the investment of the funds of a savings bank. This law works automatically. Its enactment marked a long step forward in the progress of the sort of legislative supervision best calculated to strengthen savings institutions, not by restrictions tending to reduce them to the position of suppliants for needed powers, but by granting to them, within the limits defined by the state as necessary, freedom to invest without the approval of special legislation. That this freedom of investment has been granted by way of the establishment of a standard by which conservative investors of trust funds may safely judge securities in the market ought to serve still another purpose. The railroad corporations whose financial showing entitles their securities to be considered safe and Friday Session, A. B. A.

The second day's session of the A. B. A. proper was called to order by President Livingstone. After the invocation by the Rev. Frederick Deland Leete, D.D., LL.D., bishop Methodist Episcopal Church, Atlanta, Ga., the Hon. Charles A. Conant of New York City delivered a talk on land and agricultural credits, and was followed by Andrew M. Soule, president of the Georgia State College of Agricultural and Mechanical Arts, who talked on agricultural development and education. Joseph Chapman of Minneapolis reported for the committee on agricultural and financial development and education. In the afternoon reports were heard from the currency commission and from the federal legislative committee. Invitations were heard for the next convention and unfinished business disposed of. Communications were read from the executive council and the report from the committee on nominations received. After the installation of officers, adjournment was taken.

Address of Charles A. Conant

Charles A. Conant, author of "The Principles of Money" and "A History of Modern Banks of Issue," delivered an extremely interesting address on land and agricultural credit.

Mr. Conant believes that the world is facing a grave economic crisis. For centuries land was recognized as the chief and almost only source of production. During the wonderful nineteenth century the people seemed to lose sight of the important influence which the land and its product bear upon the welfare of the people. Economists now have awakened to the fact that population is increasing to the extent that cities now occupy the territory which once was farms, and that the demand for food products is more than overtaking the supply; that population is encroaching upon the farm lands and that even those lands still available for culture are lying fallow or are inadequately cultivated because the farmer lacks facilities for converting land values into negotiable credit.

Governor Herrick and the committee appointed by the American Bankers Association were complimented by the speaker because of their awakening to the fact that it is necessary to introduce into this country, so far as they are adaptable, the methods already employed in Europe for extending credit to the farmer. There are two methods in vogue over there, which are comparatively unknown in the United States; namely, the conversion of mortgage loans into a readily negotiable form by the issue of bonds and the system of loans to the farmer through mutual credit societies.

It is contended by some that land, the source of all production, is the best security which can be had for the issue of negotiable credit. The answer to this contention is that land is not quickly convertible. It therefore is dangerous for banks which bind themselves to meet their obligations on call, to loan money on land, for their redemption fund must consist of gold—not of land. A very old way of loaning money on land is to take a mortgage, but there are several objections to an ordinary mortgage. Europe has solved the problem of the ready transferability of mortgage loans and low rates of interest to the borrower by taking a leaf from the experience of the limited liability company in the issue of bonds and shares. In Europe the man who has money to lend upon mortgage is no longer obliged to make personal examination of the property, nor to risk his capital upon a single investment in non-transferable form. He has only to buy a negotiable bond,—coupon or registered, according to his preference,—which he can sell as readily as the bond of the government and with even less risk of fluctuation in its price. He has behind the bond not merely the land, but the pledge of a stock company that they have examined the property upon which loans have been made, and that all such properties are held in the aggregate as assets against the outstanding bonds, and that the company has in addition an adequate capital to cover any unexpected shrink-

tive to the borrower by a system of amortization by means of which they are paid off, and by the long terms over which the amortization extends. Most of the loans made are for long periods, so that the amortization charge is only a small addition to the annual interest. The rate of interest charged varies from 4.30 per cent to around 6 per cent. While it may not be possible to float bonds in this country at a rate so low as to permit loans upon mortgage at 4.30 per cent, still if 5 or 5½ per cent is charged, the additions for the amortization of the principal will not be materially greater than in the case of the loans made by the Credit Foncier of France. Various safeguards are prescribed by the Foncier for protecting the lender of money on these bonds in the way of restrictions as to the amount of money which shall be loaned on certain classes of property, and the capital or reserve fund, which in France must be equal to at least one-twentieth of the value of the bonds outstanding; and in addition to this there is the property on which the mortgages are placed. The rate of interest to the borrower is rigidly limited by the French law to the actual rate at which the bonds are sold to the public, plus an allowance of six-tenths of one per cent for administration and the profits of the company. It probably would not be desirable to fix such stringent restrictions for an American bank, because they might in some cases interfere with the flotation of bonds or the making of loans at convenient fractions. But with government supervision and a limitation upon the dividends paid to shareholders, it ought to be possible to extend to the farmer credit at a much lower rate than he pays under the existing system of disposing of mortgages to individual investors.

It is necessary, if there is to be a great central institution for mortgage loans, holding a special charter from the federal government, that it should have the double advantage of the supervision of the state and the efficiency of management of the man in business. To this end it probably would be necessary that the selection of the head of the bank should have the sanction of the president of the United States, that government directors should sit on the board and that there should be visitation and inspection by representatives of the comptroller of the currency, or other officers of the government. There naturally should be many restrictions imposed upon the manner of doing business—limitation of the rate of interest for loans, minimum ratio of capital to obligations, equitable distribution of the loans by territory, limitation of profits and required additions to surplus. Mr. Conant believes that if such an institution were to be established in this country, one of the principal defects to be avoided is centralization, the principal fault of the Credit Foncier of France. A large percentage of the loans made in France are upon urban property rather than that situated in the rural districts. It is believed that the primary purpose of such an institution in America should be the aid of the farmer and not the dwellers in the city. What the farmer needs is dynamic rather than static money, a current account upon which he can draw for short periods and special needs. With the ordinary commercial account every dollar may be placed on the active line of engagement, and the dollar not so engaged may be immediately returned to the bank and ceases to pay interest for the time it is not wanted, while a age in the value of the property behind its bonds.

The development of agricultural credit abroad has proceeded along several different lines. These may be defined roughly as the system of issuing mortgage bonds for long terms, as is done by the Credit Foncier of France and similar institutions in Austria-Hungary, Prussia, Italy and other countries; the system of agricultural credit through grants of public money, under the methods provided for in the renewal of the charter of the Bank of France in 1897; and the system of mutual credit organizations among agriculturalists. Mr. Conant described in detail the methods employed by the Credit Foncier of France in extending credit to the farmers. These bonds are made attrac-mortgage gives a fixed amount for a fixed period, and this is contrary to the commercial usage which permits the free engagement of every dollar in current business. It is this branch of agricultural credit which is the most highly developed in Germany, and which was the subject of considerable legislation in France, by means of which regional banks have been established, which group together the local banks of a given district. The state has placed at the disposal of the regional banks for the purpose of making advances to the local banks, two sums,—one fixed and the other annual,—derived from the resources of the Bank of France. The agricultural banks which are authorized to avail themselves of these sums may be composed of the whole or part of the members of one or more agricultural syndicates or mutual insurance societies. These societies are affiliated with the regional bank of their department. They are required to subscribe for a certain number of shares in the regional bank, and then are admitted to the credit facilities afforded by this bank, which discounts the bill of the local society or grants loans directly to the society to constitute its now has a combined capital and surplus of $1,400,000. As a consequence of the sudden death of August Uihlein in 1911, then president of the bank, and who had been closely identified with its affairs for a number of years, his son, Joseph E. working capital. The interest rate of the regional bank usually is three per cent, to which one per cent, or a little less, is added by the local bank for the expenses of management and the formation of a reserve fund. Many regional banks allow only bills for three months, with the privilege of two, three or four renewals, according to the by-laws of the bank. At some banks loans are granted for as long as a year, but installments are required at shorter intervals.

Mr. Conant also told of the Raiffheisen banks in Germany. The principle on which these are established is that of the unlimited joint and several liability of the members; but as limited liability has been found to afford adequate protection, about 8 per cent of the German banks now are based upon limited liability rather than unlimited. The credit extended by these banks chiefly is personal rather than by way of mortgage security, the united guaranty of the members of a society being adequate protection to the lender for the repayment of the money borrowed. The working capital is derived from the shares which are paid up by the members, the reserve fund, savings deposits and deposits on current account, and finally the sums which the bank procures by means of loans to central co-operative banks, other types of banks or private individuals. The loans principally are made to members. Through central banks the farmer is given access to the general money market and is enabled to obtain funds for temporary purposes, without the formalities, expense and locking up of capital incident to mortgaging his land for long terms.

The speaker believes that the question of whether or not the various methods outlined would be adaptable to the United States is one which should not be decided hastily or dogmatically, and that any legislation looking toward the improvement of agricultural credit should be the result of close and expert study of all of the various ramifications of the subject. A central organization for the issue of mortgage bonds probably would be necessary in order to give the bonds a sufficient guaranty and a wide market. While not desiring to commit himself to any general plan, Mr. Conant believes that it would be advantageous to establish state organizations, charged with making local loans under rules laid down by the central organization, and that the latter should be able to issue its bonds under its own guaranty, secured to it by the deposit of mortgages or bonds guaranteed by the state associations. In other words, he believes that it might be advisable to build up a co-operative democracy of state mortgage loan banks united into a powerful central organism, similar to that proposed in the plan of the Monetary Commission for strengthening commercial banking credit.

NORTH MEMPHIS SAVINGS BANK

North Memphis Savings Bank of Memphis, Tenn., enjoys the distinction of having surplus and undivided profits which bear a larger percentage to its capital stock than any other bank in the state of Tennessee. Its capital stock is $50,000 and surplus and undivided profits $100,000. Deposits are well over $2,350,000. J. T. Walsh is president; J. Rose, vice-president; M. G. Bailey, cashier, and Henry Craft, counsel. The bank is located in spacious and attractive quarters, and the personnel of its board of directors includes some of the most prominent men in the South.

"I just love to ride on the BURLINGTON. It seems as though most all the nice people go that way—and, my! what splendid things to eat!

"But I love the windows best. Such pretty pictures, such happy sights—and old Mississippi follows us most all the way.

"Papa says its the safest, smoothest way to go for little tots, as well as grown folks."

Convention Notes

A striking coincidence at the convention was the accidental meeting of six past presidents of the association in the office of George H. Russel, president of the Peoples State Bank, on Monday afternoon. They were Logan C. Murray, president of the American National Bank, Louisville, Ky., president in 1886; Col. Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National at Atlanta, president in 1896; Col. J. D. Powers, vice-president of the Third National, Louisville, president in 1907; Lewis E. Pierson, president of the Irving National, New York, president in 1909, and F. O. Watts, vice-president of the Third National at St. Louis. Mr. Russel was president of the A. B. A. in 1898 and completed the half-dozen ex-presidents. George M. Reynolds of Chicago, who also is an ex-president of the association, had called on Mr. Russel previously. Of the former presidents of the organization, only fourteen are living. Myron T. Herrick is in Paris as United States ambassador to France; one no longer is a banker and another has retired from business on account of age and infirmities.

Joseph Chapman said that our schools have been operated for the classes and not for the masses, which is an evil it is sought to correct.

"We find that of 19,500,000 school children in the United States only one and seven-tenths per cent get to college, and 93 per cent never get to the high schools," said Mr. Chapman. "Germany and France got after this condition years ago and what is the result? We ship raw materials to those countries, pay for having them manufactured and then bring them back here for sale. Why not manufacture them here? Why not have the boys and girls ready to tackle life as it is when they leave school?"

Mrs. Charles E. Batcheller, president of the First National Bank of Fingal, N. D., was an interested and enthusiastic attendant at the convention. Her husband is president of the First National at Hettinger, about 500 miles away. Mrs. Batcheller believes that every husband should tell his wife of the details of his business life. She believes that the safest investment for a woman who is not versed in financial matters is farm loans, as farm values do not fluctuate like city property. She and her husband have been attending the conventions of the A. B. A. for the past ten years.

The Hanover National of New York keeps a register in which appear the signatures of all the important financiers of the country.

Frederick H. Colburn, secretary of the California Bankers Association, was kept busy handing out to visitors some of the products of his state. At the California headquarters there were oranges, peaches, pears, all varieties of nuts and thousands of boxes of seeded raisins. The room in the Ponchartrain was handsomely decorated with cut flowers, and outside the door was a big oil painting framed in California redwood, bearing the seal of the state and extending an invitation to enter.

Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, enjoyed the distinction of being the youngest bank president in attendance at the Detroit convention. Mr. Teter was formerly president of the savings bank section of the A. B. A. and a former member of the executive council. He is only thirty-six years old.

On Wednesday evening at 6:30 o'clock, former officers of the American Institute of Banking partook of a banquet served in the rooms of the Fellowcraft Club. The meeting

"The Olympian"

Chicago to the Pacific North Coast

Constructed and fitted to best promote the comfort and serve the convenience of transcontinental travelers, the observation cars on this splendid train are the last word in luxury-providing equipment.

They combine a buffet smoking room fully up to club standard in service and equipment—a commodious lounging room where latest news bulletins are distributed enroute—a writing room and library—There is also a bath and barber shop. A telephone enables the busy man to transact business at terminals and principal cities enroute.

"The Olympian" leaves Chicago every day at 10:15 p. m. —"The Columbian," its companion train, at 10:10 a. m. The route is over the newest and shortest line—the was called by F. A. Crandall, vice-president of the National City Bank of Chicago and chairman of the executive council of the A. I. B.

The universal opinion of important financiers in attendance at the Detroit convention this week is that politics will have but slight effect upon business conditions this year.

Two Philippine delegates were at the convention. They were Major Thomas Hartigan, director and attorney of the Bank of the Philippines, and Señor D. Elliseo Sendree of Manila.

Hereafter the supervisors of state banks will not hold their convention at the same time the American Bankers Association hold theirs. It was decided to hold next year's meeting at St. Paul in June. This action was not the result of any friction, but it is believed that better work can be accomplished by a separate convention. Important among the matters decided on Wednesday was the passage of a resolution to the effect that it was the sense of the body that the office of banking commissioner should be free from politics and that the department should take the initiative in securing the passage of needed legislation to strengthen the banking laws.

State Secretaries Section

The state secretaries section of the A. B. A. met in the reception room, convention hall floor, Hotel Ponchartrain, on Wednesday and Thursday mornings, and was called to order by President J. W. Hoopes of Austin, Texas. The invocation was delivered by the Rev. Eugene R. Shippen, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Detroit. The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. H. M. Brown, secretary of the Michigan Bankers Association, and the response was made by S. B. Rankin, secretary of the Ohio Bankers Association. After the annual address of President Hoopes, Secretary-Treasurer F. M. Mayfield of Nashville made his report. F. W. Ellsworth, of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, talked on bank publicity, and Charles R. Frost, secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association, delivered an address, the subject of which was "Is it Advisable for an Association to Endorse and Receive Special Prices on Bank Equipment?" William B. Hughes, secretary of the Nebraska Bankers Association, talked on protective service, and Haynes McFadden, secretary of the Georgia Bankers Association, outlined a plan whereby conflicting convention dates practically can be eliminated. Other addresses were by Judge O. E. Dunlap of Waxahachie, Texas, on "The Boys Behind the Guns;" R. L. Crampton, secretary of the Illinois Bankers Association on "Central Bureau of Credit Information" and W. C. Macfadden, secretary of the North Dakota Bankers Association, on "Wealth Production Activities." Two of the topics which were up for discussion were whether or not it is advisable to divide the organization into groups and for these groups to hold annual meetings, and agricultural development and education.

A. B. A. RETAINS BURNS AGENCY

The Burns Detective Agency again will track the criminals who defraud the banks of America. This was decided by the executive council of the A. B. A. in session in Detroit on Monday afternoon. Resolutions were adopted expressing full satisfaction with the efficiency of the protective and crime detection branch of the association. There had been some agitation to re-award the contract for protection to the Pinkerton Agency, which had held it before, but the action of the council disposes of this.

was offering odds of two to one that they wouldn't overlook a solitary souvenir.

"ILLINOIS HEADQUARTERS" did not materialize. They were in the saddle, or in the air, perhaps, but not visible. Many were disappointed—sentimentally perhaps—for it is doubted if any real good is accomplished to repay the work and outlay necessary.

A FEW banks had headquarters and registered many visitors. A few were empty form.

FRED A. CRANDALL, Chicago, went on the Big Council this week as chairman of the executive committee of the A. I. B. True, it only is for a year, but then Fred is no green hand and will require no initiation.

THE "boys" from Illinois sent their compliments to W. T. Fenton at Chicago, when he missed the special, to "C'm on over." MISSOURI special had "six votes" on the organization of the new council and "Dick" Hawes appeared to be custodian of the great seal.

W. F. AND MRS. KEYSER were in the W. "Show me" delegation. So were Mrs. Watts and Mrs. Hawes.

EVERY banker at Detroit felt deeply the bereavement of C. G. Dawes in the loss of his only son. It was the sympathetic topic in every group.

HOT air has been very plentiful at Detroit this week and it wasn't the kind you put in quotation marks either. It was the 96° in the shade kind.

FOR about the tenth time a movement was put on here to elevate J. B. Forgan to an office in the A. B. A. by the independent process of a nomination from the floor. His name was used for a while by those who, in advance, wished to defeat whatever ticket named by the regularly constituted nominating committee.

JUST as promptly as in other and former cases, Mr. Forgan sat on the scheme, which was just what those who know him best expected. He so often has refused to accept nominations where no opposition would be encountered that his position was well known to many.

THE new committee on "New Constitution" will have short life, most likely, unless the administration committee reappoint it, for under the constitution the convention itself can name no standing committees, but all of its appointees cease to serve at end of each convention.

THIS provision was put in the constitution to head off the burdening of the exchequer with hastily conceived committees, most of which never do any real service to the association.

THE great annual golf game for the A. B. A. championship, now in its fifth year, was not pulled off at Detroit. It has a history.

THE contest started at Atlantic City by Mr. Cutler of Hartford, with Oliver C. Fuller of Milwaukee for a partner, challenging any pair of A. B. A. members.

THE play was to be for all the expenses of the four contestants for the day of the contest, including a dinner for the winners and their friends. Barnett of Jacksonville, Fla., accepted the defy and chose F. O. Watts for his partner. So closely are the pairs matched that one year it was a tie, and in no year did the winners come in more than one up.

AT Los Angeles Mr. Fuller played the last hole—190 yards—in one. It was all the more remarkable since the green was guarded immediately by a high bunker. There are those who fully believe he can do such a feat whenever it is necessary.

THERE was no game this year because of the absence of Mr. Barnett in Europe. Instead, the other three took on Charles O. Patch of Detroit and the four played "from scratch" in the convention tournament at the Country Club.

THERE were 119 registered from Illinois on Tuesday, including, of course, the ladies. Miss Woodruff, sister to George and F. W. of Joliet, and Miss Alice Wadsworth, niece of E. E. Crabtree of Jacksonville, were among the latter.

MORE than fifty bankers attended the A. B. A. meeting of Illinois members to elect officers for the current year. H. E. Otte was made state vice-president, while E. E. Crabtree and W. T. Fenton were given three year terms on the Big Council. M. A. Traylor was put on the nominating committee, an important station for this year.

WILLIAM A. HEATH called the meeting to order, in his capacity as acting, actual, and in-every-other-way vice-president for the state. His short talk was both humorous and brief. He turned the office over to Mr. Otte, who then presided.

PRESIDENT LIVINGSTONE acquitted himself in the double capacity of presiding officer and host in a way to please both friend and critic.

GEORGE M. REYNOLDS for once read his "piece," for on such a subject as the "money trust" he could not afford to be misquoted. It was the hit, so far as larger interests are concerned, of the convention.

JOHN H. JOHNSON was on the job from the word go. There wasn't any fall-down in his department.

EMORY W. CLARK used his big touring car about twenty-nine hours per day shooting bankers from one point of interest to another, and never broke an engagement.

NEW, hot-weather hats were donned promptly by Homer A. Miller, Charles H. Huttig, Arthur Reynolds and W. G. Edens.

GEORGE E. ALLEN, poet laureate from 11 Pine Street, put in some good licks in behalf of the Institute, with bankers from towns and cities where the work is backward. There was talk of making him the eastern secretary for the better farming movement. His cue would be to do sort of John-the-Baptist work among the Wall Street bankers, who, of course, only are near farmers.

J. A. LEWIS, from down by the big bridge, managed to play from twenty-six to fifty-four holes per day and still attend all the important sessions—a very difficult feat.

IT ought to be easier to get the Wisconsin bankers to try "the main traveled road" another year. Waiting at the switch isn't a popular form of amusement for the worldly-wise.

THOSE disgruntled New York publishers who told the council that one of their number had lost 500 subscribers through opposition of the Journal-Bulletin, spent all the rest of the week trying to detach themselves individually from the rumor. Sometimes what they said of each other was "the unkindest cut of all."

INCIDENTALLY they continued to tell unwilling listeners the most damaging sort of dream talk about—well, about a paper you think pretty well of.

TICKETS to "Walkerville" were at a premium.

ERNEST A. HAMILL of the big Corn Exchange was one of the genuinely interested convention goers. Hasn't missed one since he started going.

GEORGE H. RUSSEL, himself an ex-president of the A. B. A., gave a dinner to the other exes who were in Detroit. They were Logan C. Murray, Robert J. Lowry, E. F. Swinney, J. D. Powers, Lewis E. Pierson, George M. Reynolds and F. O. Watts.

FOURTH NATIONAL, New York, kept open house and so did the California bankers.

E. H. DOYLE of Michigan presided over the conference of bank supervisors. L. L. Bacchus of Illinois read an important paper.

THE "floating hotel" was all right until she piled her roomers' baggage out on the dock and quietly floated away. Didn't find the hotel business congenial or profitable probably?

HOWARD HOOKE says the steam-roller was so well oiled and pussy-footed that he didn't even wake up for a considerable period after she had operated on the round-robin, so that it no longer was round.

FULLER, Watts, Patch and Cutler won all of the eight cups offered by the Detroit bankers. Wm. J. Burns, head of the protective department, was put on the case at once.

OF course Mr. Patch did not take his and Messrs. Fuller, Watts and Cutler were satisfied with one each. Burns promptly reported that the scores had not been made out in advance but was unable to advance a plausible theory. Sol. Smith of Chicago was called in consultation.

COUNCIL club dinner was a big hit with everyone. Lucius Teter was re-elected as secretary, while Col. J. J. Sullivan of Cleveland was made president to succeed Geo. H.

Russel. The executive committee is L. E. Pierson, Luther Drake, P. C. Kauffman, F. H. Fries and William George.

SECRETARIES section elected a quartette of officials it would be hard to beat. Secretary Macfadden was made chairman and will sit in on the Big Council the coming year. Bowman of Kansas was made first vice-president and Hall of Iowa, second vice-president. Harrison of Oklahoma was made secretary.

W. J. BURNS, the world-known detective, addressed the secretaries and made a big hit. He was loudly applauded. The executive council indorsed him and his work unanimously.

HERBERT W. COST of the St. Louis investment banking firm of D. Arthur Bowman & Co., attended the Detroit convention. Mr. Cost traveled with the St. Louis delegation to Detroit and states that Messrs. A. O. Wilson and E. B. Clare-Avery are the best "chaperons" he has ever met. Mr. Cost left for a short Eastern vacation trip after the convention and will not return to St. Louis before October 1st.

at the spring meeting. The committee which will have the revision in charge includes R. E. James, Easton, Pa.; W. J. Bailey, Atchison, Kan.; O. E. Dunlap, Waxahachie, Texas; Gordon Jones, Denver, Colo.; Sol. Wexler of New Orleans and C. H. McNider of Mason City, Ia.

At the Wednesday morning meeting of the trust company section, George M. Reynolds, president of the big Continental and Commercial National of Chicago, replied to the critics of banks and bankers. He found fault with the national platforms of the three larger political parties because, he said, they fail to help provide a proper system of banking and currency. He disclaimed any knowledge of the so-called "money trust," and stated that people confuse "money power" with "money trust." He stated that bankers will not object to any investigation by congress as long as they are not compelled to disclose confidential relations with their customers. Mr. Reynolds' talk will be found printed in full elsewhere in this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER.

Detroit long will be remembered by the bankers who were the subjects of its hospitality this week. A fine program of entertainment was provided for the visitors and delegates. On Monday there was a reception and luncheon at the plant of the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, at which there were about 2,500 present. Each person attending was given a souvenir. On Tuesday there was a reception and ball to the visiting bankers and ladies at the Wayne Pavilion. Wednesday there was a golf tournament, baseball and a trolley ride to Mt. Clemens via the Shore Line along the Detroit River and Lake St. Claire, returning via the Rapid Railway. Thursday there was a luncheon at Walkerville, with the compliments of Messrs. Hiram Walker & Sons, Ltd., a reception for the ladies at the Country Club, a baseball game between Detroit and Philadelphia and a theatre party in the evening. On Friday the visiting ladies were taken for an auto ride around the city.

BIG NEW YORK BANKS TO MERGE

New York, Sept. 11th.—It was said to-day that a merger of the Guaranty and Standard Trust Companies, whose assets total $263,000,000, will be approved to-morrow when the directors of the Guaranty Trust Company meet to consider the merger negotiations.

DOES YOUR BANK INVEST IN BONDS?

If so, do you buy —

First: For temporary investment?

Second: For permanent investment?

Third: For income?

Fourth: As a "secondary reserve" proposition, or

Fifth: For appreciation?

In either of the above cases, we are prepared to submit offerings to conform to your needs, requirements and preferences. A letter from you will enable us to do this.

The CHICAGO BANKER

A Weekly Paper Devoted to the Banking and Financial Interests of the Middle West

SEPTEMBER 21, 1912

Entered as Second-Class Matter January 15, 1903, at the

Peoria, the Con- vention City

The Illinois Bankers Association will hold its twenty-second annual convention in Peoria on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, the sessions to be held in the Orpheum Theatre. Bankers who attend this convention will find many things of interest in this growing, prosperous and progressive city. The popularity of Peoria as a convention city is exemplified by the fact that already she has to her credit twenty conventions for 1913 and a few for 1914, a record of which any city might justly be proud. This success can be attributed to organized effort, the spirit of co-operation manifested by all local interests, and the fact that the city possesses many of those things which render a stay within its confines enjoyable to the visitor. The value of Peoria as a convention city lies in her central location, facilities for accessibility, as well as the large number of halls and meeting places available for large gatherings.

Fourteen railroads have their terminals in Peoria, eleven of them being parts of great national systems. Thirteen of the states comprising the Middle West can be reached by navigable streams. As a railroad center, it outranks every other city of its class in the United States in its transportation facilities. The mileage of the railroads entering the city constitutes 29 per cent of the total of the United States. The Illinois River, which is a tributary of the Mississippi, is navigable for large vessels nine months in the year. Three lines ply regularly, and others are in process of organization. It is quite apparent that the excellent transportation facilities which the city enjoys have had much to do with its already phenomenal growth and development, and will play a prominent part in its future progress, and in enabling it successfully to uphold its present reputation of being one of the most important of the thriving, progressive and up-to-date cities of the Middle West. Its central location affords unequalled advantages for manufacturing and opportunities for business enterprises. There are four hundred manufacturing plants, representing a total investment of twenty-five millions. The annual wages of the 12,000 employees amounts to eight millions, and the value of the finished product to sixty millions.

ADDRESSES ROAD COMMISSIONERS

The highway commissioners of Illinois met for their annual convention in Peoria on Thursday of this week. A large number was in attendance. William G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association and attending the conference as a representative of that organization, made an address on the general subject of good roads.

Chicago-Peoria Special Train

A special train, leaving from the La Salle Street Station, over the Rock Island, September 24th, at noon, will carry Chicago bankers and those from surrounding territory to Peoria, where the twenty-second annual convention of the Illinois Bankers Association will be held September 25th and 26th. The train will consist of dining, parlor, buffet and library and baggage cars. A table d'hote luncheon will be served. Bankers who are unable to take this train can get one at 9:10 A. M., 5:44 P. M. and 2:08 A. M., the night train; passengers can enter sleeper at 10 P. M. Railroad fare is $3 each way; berth rate, $1.50; parlor car seats 50 cents and luncheon $1. This special train will arrive in Peoria about 5:25 P. M.; the train leaving at 9:10 A. M., at 1:25 P. M.; the 5:44 P. M. train at 10:00 P. M. and the 2:08 A. M. train at 6:30 A. M. the 25th. L. H. McCormick, general agent, passenger department, Rock Island Lines, Adams and Dearborn streets, is in charge of this train and reservations can be made through him.

NEW ILLINOIS BANKS ORGANIZED

Permits have been issued by the state for the organization of two new Illinois banks—one to Albert H. Tyrrell, George R. Kent and William H. Mulholland, for the Northern Illinois Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, capital $200,000 and a charter tenure of ninety-nine years. The other was issued to William G. Schluht, F. M. Hamlin and Charles Harbaugh for the Lake Villa State Bank in Lake county, with a capital stock of $25,000 and a charter tenure of fifty years.

State Supervision

State supervision will be "on the fire" at Peoria convention next week, and the attendance likely will be larger even than at Springfield. The program is superior, easily, to any other for the year. At Detroit one ambitious plan was to put up a progressive ticket—George Woodruff for president and Col. Aisthorpe for vice-president—and thus to clean up the apparently factional tendency in the situation.

The private bankers' committee members are taking the Harris-Dawes plan for bringing all banking under state supervision very much to heart. Their latest circular address to their fellow private bankers reads:

Why Should the Illinois Bankers Association Go on Record as Forcing the Private Bankers Out of Business?

"Contrary to the action of the executive committee of this association, B. F. Harris appointed a committee to accomplish this purpose. And the committee, headed by Chas. G. Dawes, president of the Central Trust Company of Chicago, recommends to this association that such action be taken. It concedes to start with that there are many conservative, safe and successful private banks throughout the state; that at best this action must put all honest, reputable private bankers to some inconvenience by forcing them to change their methods of business. Because some private bankers fail, and through such failing the depositors lose their money, this committee thinks all private bankers should be forced out of business or else incorporate their banks in order to protect the public; also that the private banker should be public spirited enough to join in bringing this about. This recommendation is erroneously called 'bringing the private banks under supervision.' The impression is given by this proposal that supervision and incorporation are synonymous terms, losing sight of the fact that incorporation has many other objects than supervision which is only one of its incidents.

"The questions sent out by Mr. Harris were put in such subtle form that some private bankers have answered in favor of supervision with no intention of committing themselves to forced incorporation.

"As it is now made clear what the real purpose of this move is, what should be the action of this association? Its membership is about

JOHAN G. LIVER of Hartford, Wis., was at the Detroit convention, but he kept at a distance from Albert G. Bacon in the Pontchartrain lobby for fear, perhaps, that "Fred" Hoops would present them jointly as "liver and bacon."

A. W. GUEST said he could see nothing funny in Life's famous cartoon entitled "The First National," in which a beautiful lady is shown going down into one of her polka dots for her roll. Guest is cashier of the Stocking Savings Bank at Rochelle, Ill.

FIRST NATIONAL, St. Joseph, Mo., is "some bank" since Monday last when it took over the business and assets of the Merchants Bank of that city. Capital and surplus $800,000.

R. T. FORBES is the president and T. W. Evans becomes chairman of the board. All the officers are retired. Capitally it is the strongest bank in St. Joseph.

JOSEPH CHAPMAN, presiding at the Friday session of the big A. B. A. convention at Detroit, looked so good to the boys that they want him to cut out the chairmanship of the council and go in for the vice-presidency next year at Boston.

MANY have the notion, too, that the head of the Big Council will not be stepped-up as hereafter—not after the year out of office prescribed by Doctor McNider in his famous amendment.

ELECTING Chapman next year at Boston might set the style of taking up heads of other committees who distinguished themselves in the service of the association.

R. E. JAMES (a James dandy) might hand in such a fine new constitution that he would go in after Chapman and Charles H. McNider—head of the amendment bureau could follow after.

COULD you beat any of the four named? Wouldn't things hum at the old stand? None of them would need any assistance in presiding and every kink in present customs and practices would be eradicated or ironed out.

AUGUST BLUM and other late guests of the Hotel Cadillac, Detroit, feel very grateful that the "fire" was postponed until they had checked out.

WHEN A. W. Britten proposed city supervision for private banking in Chicago last spring, on the heels of two or three total failures in the private ranks, the privates only grinned and doubled their paid write-up contracts in certain unmentionable papers.

BUT Britten had his dander up and has just landed an opinion from the corporation counsel's office sustaining his position. In consequence a bill will be presented at Springfield permitting the city of Chicago to license, supervise and control financial institutions not under control of state or national authority.

WEST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 61 per cent. Population 54 per cent.

EAST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 15 per cent. Population 12½ per cent.

¶ If your business is increasing the new business of your bank, your field (the field of new accounts) is in the territory covered like a blanket by THE CHICAGO BANKER. The rest is obvious.

CERTAINLY, under the city and villages act the city can license and control "money changers and brokers," for it says so plainly.

"THE supreme court held in the case of Hinckley vs. Belleville, 43 Ill. 183," read the opinion, "that money changer means banker as we ordinarily understand the word. The court further held that the city council may pass an ordinance taxing, licensing, and regulating banks. Private banks are included in this description."

THOSE who are out for complete supervision should not let this new doctrine supplant, or bar genuine reform in banking laws. The Britten plan may be used only as a "refuge" in case of a general act.

SURE! Perkins helped to organize the Harvester Trust. Also the Bull Moose trust—was chairman of finance in both branches of the industries.

W. J. KOMMERS of the Old National, Spokane, has tired of seeing eastern cashiers list his growing city as if it were almost suburban to Denver, San Francisco, or as if it were merely one of the Tacoma-Seattle-Portland group.

IN consequence he has had printed a beautiful map in colors showing up the "empire" of which Spokane is the financial as well as geographical center. When an eastern collection comes to the Old National via the coast or some other out-of-range place six or eight days late, Kommers will send on the map with a letter telling how such delays may be avoided.

OUR thanks to President B. W. Moser for kindly mention of this journal and its attitude toward the A. I. B. in his Salt Lake report.

OFFICIAL call is out for the Dry Farming Congress, at Lethbridge, Alberta, October 21-25. Delegates are expected from every civilized part of the earth.

E. J. BOWMAN and family of Anaconda were the luncheon guests of W. G. Edens on Tuesday. Mr. Bowman during his membership on the Big Council has made a host of friends. At home he is president of the Daly Bank and Trust Company. Sterling, Ill., was his former home.

NOW we have an explanation of why R. T. Forbes canceled on the Banquet Special to Detroit. While the rest of us were disporting at Walkerville or at the Burroughs plant he was taking over a rival bank. He promises next time to avoid conflicting dates.

WE think that the "hit" of the Detroit convention was the clear and sparkling talk by George Woodruff, putting us all straight with European farm financing after Conant and Chamberlain had everybody guessing. The thing is rather simple when plainly put.

"THAT fellow Woodruff is a dandy," said Farmer Joe, who presided. "We've got to have him up in Minnesota to explain to the people that the European three and three-and-a-half per cent farm loans are in reality farm bonds which the farmer must sell to get the coin which then costs him from 4.3 to 4.75 per cent. There's a lot of difference when you get the 'joker' dislodged."

IT was declared by several members of the Chicago city council this week that there will be practically no opposition to the passage of a law placing private banks under city or state control. Most of the aldermen, it was stated, favored the plan of protecting depositors who patronize private banks.

THE Dawes committee report probably will be assailed on the non-legality of its appointment at Peoria. Really this only is catching at straws, for the exact question is supervision or non-supervision.

THE Illinois Bankers Association is a too important organization to use a technicality or a quibble for dodging purposes when the issue is fairly drawn on principle. There is authority for the Dawes committee but even if it comes into court as a volunteer the issue cannot be avoided.

IF you had a chop-suey secretary on your pay roll who had the nerve to ask an increase in salary, and you had been sorry for a whole year that you hadn't done it before, how long would you hesitate with the hook?

JOSEPH CHAPMAN, JR., dean of better farming experts, has discovered in the present Minnesota state fair an object lesson for those who would learn how to advance in

W. C. Macfadden on Wealth Production Activities

Famous secretary of the North Dakota bankers in a valuable paper before the Secretaries Section at Detroit, covers an important part of the present better farming problem

I could consume a lot of time trying to go out into the various highways and byways, toward which this subject leads, but I am going to let you off with a very brief talk, and I am going into only one of the many paths I might take, for I believe you want me to say something, if I can, that will be of some assistance to you in your association work. I am sure we all fully realize the responsibility which rests on our shoulders as representative of the organized banks of the country, and if we do fully realize this responsibility, it is possible for us to direct, and guide the activities of our various organizations along lines that will be of great benefit to the communities in which we live. With this in mind I am going to consider only one of the activities of wealth production—that of agriculture. It's the most important one and the only one I know very much about. You will understand, of course, that what I have to say applies only to the newer part of the country.

The movement which originated in the Northwest for co-operation with the farmer and educator is an effort, not only to produce better results from the cultivation of the soil, that most valuable of all endowments which the Creator provided for the maintenance of the human family, but also to conserve for future generations to as great an extent as possible the fertility of the soil, has spread all over the country, and in nearly all of the organizations you represent, committees on agricultural and educational development have been appointed to assist in the work. You are closely in touch with these committees and they look to you for advice and assistance. It is important that there should be some uniformity in their work, and the annual conferences of the agricultural committees from the various associations which were inaugurated by Joseph Chapman are bringing about this uniformity of action. It is not possible, however, for all of you to attend these conferences, and I may be able to give you some ideas as to the details of the work being done which will help you as you attend your committee meeting and confer with your committees of men upon this subject. You see I am taking a practical view of what Brother Mayfield expected when he assigned me a place on the program. I might have brushed up on political economy or on the single tax theory and given you a long, tiresome talk that you would forget as fast as I talked, but we are pretty busy up in the Northwest, at this season of the year, and don't have time for very much brushing up of any kind.

In considering the activity of wealth production as applied to agriculture and the assistance which the bankers association can give by co-operation with the farmer and the educator, you must start with the knowledge that the average farmer pays very little attention in the business side of his work to fundamental principles. He does not take into account the fact that increase of labor does not increase production in an equal degree, or in other words, that there is a point where the law of diminishing returns must apply. The banker and the average business man take into account the principle respecting capital that industry is limited by capital and that capital is the result of saving, and plans his campaign for success in life and the success of the community in which he lives accordingly; but many farmers are simply gamblers with the most valuable asset we and the generations which will come after us can ever have. I know of a case which happened this spring, and there no doubt are many similar ones all over our state year after year, where a farmer had been at work seeding wheat for two days. One of our state agricultural experts happened to drive by and asked the farmer if he had tested his seed wheat. He had not and following the advice of the expert, stopped his work long enough to make a test. The test disclosed the fact that only 20 per cent of his wheat would grow. What would you think of methods of this kind, applied to banking, manufacturing, or any other business except that of farming?

W. C. MACFADDEN
Fargo
Secretary North Dakota Bankers Association

With just that one instance in mind, I am sure it is not a difficult task to map out a line of work that can be taken up by our bankers' association that will result in untold benefit to our country. The work should begin with the boys and girls. Get your members to offer all sorts of prizes to induce the boys and girls to become interested in work with their hands, both outdoor and indoor, look into the course of study in your public schools and keep in mind that in the average community 85 per cent of the boys and girls leave the public schools before they have completed the eighth grade. Use the influence of your association to obtain state aid for the consolidated, graded, and rural school and see that the course of study in these schools includes agriculture, manual training, and domestic science in the lower grades.

Let me read you an extract from a paper read recently by John Munroe, superintendent of the Cokato, Minnesota, Associated Schools.

"The introduction of agricultural or other industrial work in the curriculum of our public schools is interesting from two viewpoints; the one destructive, the other constructive.

Our public school superintendents and teachers are so deeply in a rut that it takes something new to make them fully realize their position. The introduction of agriculture is sure to establish the question mark of efficiency. Then begins the process of elimination. Greek and Latin will gradually disappear. Higher Algebra and solid Geometry will go. English will become expressional. Half of History and Arithmetic will be eliminated. In fact, the whole worthless shuck will be removed from the educational system, leaving the golden kernels of truth where the interested children can greedily devour them.

After a short period of destructive elimination comes a happy period of growth. Language will thrill and throb with oral and written work upon the wonderful things found in our door-yards. Children will become enthusiastic in discovering that the local township and country has a beautiful geography and history. Arithmetic will prove fascinating when it treats of home problems. The industrial subjects themselves will be so correlated with and absorbed by the ordinary English, History, Geography and Mathematics that the child will not realize where the one begins and the other ends. All will be one whole, working to make the child an efficient economic unit.

Coupled with the destructive and constructive process will go the reawakening of the teaching force. The instructors will then realize the continuous nature of education—and that it deals with the individual and not the class or grade. Teachers and pupils will be more human.

If superintendents doubt this, let them discover the truth by attempting the experiment. Of all things this will reveal the exact conditions to them.

Prof. Munroe tells that he was teaching a country school when he first got the "bee in his bonnet" to introduce agricultural and other industrial work in the public school. He took a vote of his pupils before starting the work to see what the sentiment was as to living on the farm. He had 163 pupils, and 100 of them said they did not intend to become farmers or farmers' wives. After carrying on the work for a year he took another vote, and the former vote was reversed. One hundred intended to live on the farm when they grew up. The school house and the school grounds were the most attractive place in that whole community, and the whole order of things had been reversed. The school teacher was the whole show in that community, and everybody went to him for advice. When he left the community his loss was felt in every home. How many school teachers or school superintendents, under the old plan of conducting schools, do you know who are missed when they leave? The average school teacher and the average preacher wear out in a very short time, and the community welcomes a change. It is different, however, with the average doctor, and up in our country we believe it is only a question of time when in every agricultural community there will be a doctor of agriculture, who will have a thorough knowledge of scientific farming, forestry, chemistry of the soil, the care of live stock, the architecture of farm buildings, and all kindred subjects. In North Dakota the experiment is being tried of having such a man in every county. A three year campaign has been planned and before the expiration of that time I believe it will be demonstrated that the services of these men are so valuable that provision will be made either by the government or by individual states for their maintenance in every agricultural community.

It is true we have splendid agricultural colleges scattered all over the United States where farmers and farmers' boys and girls can go for any information they want to assist them in their work. But they will not go to the colleges for this assistance. The information they want must be taken directly to them. It is like going to church or prayer meeting. The people who most need the assistance of the church to guide and direct their lives don't go to church, and the ones who need the preacher the least are in their seats whenever the bell rings.

In assisting in the campaign for better farming and conservation of the soil, you must use the same methods it is necessary to use to interest the people in anything. If you had a new brand of soap you wanted everybody to use, you would spend a lot of money advertising; whenever anyone picked up a newspaper or walked along the street, an advertisement for your soap would stare him in the face and you would send out a lot of traveling men to tell the people why your soap should be used. Get out attractive posters on deep plowing, crop rotation, selection and care of seed grain, etc., etc. Send samples of such posters out to your members with the offer to furnish them five hundred or one thousand copies with their advertisement printed on them at the actual cost, and ask them to see that these posters are put up in all public places. In a little while you will have the whole state discussing the various subjects. In North Dakota we have the best and the most uniformly good crop this year we have had for years. The campaign made by our bankers association last fall for deep plowing, and the campaign carried on this spring for care in the selection of seed grain must be given some credit for this fine crop. Enlist the services of your legislators and public men in a campaign to conserve the fertility of the soil. Do you know that in Germany, Holland and some other foreign countries the government directs the activities of wealth production in agriculture. In these countries the government would not permit the farmer to deplete and exhaust the fertility of the soil as is permitted in this country. They say to the farmer, "When you raise wheat, you take so much nitrogen, so much phosphorus, and so much of the other chemical properties necessary to raise wheat, out of the soil, and you must put it back." Or else they say, "Let America raise our wheat and other crops that exhaust the soil and we will raise sugar beets, potatoes, and the balance of the list that keep up the fertility of the soil."

Countries pursuing that policy are undermining us more seriously than they could ever do with any of the modern implements of warfare. We could whip any of them in an open fight, on land or sea, but we are as surely furnishing them the "sinews of war" that will eventually end in our demoralization if the tables are not quickly turned. And it is up to the bankers association and other organizations of capital and industry in this great country of ours to see that a radical change is made in the activity of wealth production as applied to agriculture.

ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE AP- POINTS GOOD ROADS COM- MITTEE

Eugene U. Kimbark, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, is exercising the authority conferred on him by resolution of the ways and means committee, and with the approval of the executive committee has announced the selection of a committee on good roads. It is understood that this committee will not initiate any original plans, but will co-operate with the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, several members of the committee representing the Association of Commerce also being members of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. It is understood that so far the president has received acceptances from W. G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association; John D. Shoop, first assistant superintendent of schools, board of education; G. E. Scott, American Steel Foundries; John H. Hardin, F. A. Hardy & Co; H. Paulman, Chicago Automobile Trade Association, member of the executive committee of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association; George J. Charlton, C. & A. R. R.; P. S. Eustis, C. B. & O. R. R.; J. C. Clair, I. C. R. R.; Hugh S. Pettis, attorney, and W. H. Richardson, C. & E. I. R. R.

OHIO AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE MEETS

Columbus, Ohio.—The first meeting of the agricultural committee of the Ohio Bankers Association was held here recently, the full membership being present. The committee was appointed at the recent meeting of the bankers for the purpose of encouraging the farmers to secure an increased production from their lands. It was said that the prosperity of Ohio might be doubled if the agricultural methods were improved. The bankers feel that they can do more for the farmers than business men in any other field of endeavor. One plan discussed was to encourage country bankers who own farms to make them models of progress as an encouragement to the farmers in the community. Organization of farmers by country bankers was also urged. Secretary A. P. Sandles, of the state board of agriculture, said Ohio has 142,000 acres of abandoned farm lands and thousands of acres lying idle that would produce immense quantities of fruit if they were developed.

Short Term Securities

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations.

Such securities, particularly of the larger issues, also usually command a ready market and are not subject to extreme fluctuations in price.

Our recent booklet, "Short Term Securities," met with so favorable a reception that we have been prompted to issue a second edition. This contains brief descriptions of current issues, brought down to June, 1912. We will furnish copies on request.

How the Newspaper Can Help the Bank

For instance, let us consider for a moment just how the newspaper can help the bank. The newspaper has advertising columns which are for sale and I have yet to find a newspaper that is not ready and willing to admit to its columns the advertising of a reputable bank. As a matter of fact, most of them, I should say, are reasonably eager for such business if one can judge by the frequent visits that the banker receives from the ever-recurring newspaper advertising solicitor. All right. We have the advertising columns of a newspaper. What shall we do with them? Well, I should say that the very best thing that we can do with them is to use them, provided we are able to use them intelligently and effectively. Of course I realize that there are still some banks that do not believe in newspaper advertising. They have not yet become convinced of the necessity for, or the wisdom or ethics in publicly asking for new business. And yet these same banks are advertising in a way which only a few years ago would have been considered very much out of place. They perhaps run a fossilized card, and they exhibit on their windows and over their door signs announcing the name of their institution, with possibly the amount of their capital and surplus or possibly the words, "conducts a general banking business." Now advertising in the newspaper is merely increasing the circulation of the sign in front of the door. It is the act of placing the bank's announcement before a multitude who otherwise would never see it, and then calling attention to it by explaining in simple, direct English just what the bank stands for and in what way it can serve the readers.

An Example

Here is a good bank, we will say. It has an adequate capital and ample surplus and a large deposit line. Its building is commodious and well lighted, the officers and clerks are genial and obliging and know their business. The bank's facilities for serving its customers are equal to the best. Now supposing this bank does not believe in advertising, how under the sun are all of the people in the community

F. W. Ellsworth, publicity expert for the Guaranty Trust, New York, in a talk to the members of the Secretaries Section, at Detroit, gives valuable hints of co-operation between editor and banker ever going to learn about those favorable features? It is true that many of them will become acquainted with the institution through contact with its customers, but even that very excellent mode of securing new business is limited. Is there any good reason why that bank should not call on the newspaper in the town to help spread the gospel? There are hundreds of banks in the United States to-day that are working with the local newspapers to that very end, and such of them as are giving the proper attention and time and intelligence to the preparation of their copy are achieving results.

Perhaps a concrete example would better illustrate just how the newspaper can be of assistance to the bank. We will take for instance a bank with $50,000 capital and $500,000 deposits and we will assume that the bank is making 20 per cent profits annually, which would be $10,000. Five hundred dollars a year would not be too much for that bank to set aside for advertising. Three hundred could be used for space in the local newspaper, and based on a contract of 20 cents per inch, which is perhaps an average rate for newspapers in towns of from 5,000 to 25,000 population, the $300 would enable the bank to run a five-inch double column advertisement three times a week for an entire year. In the intervals between taking in deposits and making loans and turning down undesirable customers, the cashier could dash off an advertisement every other day so that there would be change of copy each time the space was used. And he needn't be afraid that he will run out of subjects, as the banking business is full of good talking points. I recently saw a book on bank advertising with a title something like this: "Two Thousand Points for Financial Advertising." On the basis that I have mentioned, such a book would furnish material to the cashier for a dozen years or more. He could talk about the savings department, and the commercial department, and the safe deposit vaults, and the strong board of directors, and the experienced officers, and the intelligent clerks, and the advantage of a household account. He could explain that the bank pays interest on deposits, makes loans to responsible people, receives deposits by mail, issues certificates of deposit and travelers' checks. Then he could call attention to the strength of the institution; he could explain the relation between surplus and capital, and tell of the safety assured by the supervision of the state banking department or the comptroller of currency as the case might be. Is there any good reason why a bank with the qualifications which I have enumerated should not employ a method of this kind to secure new business and hold it, and is not this one way in which the newspaper can be of assistance to the bank?

Right here let me pause to remark that I do not wish to convey the impression by what I may say here that a bank should spend all of its advertising appropriation with the newspapers. I do believe that the best results, everything considered, come from the intelligent, continuous use of newspaper space, but there are other effective advertising mediums which a bank can profitably employ, but for the purpose of this discussion I will not take the time to mention them.

Editorial Assistance

Another way in which the newspaper can co-operate with and assist the bank is by running educational financial matter in its financial department or on its financial page. Many of the newspapers in the larger cities, and quite a number of the magazines, are doing this kind of work. It would be manifestly impracticable for the average country weekly or daily to follow a plan like this continually, but an editorial now and then which will preach sound financial doctrine can work great good both to the bank and to the general public.

Co-operative Educational Advertising

Here is still another way in which the newspaper can materially help the bank. We will take a town, say, of 25,000 population, with two daily papers and four banks. Each of the banks carries commercial and savings accounts. Now let all four of the banks get together, put $500 apiece into a common fund or let each contribute according to the size of its deposits. Then hire a competent advertising man to write fifty or a hundred educational advertisements to run in the two papers, say three times a week for a year, each ad. to bear the signatures of the four banks. Then let each bank advertise for itself as much or as little as it cares to. If at the end of the year all the banks in the town have not increased their commercial and savings deposits considerably it will be because the banks had the accounts of all the folks in the town before the campaign began. In this way the newspaper can be of great assistance to the banks in a beautifully impartial manner. The plan that is now employed by many banks is unjust in that the banks that do not advertise reap the benefit from the advertising which the more enterprising bank pays for. I have in mind right here a case of a bank in a middle western state that spent several thousand dollars in an educational campaign for savings, and the other banks in the town secured quite as much benefit without any expense to them as did the advertising bank. Manifestly this is not a square deal, although it was not the fault of the banks that did not advertise. They were simply lucky in receiving something for nothing.

How the Bank Can Help the Newspaper

Now what can the bank do for the newspaper? In other words, how can the bank be of assistance to the press? There is probably no business institution, public or private, in any community in which the people are more interested than they are in the bank. People have thousands and even hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars placed in the bank for safekeeping. This money represents the savings of hundreds of people in the community, and the operating capital and surplus of the business houses. It is not at all surprising, therefore, that the people should have a keen interest in whatever affects the bank. The newspaper, anxious to give the people the news, and, in spite of much evidence to the contrary, usually really desirous of conveying correct information only, will welcome from the bank authoritative and authentic news items which in any way affect the people's depository. Perhaps the bank has elected a new officer, or has added a new member to its board of directors, or has increased its capital, or has transferred a substantial sum from undivided profits to surplus, or has declared a dividend, or has shown a marked increase in deposits, or has decided to enlarge its office, or is preparing plans for a new building. Any and all of these are of general interest and the newspaper would be glad to be the first to announce these items to the public.

If I were asked to advise the bankers in this connection I would say get acquainted with the men in your town who make the newspapers. You don't know them well enough. Perhaps you have a speaking acquaintance with them, but that is not enough. Get closer to them. You will find them very decent fellows indeed. Why, even the men who produce the great metropolitan dailies in the big cities are splendid fellows when you get to know them. They fish, and play golf and tennis, and enjoy a ball game just like the rest of us. I know from personal conversation with many newspaper men that they are only too glad to receive the co-operation of the bankers in the dissemination of real news matter. Please understand that I do not mean by this that the newspaper will welcome write-ups or fake news items just merely to advertise the bank, but they do want information that is reliable and has real news value and will gladly give it space in their columns. In this way the bank can co-operate with and assist the newspaper.

There is no doubt that these two great factors in the development of our modern life, the bank and the newspaper, can assist each other and thereby benefit the general public much more than they are doing. Reciprocity, or co-operation, or call it what you will, is a logical, sensible, practical, human program, and if the newspaper and the bank will adopt this program and put it into real practice, I believe you will agree with me that good results will come to the bank and to the newspaper and to the people at large.

OLD NATIONAL OF SPOKANE IN EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN

Old National Bank of Spokane, Wash., has inaugurated a publicity campaign which is calculated to educate eastern bankers as to the exact geography of the Spokane country. Ignorance in regard to this subject has resulted in banking items on Spokane and contiguous territory reaching the bank in a circuitous manner, thereby entailing a loss of time which easily might be obviated if the natural geographical location of Spokane and its advantages as a railroad and distributive center in the vast and productive territory immediately tributary to it were understood better.

On a circular which the bank is sending out is a map of the Pacific Northwest, in which the Inland Empire is tinted and surrounded by a circle, with the location of Spokane prominently shown. There seems to be a tendency upon the part of some of the eastern bankers to associate Spokane with the Puget Sound cities, and some routings which have been received indicate that it even has been thought to be somewhere in the general region of Denver or Salt Lake City. As a matter of fact, Spokane is as far inland from the Pacific Coast as is Buffalo from the Atlantic. It is 339 miles from Seattle; 387 miles from Portland; 386 miles from Butte; 339 miles from Tacoma; 1,333 miles from Denver; 685 miles from Boise and 783 miles from Salt Lake. During the twenty years' existence of the Old National the bank has established direct correspondence with practically every banking town in this Inland Empire. This territory lies between the Cascade and Rocky mountains, and the contour of the country, railroad construction and established industries all combine to give Spokane undisputed commercial supremacy.

Spokane now is the greatest railroad center west of the Missouri River, being entered by five transcontinental lines, viz: Canadian Pacific, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific, Great Northern, and Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railway; also by the Spokane, Portland and Seattle; Spokane Falls and Northern; Idaho and Washington Northern; Spokane and Inland; Washington Central and ten branch lines. There also are three hundred miles of interurban electric railroad in eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

This Inland Empire which is depicted on the map sent out by the Old National is a natural and commercial collection district, more closely unified than any of the states contributing to its area of 150,000 square miles. Spokane, with more than 100,000 population, is the capital of this Empire—the financial and commercial center of a district abounding in cities and towns.

W. J. Kommers, assistant cashier of the Old National, says that this circular which is being issued, though complete in itself, is to accompany each letter sent out to eastern banks wherein attention is called to a specific instance of bad routing. In this letter will be given the history of the actual routing of the check or draft, as gathered from the endorsements on the back of the item. In many cases the circuitous route can be indicated on the map by a blue lead pencil. In every case the actual number of days lost in transit will be given. Mr. Kommers states that in many cases items come to them after passing through a long chain of banks, traveling hundreds, and even thousands of miles needlessly and incurring a delay of from six to eight days. Delay in transit often is disastrous in cases of loss, for the courts still adhere strictly to the "due diligence" rule.

The plan adopted by the Old National is unique, and already other organizations have signified their intention of proceeding along similar lines. The Old National occupies a prominent position among the strong, progressive and up-to-date banks of the Pacific Northwest. It is capitalized at a million, has surplus and undivided profits amounting to $480,756.96, and deposits well over nine millions. D. W. Twohy is president, T. J. Humbird, vice-president and W. D. Vincent, cashier. W. J. Kommers, J. A. Yeomans and W. J. Smithson are assistant cashiers. Mr. Vincent has been very prominent in state association matters and in the affairs of the A. B. A., recently having been elected a member of its executive council.

A meeting of the stockholders of the Citizens Trust Company, Savannah, Ga., has been called for September 26th, at which time action will be taken upon a proposed increase in the company's capitalization from $100,000 to $150,000.

ILLINOIS BANKING NEWS

By C. C. Burford

Charles C. Craig, president of the Bank of Galesburg, member of the Illinois Bankers Association's committee on agriculture and vocational education, and for many years prominent in the state legislature and in state politics generally, is said to be slated for election to fill the unexpired term of William Lorimer in the United States senate.

Should the state legislature become democratic as a result of the November election, Mr. Craig will have a good chance to go to Washington. He has a host of friends among Illinois bankers who, irrespective of party, believe him to be an able man for United States senator.

Crabtree's Honor Appreciated

Illinois down-state bankers are congratulating E. E. Crabtree, of the banking firm of F. G. Farrell and Company of Jacksonville, and former president of the Illinois Bankers Association, upon his selection as a member from Illinois of the executive council of the American Bankers Association.

Bumper Corn Crop Assured

Frost scares are about a nightmare of the past in Illinois, as most of the corn in the state is beyond damage from a light September frost. Of course, there are many late fields of corn, that is, corn planted late in the spring and sometimes replanted, which would be injured by a severe frost. The ten days of intense heat in early September carried a large proportion of the crop far beyond danger of light frost and farmers and bankers are rejoicing. Lower prices for corn are freely predicted and many voice the opinion that new corn will yet reach a price this fall ranging from thirty-five cents down to thirty cents. Farmers are naturally displeased with the lower figures but the latter is a natural result of a bumper crop. Potatoes, upon the eve of the hot part of the campaign, seem to be an uninteresting game compared to corn prospects, high-priced land and automobiles.

Illinois Notes

Jewelry valued at $1,000 was stolen from the home of V. B. Elson, a Freeport banker, while the family were at lunch. Burglars entered the house unawares to the family.

Lee Harrington, a farmer wanted in Chicago, as well as in various points in Iowa and Michigan, was recently arrested in Rockford while attempting to pass a spurious check of $40.

A deal whereby eastern capitalists take over coal rights to more than 25,000 acres of Shelby and Fayette county lands, has just been completed by a local abstract company in Shelbyville. The syndicate which made the purchase intends, it is understood, to develop the coal deposits known to exist beneath the land in these two counties. There is also a good prospect that oil and gas may be found in paying quantities.

CHICAGO CHAPTER, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF BANKING

By W. W. Walton

Chicago Chapter, American Institute of Banking, will hold its annual fellowship meeting Tuesday evening, September 24th, in the Assembly Hall, Northwestern University building, this being the first meeting for the year 1912-1913. An excellent program has been arranged for the evening, consisting of short talks given by enthusiastic workers for the chapter, a few vaudeville sketches, music, cigars and a buffet luncheon—in fact, this meeting will be all that the name implies. A hearty invitation is extended to all bank clerks in the city of Chicago to attend this meeting. Admission will be by ticket only, and tickets may be obtained from the membership men in the various banks. A good time is assured all those who attend.

The educational features offered this year are worth many times the tuition asked. James I. Ennis, LL.B., master in chancery, who has had extensive banking and legal experience, and who is also a member of the faculty of the Chicago Business Law School and of the Walton School of Accountancy, has again been engaged to instruct the class in commercial and banking law. The course will consist of twenty-five lectures on the following subjects: Contracts; Agency; Bailments; Property; Sales; Partnership; Corporations; Insurance, and Negotiable Instruments. In addition to the foregoing, a series of twelve lectures has been arranged for in Rhetoric and Composition. This is a practical course and should be taken advantage of by all bank clerks. Halsey H. Matteson, who has been an instructor in the educational branch of the central department of the Young Men's Christian Association, Chicago, for the past twelve years, and who is also a graduate of Oberlin College and a graduate-student of Johns Hopkins University, will conduct this class. Mr. Matteson will lecture on the following subjects: Purpose, Material and Method; How to Get Down to Work; Expository Writing; Word Usage; Dictation and Correspondence; Idiom, Improperities; Narration; Good Taste in Choice of Words; Description; Effectiveness in Sentence Building; Argument and Persuasion; Variety in Composition.

ATHLETICS, THE CHICAGO CHAPTER, A. I. B.—THE ILLINOIS TRUST TEAM WINS THE BANKERS LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP

By OTTO J. KRAMPIKOWSKY.

On Saturday, September 14th, at De Paul Field, the Illinois Trust team played the Continental team to decide the championship of the Bankers League. A vast throng was on hand and the rooting was started by the adherents of the Illinois Trust team, and was enlivened in the fifth inning when Geo. A. Jackson of the Continental in a commanding way stepped into the field and told the umpire what he thought of him. The score at this time stood 4 to 0 in favor of the Illinois Trust. Otherwise the game was very interesting and well appreciated by the baseball fans on hand. At the end of the ninth inning the score was 4 to 3 in favor of the Illinois Trust, who thereby won the championship of the Bankers League. Austin Walsh played the star rôle for the Illinois Trusts. Besides pitching a great game for his team, he drove in three runs, which figured in the winning of the game.

R. C. KELLER ON FINANCIAL SITUATION

R. C. Keller, vice-president and cashier of the Colonial Trust and Savings Bank, in commenting on the general financial situation, said:

General conditions appear favorable.

The last call by the comptroller and the state department reflected a much more satisfactory reserve condition in the West than in the East, showing that the western banks are well able to care for the moving of the very bountiful crops that are being harvested.

Rates may continue around 5½ to 6 per cent for the next three months, but I can see nothing to warrant continued high rates and an unusual demand.

While this is a presidential year, I do not think that business conditions are affected to any great extent by politics. It may reflect somewhat in the security market, but I think the exceedingly dull bond market has been caused somewhat by the fact that the foreign markets are carrying a considerable amount of undigested securities and underwritings, and naturally when money is in good demand, banks and trust companies do not buy.

GUARANTY TRUST OF NEW YORK

Meeting of stockholders of Guaranty Trust Company has been called for October 1st to determine disposition of the $4,500,000 increase in capital stock, from $5,000,000 to $9,500,000, recommended by directors. Stockholders will be asked to ratify action of directors, taken at informal meeting last Wednesday, which recommended absorption of the Standard Trust Co. by the Guaranty Trust. Under the plan of merger the new stock is to be offered to stockholders at par, with the exception of $500,000, which will be turned over to the Standard Trust Co.; stockholders of latter company will receive one share of Guaranty Trust stock for each two shares of Standard held, and in addition a cash dividend of $20.

MILWAUKEE

NEWS LETTER BY CHALMER B. TRAVER

WISCONSIN

"The best meeting ever" is the verdict of Milwaukee delegates to the Detroit convention of the A. B. A. last week, who have been straggling back since the close of the convention on Friday.

Heard From Convention Delegates

Secretary George D. Bartlett of the Wisconsin Bankers Association started back with a trunkful of ideas picked up at the convention. But the trunk went wrong in Chicago and George has not succeeded in tracing its whereabouts yet.

The Wisconsin delegation has nothing but praise for the Battle Creek people who entertained the Badger bankers with a dinner on their way through to Detroit.

Assistant Cashier E. A. Reddeman of the Germania National is glad he preferred a regular hotel to a floating one. He returned with all his belongings whereas some of those who slept on the "City of Detroit" previous to its sudden departure charge that the floating hostelry hoisted anchor and sailed before they had a chance to remove portions of their wardrobe from their southern exposure rooms.

Whether the staterooms had southern exposure or not, the disgruntled ones threatened the company officers with some kind of exposure, direction to be optional.

The ladies of the party say they had a "perfectly de-lightful time."

Pittsburgh Bankers Visit Milwaukee

And while Milwaukee bankers went east to Detroit, several Pittsburgh bankers came west on the "Pittsburg Special," stopping in Milwaukee all day Friday and late into Friday night. Robert D. Coard, manager of the bond department of the Mellon National, H. B. Powell, Jr., advertising manager of the same, and H. M. Landis, cashier of the Federal National, representing the smoky city banking interests on the trip, made a tour of Milwaukee's financial district and pronounced it good. The delegation was entertained by the Milwaukee Merchants and Manufacturers Association at a dinner in the Auditorium at night.

Group 5 to Meet at Fort Atkinson

The last of the group meetings of the W. B. A. will be that of Group 5 at Fort Atkinson on October 23d. This group is the only one meeting after the state convention in June. S. M. Smith, Janesville, is president, and H. L. Adkins, Elkhorn is secretary.

Two New Wisconsin Banks

Commissioner of Banking A. E. Kuolt has authorized two new banks to commence business. The Farmers and Citizens Bank of Watertown has $50,000 capital. Officers are: President, Leonard Schempf; vice-president, H. Weitheimer; cashier, A. D. Poltz. The Rock County Savings and Trust Company of Janesville is capitalized at $50,000 and is officered by the following: President, T. H. Jackman; vice-president, A. P. Burnham; cashier, C. H. Weirick.

Wisconsin Notes

By a deal closed this week, the Bradley State Bank comes under the control of Tomahawk business men. The new officers and directors are: President, John W. Froelich; vice-president, C. H. Grundy; cashier, F. P. Werner.

The Union State Bank of Lancaster will spend $10,000 in improvements during the next six months. Aside from extensive interior decorations much new equipment will be added to that at present in the bank.

County Judge Sheridan has appointed the Citizens Savings and Trust Company as administrator of the estate of Mary Boelter and issued an order limiting the time for creditors to present claims, upon application of the heirs.

Reports from Marinette credit the Soo line with the purchase of the Wisconsin & Michigan railway in order to put up stronger competition with the Chicago & Northwestern and Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul roads for the freight business in the northern section of the state.

Farmers in the vicinity of Jefferson, who have just finished threshing one of the largest crops of barley and oats ever harvested, now say that the hot weather of September will be a factor in bringing about a record breaking corn crop.

¶ This Bank, being at the logical center of Wisconsin banking activity, and having an exceptional list of State and Foreign correspondents, offers its services to conservative Banks with the assurance that such a connection will be of mutual advantage.

HAYNES McFADDEN OUTLINES PLAN FOR ELIMINATING CONFLICTING CONVENTION DATES

Haynes McFadden, secretary of the Georgia Bankers Association, outlined in Detroit last week a plan whereby conflicting convention dates may be eliminated. This expression is not to be taken literally, however, for it is quite obvious that if the dates of two states like Oregon and Florida were to conflict it would not make much difference. The proposition is to avoid conflicts within the limit of expediency and practicability. It applies chiefly to neighboring states where conflicts work an apparent disadvantage to all concerned. Mr. McFadden believes that the first secretary to make his arrangements in each subdivision of the country should take the dates which suit him best, and then notify his brother secretaries of his selection so that in arranging the time for their conventions they will be able to avoid conflicts. It is said by some that this plan is impracticable. It was followed by the South last year. The fact that of the forty-eight states over half of them have their conventions in May and June is advanced as an insurmountable obstacle. Ten conventions can be comfortably and conveniently distributed over a period of thirty days with a day intermission after each convention. Very few states spend more than two days at a convention, and if thirty states all should wish to meet within that limit of thirty days they could reduce objectionable conflicts to a minimum by a group system of states, arranged for the purpose of comparing notes only. Some states could report in two groups when so situated as to make that desirable or necessary, and all reports could be made on a postcard.

In arranging groups of states to conform to an already established standard, the districts as arranged for the National Reserve Association could be used; indeed, it would be hard to get a better geographical arrangement. Under this plan there are six districts composed respectively of the New England, Eastern, Southern, Middle, Western and Pacific states. In each of these six districts the secretary of each state could notify the other secretaries as soon as the annual convention dates had been selected. The most numerous district would be the South, where thirteen states would compare notes. A dozen postcards in each state would do the work and a smaller number would be required in each of the other five districts.

This year there were twenty-seven conventions held in the months of May and June. These naturally are the months in which the most annoying conflicts occur, and naturally are the months which should receive the greatest attention. In the two months in which conventions were the most numerous, the largest number held in any one district in any one month was six in the South in the month of May. The only conflict was between Tennessee and Arkansas, and that easily could have been avoided, which proves the value that this plan would possess in execution. Missouri and Mississippi, though in different districts, have many interests in common, and this year they met on the same dates. This could have been prevented by means of the postcard notices suggested.

Mr. McFadden believes that in arranging for convention dates the convenience of reserve city bankers should be taken into consideration. Many bankers are as much if not more interested in seeing their reserve agents than in seeing the members of the banking fraternity from their own state. With the system adopted by the South this year the attendance was augmented by twenty-five or more reserve bankers in every state, and they contributed to the most successful season the South ever has experienced. The Georgia group meetings were held this year on consecutive dates. As a result of this there were a large number of bankers from other states present. The year before when the meetings were scattered, there were only two bankers outside of the state of Georgia at any one of the meetings.

Another objection to conflicting dates is the difficulty in securing desirable speakers. If a speaker can by making a trip of ten days, address several conventions, he is willing to make a greater effort to do so than he would be to address one convention. Then, again, if several conventions are held in one week, the space accorded to them in the financial papers necessarily is smaller than it would be if there were but one that week, for the other state associations are entitled to a similar amount of notice.

JAMES K. LYNCH PASSES THROUGH CITY

James K. Lynch, vice-president of the First National of San Francisco, a member of the A. B. A. executive council, and whose resolution introduced at Detroit produced the program committee, passed through Chicago Monday on his way home. President Huttig and Secretary Farnsworth no doubt will be glad to consult frequently with this program committee, which is made up of one member representing each of the sections.

FIRST TRUST AND SAVINGS OF ALTON

Among the thriving progressive banks of Illinois always must be mentioned the First Trust and Savings of Alton. The bank is capitalized at $100,000 and has deposits amounting to $329,832.28. H. L. Black is president. J. E. Kelsey and C. F. Herb are vice-presidents, D. A. Wyckoff is cashier and H. E. Busse, assistant cashier. Mr. Wyckoff is treasurer of the Illinois Bankers Association and one of the leading bankers of Alton. He has been an active worker in behalf of group, state and national organizations, and has had a valuable banking experience in Alton, his home city, having been connected with one of the older institutions of the city for many years, and more recently with the First Trust and Savings.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, September 18.—The past week has been one of activity with St. Louis banks, and activity of a satisfactory character, from the viewpoint of profit and loss. There has been an excellent demand for credits from all sources, with the feature an unusually heavy offering of commercial bills. The interior has been taking a large amount of currency, the volume of shipments for the week being the largest for the season to date, with excellent engagements for the next ten days or two weeks. Local banks have been disposed to confine their purchases of commercial paper to local concerns in a large degree, though numerous eastern bills, bearing tempting returns, have been for sale in this market. Rates hold firm, the extreme quotable range being from 5 to 6 per cent, which, with brokerage out, means something above the major figure to certain commercial borrowers. The character of the borrowing is extremely healthful, as there is no urgency shown in any quarter, but rather a strong inquiry, indicating solid growth and expansion in business. This city continues to be flooded with country merchants, whose buying is on a more generous scale than has been the case for more than a decade. One leading house in the dry goods jobbing line announced that its August sales were the heaviest for that month in the fifty-one years it has been in business. Scarcity of merchandise in first hands is proving about the only factor to hold down the volume of sales. In the cotton goods line this is especially true, and prices are likely to hold their present level, even should the present promise of the cotton crop be realized, owing to the scarcity of goods. The progress of crops in the Southwest and Middle West during the week has been excellent, and this is particularly true of corn. The recent hot weather was as if made to order for growth of the Indian cereal, and over a large area of the belt the crop is past danger from frost. Potatoes and all roots are progressing in good shape, and the Ozark fruit crop promises to break all previous records. Early fall farm work is well under way, and the reports of backwardness in the West, due to disease among farm animals, have been grossly exaggerated. The horse malady was confined to a relatively narrow area, and even there it is reported well under control.

Baron von Twimmer Here

Baron von Twimmer, son of the president of the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, which is largely interested in the Missouri Pacific Railway, was in St. Louis this week. The Baron, who is an admirer of American banking and commercial methods, visited several of the local nationals, and was entertained by members of the local banking fraternity. He is now making a tour of inspection of the Missouri Pacific lines with President B. F. Bush of that system.

Betz with South Side Bank

At a meeting of the board of directors of the South Side Bank on Wednesday, Charles F. Betz was elected a member of the board, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Henry Koehler, Jr. Mr. Betz is president of the Columbia Pretzel and Baking Company and is besides a large owner of realty and interested in a number of large enterprises on the South Side.

Missouri-Lincoln in Suit

Two stockholders of the Missouri-Lincoln Trust Company, owning 250 shares, have brought suit to prevent the reorganization of the company and to have a receiver appointed. The action is directed against the board of directors, consisting of Albert Arnstein, William Bagnell, E. M. Bowman, W. F. Carter, C. C. Collins, John C. Roberts, Moses N. Sale, Thomas Wright and Fred G. Zeibig. At a meeting held in March a majority of the stockholders voted for reorganization, and according to the petitioners the new plan does not contemplate a distribution of the remaining assets, but proposes to make them the basis for a new institution. In the petition it is averred that the affairs of the company have been mismanaged and the assets wasted and sacrificed.

Quit Active Business in 1907

The Missouri-Lincoln went out of active business one Monday morning in September, 1907. Its assets were taken over by the Mercantile Trust Company, which latter company, backed by the St. Louis clearing house banks, guaranteed payment to all depositors of the Missouri-Lincoln. Assets of more than $7,- 000,000 have been disposed of in the liquidation subsequent to the closing, and, it is claimed, there remain assets amounting to $1,-800,000 and liabilities of $800,000. The petitioners believe that if the company's affairs were wound up now, each share would receive $40. Since the company went out of business the stockholders have not received a penny from their investments, and many of them have waxed weary with waiting and are now stirring restlessly.

Campbell Denies a Report

It was reported in a big daily here that James Campbell, St. Louis' richest citizen and a corporate poo-bah, was about to retire from the presidency of the North American Company. The report even went so far as to mention J. D. Mortimer, vice-president, as his successor. The next day, though, Jim's voice was heard, via long distance telephone from the East, denying the report. He said in most emphatic tones that he had no idea of retiring from the North American Company, or any other company. Someone was a—very much mistaken.

Banks Get Washed Bills

St. Louis banks this week received their first consignment of washed, germ-proof bills, turned out from Uncle Sam's money washing machines. The subtreasury there got a consignment of $44,000 of the renovated currency, in ones and fives, which were dished out around to the various banks. According to Ralph P. Johnson, cashier of the subtreasury, the bank tellers like the bills all right, though some of them are skeptical about the success of the washing proposition. The bills feel queer, and have a peculiar odor.

Want Bank Law Changed

Advices from Oklahoma are to the effect that the bankers of that state are not entirely satisfied with the bank guaranty law. This fact has been emphasized since the recent convention of the Oklahoma bankers convention at Oklahoma City, and a concerted effort is being made to create sentiment in favor of transferring the cost of keeping the guaranty fund intact from the bankers to the paying public. The bankers argue that the guaranty law is for the protection of the entire public, and if the public wants the protection they should be willing to pay the premium. As the law is, each state banker is assessed a percentage upon his deposits annually, and in addition is subject to an additional assessment whenever the guaranty fund is depleted below a fixed amount.

ACTUAL value received from their connection with us has increased our accounts from other banks 50% in two years. We therefore invite the business of others with the assurance of mutual satisfaction.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF INVESTMENT BANKERS MEETS.

A meeting of the board of governors of the newly formed Investment Bankers Association was held yesterday afternoon at the Union League Club. At this meeting President George B. Caldwell, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, announced a list of the various committees which will run the business of the organization. Committees on membership, legislation, publicity and domestic relations, revision of constitution and by-laws, finance and auditing, foreign relations, railroad bonds and equipment notes, industrials and miscellaneous stocks and bonds, public service corporations, municipal bonds and on the program for the annual meeting, were appointed by President Caldwell.

In addressing the board of governors Mr. Caldwell said:

I desire to congratulate the members of the board of governors on the large number of applications received for membership in our association, as well as on the high character of the firms that have so far been approved by the membership committee. In a new organization of this kind, we, of course, cannot be too careful as to our membership and to that end several applications have not, as yet, been passed upon favorably by the membership committee, some further investigation being necessary. It is also true that some applications will be received that will not pass the approval of the membership committee, so far as their business standards are concerned, and on this subject we must have the fullest discussion and final instructions from the board of governors at this time.

It has been my hope that the Investment Bankers Association will stand for both "responsiveness" and "responsibility." "Responsiveness to the capital demands of legitimate industry; responsibility to those to whom the bankers must look to provide the capital supply, or, in other words, those who are expected to buy our securities. The value of membership in this association is primarily the influence which said membership will have upon the mind of the investing public regarding the stability, financial responsibility and general high character their membership implies. So far as the investing public is concerned, members of this association are distributors of securities which legitimate business creates. The problem of this association is how effectively to inspire the public with confidence that a recommendation of a security by any member of this association is a guaranty of its reliability, and further, how to educate the public to know that the greatest protection from sharp practice which the public can have is through their dealing with the members of this association. When the Investment Bankers Association has done this, it will become a vital force before the investing public of the United States and will have reached a point where membership in the association is very valuable and practically essential to anyone who desires to carry on a legitimate bond business. It would, in my judgment, also draw members of the association closer together—those within the fold would be in greater sympathy, because each day they could see the association was exerting a powerful influence for their benefit, and those without the fold would have before them an inspiration to do legitimate business and become members.

It has also occurred to me that the Investment Bankers Association need not necessarily be confined to the United States. A representative of the London Times and of the London Daily Mail, which has the largest circulation of any daily paper in Great Britain, will, I am told, with the proper encouragement from the Investment Bankers Association, make membership in the Investment Bankers Association the standard for American advertisers. Now, it seems to me that if this publication can be interested along these lines that the majority of the reputable publications in the United States could be brought into line in the same way. I therefore think it important that we consider at this time the best plan to accomplish the above results, and I suggest for your discussion and approval the following synopsis for our first year's work.

First, that our association should secure, if possible, the co-operation of all the editors of publications furnishing financial information. The argument is, as I believe everyone will concede, that the bulk of investment news which at present reaches the public is oftentimes most inaccurate and unsatisfactory. I have reference especially to the news furnished by popular magazines maintaining "investment departments for general investment comment." Of course, there are splendid magazines and papers of great accuracy, but these magazines are not the ones that are of popular circulation. The magazines which we read for financial news the general public hardly know exist. Now, the editors of all publications are no doubt anxious to print, if any at all, intelligent and accurate financial information, and one of the problems for us to solve is to find a way in which all this can be turned to the benefit of the Investment Bankers Association membership, and by them to the benefit of the investing public. I believe it

REFORM PLAN DISREGARDED AT DETROIT

Bar a place on the program, the plan of the National Monetary Commission to reform currency and banking was a "last year's style" at the Detroit convention. There neither was discussion nor action and to some, perhaps, the situation was discouraging. Advocates of the plan consider the news from Detroit disappointing in that it appears to show a lukewarmness that had not been expected. While it is true that the most prominent figures in the banking reform movement have appeared to be business men and not bankers, it is a fact that leading bankers have been influential in sustaining the movement during the past year or two and in shaping its course. If they are to give up or lessen their support or encouragement it is feared that attempts to get legislation could hardly succeed. But the one short session of congress remains between now and the expiration date set for the Aldrich-Vreeland act and many fear that it even may not be extended. Much less do they expect any new legislation to replace it as a panacea for panics on the statute books. Workers are downhearted. Currency reformers in congress are divided. Unless a junction of the different groups can be effected in the near future the current belief is it will not be possible to meet the hostility of the radical element, which is well organized and aggressive as well as determined to force through some scheme of its own during the coming winter, if possible. The attitude taken by some of the influential bankers, that it will be as well to let matters drift during the short session and await the coming of a new congress, is considered dangerous. It is pointed out that unless this present congress can be committed to some definite program it will be hardly practicable to get much done at the next session. Experience shows that action taken at a long session is usually the result of pledges given by a political party in the shape of tentative legislation at a preceding short session. There is a general expression on the part of those who believe the fight for banking reforms should be actively continued that the work henceforward to be done should be based upon a simple bill or perhaps upon a series of simple propositions put forward without recommending any bill whatever in set terms. This plan of action would serve to keep the campaign open, thereby affording a basis of opposition to radical schemes and enterprises on the part of extremists in congress. At the same time this would furnish a beginning for banking reform and would at least take the first step toward thorough and inclusive action that might be had later. It would lay the foundation for a comprehensive plan to be adopted in the future if it did no more. The political platforms present no plan, only time-worn platitudes finding a place in those documents.

In the meantime let all bankers be upon guard. An opportunity may yet present itself. Some yet expect Governor Wilson to come out in favor of sound legislation on this most vital of subjects.

CLOSE RELATIONSHIP OF BANKERS

Some of those misguided individuals who are loudest in their denunciations of the alleged money trust, point to the close relationship and acquaintanceship which frequently exist between big bankers as "prima facie" evidence that there exists such a trust—or, as some choose to term it—a conspiracy, the tenor of which is that only a select few are enabled to secure a sufficient amount of money adequately to finance the various business propositions in which they may be interested. To one at all versed in banking and financial matters the utter fallacy of such a line of reasoning is quite obvious. This intimacy between the heads of large financial institutions is calculated merely to bring about improved business conditions. By means of this association each banker is enabled, with the aid of the experience and judgment of his fellow-bankers, better to determine the wisest investments for the funds of which he is the custodian, and thereby to insure to the depositor the safekeeping of his moneys, the paramount object of the bank. It is contended that conferences regarding the extension of credit have a tendency to create prejudice against certain unfavored classes of investments. It is, however, difficult to detect any element of logic in this argument, for if an investment is unsafe for one bank, there can be no doubt but what it will be unsafe for all banks. It is because the bankers have confidence in each other that they are able to co-operate with each other, which is reflected beneficially to the depositor, a fact apparently lost sight of by that class which interprets any such attempt as a plot to control the extension of credits. Those who are inclined to narrowness of view should read and study the papers offered at the Detroit convention by George M. Reynolds of this city. He also showed lack of restricted or localized environment in his generous tribute to the way New York bankers handle their resources in times of currency stringency. Mr. Reynolds opened a way for a better western appreciation of eastern integrity and good sense and for a public modification of money trust antipathies.

SUPERVISION THE ISSUE AT PEORIA

Just as registration and voting are your plain duty, so is your presence, if you are an Illinois banker, at Peoria next week demanded. Questions vital to soundness of banking will be acted upon. You have no moral right to dodge, nor any moral right to oppose bank supervision because you are a big banker and have deposits from non-supervised banks. No quibble about the "legality" of the Dawes committee appointment will avail if the Illinois bankers really want to go on record for state supervision. Banking in Illinois should be made so safe that no depositor could ever lose a dollar. Special pleaders will tell you that the private bank deposits are insured by "the whole wealth and resources of the owners," and not limited to "double liability" as in corporate banks. Of course the crux comes on "the whole wealth" of the owner. If the owner is wealthy he easily can pay up a capital to protect his depositors and he can satisfy depositors also that he has a capital and that it is intact by submitting to examination. Tax evasion will be more difficult under supervision but who wants to vote to help protect the tax-dodger. Tax dodging isn't honest, and a banker should be honest.

As to statistics which go to show that supervised banking is the safer of all competing kinds, there is an abundance. Most of the states have adopted the advanced doctrine of supervised and safe banking and not one which ever has taken the step has gone back to the old practices of go-as-you-please banking. The newer states went on record first and their elders followed suit until now Illinois and but four other states remain open territory where it is easier to start a bank without capital than to rob one.

Over in Indiana seven private bankers fought supervision, as a committee, for three years. The week the new law went into effect, five of the seven closed up—unable to stand the first examination.

In Wisconsin reports show no failures under the new law and that all converted banks prospered greatly beyond their history as private institutions. This is true in other states such as Minnesota, Missouri and Michigan. Supervision is to a bank what the life-raft is to the steamer. Boat owners complain of the harsh provisions of the law and in New York some boats have gone out of commission because built to evade the law and consequently unable to carry 100 per cent life-saving equipment as required. Let every Illinois banker who can, attend the Peoria convention and vote for what he knows to be the only safe banking plan—a plan which includes known shareholders, known capital and known condition. The depositor is entitled to know.

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE MEETS AT DETROIT

A meeting of the members of the committee on agricultural and financial development and education was held in Room T, Hotel Ponchartrain, convention hall floor, on Monday of last week in Detroit. Joseph Chapman of Minneapolis, chairman of the committee, presided. Edwin Chamberlain of San Antonio, Texas; B. F. Harris of Champaign, Ill.; Joseph G. Brown of Raleigh, N. C.; W. D. Vincent of Spokane, Wash., and E. J. Curtin of Decorah, Ia., members of the committee were present. Ambassador Myron T. Herrick, representing this country in France, was the only absentee. In addition to the members of the committee present the following delegates and visitors to the convention attended this conference: W. M. Van Deusen, cashier National Newark Banking Company, Newark, N. J. (Mr. Van Deusen also is president of the New Jersey Bankers Association); E. L. Howe, vice-president of the Princeton (N. J.) Bank, a member of the executive committee; R. E. James, president of the Easton (Pa.) Trust Company; George E. Lawson and F. H. Williams of Michigan; David H. Walker of Iowa; H. P. Beckwith of North Dakota; Messrs. Fort and Collins of Tennessee; Breckinridge Jones, president of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, St. Louis; Chandler Starr, president of the Rockford (Ill.) Clearing House; H. E. Otte, vice-president of the National City Bank of Chicago; W. W. Bowman, secretary of the Kansas Bankers Association; J. R. Noel, president of the North West State Bank, Chicago; McLane Tilton, Tell City, Ala., secretary of the Alabama Bankers Association; Lewis E. Pierson, president of the Irving National, New York; E. W. Abbott, agricultural expert, Detroit; George E. Allen, educational director for the American Institute of Banking; Arthur Reynolds, president of the Des Moines National; M. H. Malott, president Citizens Bank, Abilene, Kan., president of the Kansas Bankers Association; J. W. Wheeler, vice-president Capital National, St. Paul; Charles Shade, president of the Iowa Bankers Association; William George, president of the Old Second National, Aurora, Ill.

William G. Edens, secretary of the agricultural committee of the Illinois Bankers Association, was made secretary of the conference. Chairman Chapman called the meeting to order and told briefly of the success of the Minneapolis conference of agriculturists and educators, held August 7th and 8th, and exhibited an advance copy of the printed proceedings of the conference, which report later on was referred to in the A. B. A. convention as the "Farmers' Bible." Mr. Chapman said that 25,000 copies had been authorized by the conference, and that they would be circulated through the assistance of the secretaries of the various state organizations, also that a circular would be sent to each of the members of the agricultural committees of the state bankers associations, outlining what is being done by the committees on agriculture and education in each of the states where this work is in progress. Mr. Chapman submitted his report as chairman of the A. B. A. committee, which was enthusiastically received. Messrs. Starr and Harris of Illinois told of the work in progress in that state, and Mr. Allen of New York spoke for the Empire State. Mr. Beckwith of North Dakota told of the work of their better farming association and of the pride the bankers of that state felt at having won the silver cup awarded at the Minneapolis conference to the state bankers association which had made the greatest headway in actual accomplishments. Edward Chamberlain, the member of the committee who recently visited Europe, tentatively reported on the land mortgage, or farm financing, as engaged in by the various French and German organizations interested in this subject, while Breckinridge Jones of St. Louis gave his views with respect to the work of the committee.

At the meeting of the executive council held in the convention hall on Friday afternoon, September 13th, on the recommendation of Joseph Chapman, chairman of the committee, George Woodruff, president of the First National at Joliet, Ill., was added to the A. B. A. committee on agriculture and financial development and education. Mr. Woodruff had reported to the A. B. A. convention his firsthand impressions gained from extensive investigation of the subject while in France, England and Germany, and so favorably impressed the convention with his presentation of the subject that the members of the council were unanimous in their endorsement of the Chapman recommendation.

The Illinois Convention

The twenty-second annual convention of the Illinois Bankers Association will be held in Peoria on the 25th and 26th of this month. Assembly day will be Tuesday, the 24th. Registration and headquarters will be conducted at the Jefferson Hotel, mezzanine floor, registration beginning at one o'clock, the 24th. At six o'clock on Tuesday the group dinners will be held, to which all are invited. Reservations can be made through the group secretaries and John C. Paddock. The executive council meeting and dinner will occur at the same hour in the Indian Room, Jefferson Hotel.

On Wednesday morning there will be addresses by President Harris, Dr. George E. Vincent, president of the University of Minnesota, and H. E. Miles, chairman of the educational committee, National Association of Manufacturers, Racine, Wis. Prof. Vincent will talk on education and national efficiency and Mr. Miles will talk on the subject of vocational education. On Wednesday afternoon Harrington Emerson of La Porte, Ind., will tell of business efficiency in relation to finance and industry and J. N. Dolley, the famous banking commissioner for Kansas, will tell about supervising "Blue-Sky" investments. Will B. McIntyre of the Peoples National, Rock Island, will give a talk which is on the program under the head of "Bumps."

Thursday morning will be an agricultural session. Dr. William O. Thompson, president of the Ohio State University, Columbus, O., Prof. W. G. Eckhardt, consulting agriculturist De Kalb county, Charles A. Conant of New York and Hugh S. Magill, Jr., of Princeton are billed to make addresses. Dr. Thompson will talk on agriculture and the problems of rural life; Prof. Eckhardt will tell what they do in De Kalb. Mr. Conant will talk on land and land credits; he made a similar address at the recent convention of the American Bankers Association held in Detroit. Mr. Magill will tell of the great opportunity for organization.

Thursday afternoon will be devoted to the subject of good roads. Jesse Taylor of Jamestown, Ohio, will tell how to get good roads; S. E. Bradt, chairman of the good roads committee of the association, has chosen for his subject "The Solution of Illinois Road Problems." The Hon. Percival G. Rennick, collector of internal revenue, Peoria, is down for an address entitled "Talk—That's All."

The growth of Peoria as a retail center has been remarkable. Business enterprises which a few years ago occupied small and unpretentious quarters, now occupy whole buildings. From the standpoint of quantity and quality, the diversity of goods, the efficiency of service, and the artistic display of merchandise, Peoria stores are excelled by none, and in many instances are not equalled even in the larger cities.

The city's area is 9.4 square miles, and its population, including suburbs, 115,029. The assessed valuation for 1911 was $21,829,266. There are twenty public school buildings, representing a total expenditure of $1,250,000, with 325 teachers and 9,600 pupils. In 1911, $500,250 was appropriated for educational purposes. The city also boasts of two colleges—Bradley Polytechnic Institute and Spaulding Institute for Boys. There are two public libraries and prospects of obtaining another. The eighty-four churches cost about $1,600,000.

Not the least among the prosperous institutions of Peoria are its banks, of which there are ten, with combined capital of $2,420,000, surplus, $2,097,630, deposits of $21,891,890 and loans of $21,182,925. The total clearings for 1911 were $161,223,684. Commercial German National leads in deposits with $5,107,240, the First National is second with $3,794,990, and is followed by the Central National with $2,456,510, and the Savings Bank of Peoria, with $2,133,200. Dime Savings and Trust Company, Home Savings and State, Illinois National, Merchants National and State Trust and Savings are close behind the leaders in the matter of deposits. Walter Barker is president of the Commercial German National; C. R. Wheeler is the head of the First National and R. W. Kempshall and H. Hedrich, respectively, are presidents of the Central National and the Savings Bank of Peoria. G. W. Curtiss, Valentine Ulrich, William C. White, Fred Luthy and E. A. Strause are presidents of the Dime Savings and Trust, Home Savings and State, Illinois National, Merchants National, and the State Trust and Savings banks. G. W. Curtiss also is president of the Peoria Clearing House. C. E. Ulrich, the vice-president, occupies the same position with the Home Savings and State Bank, and William C. White is secretary and treasurer of the clearing house. All of these institutions are members of the state and clearing house associations.

The Peoria Association of Commerce has had much to do with promoting the civic welfare of the city. Its objects and purposes are to encourage the moral, social, educational, commercial and industrial conditions of Peoria, and to secure the co-operation, as of one body, of all individuals, and all educational, professional, commercial and industrial organizations; to gather and distribute business, social and economic information and statistics; to promote equitable principles of trade and commercial integrity; to give opportunity for acquaintance among citizens for free interchange of views, and to secure concerted action in matters of public interest; to consider and correct abuses growing out of public service, and to encourage all men to submerge individual interests and desires that conflict with civic development. The association has identified itself with a vast number of movements looking to the improvement of the city. They have interested themselves in the good roads movement now being carried on so extensively throughout the state. On September 27th, immediately following the bankers' convention, the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, which had its inception at the Sherman House in Chicago last March, will hold a good roads convention, which will be in the nature of a conference, and at which advocates of good roads will determine upon a course of procedure which is calculated to give Illinois a standing in the matter of highway improvement consistent with its agricultural, business and social supremacy. At this conference Warden Thomas B. Tynan of the Canon City (Colo.) state prison will be the principal speaker. Mr. Tynan was prevailed upon to address the good roads enthusiasts by William G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois and president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. Mr. Edens recently visited Colorado, and in company with Warden Tynan, inspected the convict-built roads of the state. Mr. Tynan uses moving pictures in connection with his lecture, showing the men at work, their camps, etc. The delegates and visitors will be entertained by the business men of Peoria. W. E. Hull is chairman of the committee having charge of the arrangements.

There are numerous points of interest in and about Peoria which will prove to be of extreme interest to the traveler who enters the portals of this hospitable municipality. No city in the world possesses a system of parks which is kept up better. The parks and parkways comprise 425 acres, the property being valued at $3,500,000. Grand View drive is 14,632 feet long and 100 feet wide. From this drive can be seen the Illinois River, and on a clear day, with a good glass, Henry, forty miles distant, is visible. This view is spoken of as rivaling the "cañon of the Colorado," the Potomac view from Mount Vernon, the Hudson and famous Switzerland scenes. A very fine view of the surrounding country can be obtained from the top of the Observatory tower at Grand Point, near the Peoria Country Club. A beautiful monument of granite and bronze is located in the Court House Square, erected by the women of Peoria in memory of the soldier and sailor dead of Peoria county, at a cost of $40,000. Near this monument is situated the Lincoln and Douglas debate tablet, unveiled in 1911.

Originally there were two bankers' associations in Illinois; viz., Private Bankers Association and Bankers Association of the State of Illinois. At the request of the latter, which is the present association, it was proposed that the two associations unite and consolidate. This was brought about in the year 1894, under a solemn compact and agreement which essentials were embodied in the constitution providing that at least one-half of the officers and executive council shall be private bankers, and that a committee of five private bankers shall be appointed annually whose duty shall be to guard and protect the interests of private bankers. As time went on objection was made to the provision for one-half of the officers and executive being elected from private banks and for the sake of harmony and in the general interest of the association the private bankers last year consented to a change in the constitution, whereby this distinction was eliminated, which weakened the power of the private bankers in the association. No sooner was this accomplished and Mr. Harris elected as president, than he started the agitation to bring about the destruction of the private banks.

"Why should the corporate bank members of this association aid in bringing this about? Is there any more reason to-day why the private banker should be forced out of business than there was when the consolidation of the two associations took place? Is it honorable to invite consolidation and then destroy them later on when the weaker element in the association becomes the stronger? Is the banking business any more of a public nature to-day than it was then and for this reason needs incorporation now and not then? Is corporate banking of so much safety to the public that it should monopolize the entire banking business? Why did the framers of our state constitution provide that the legislature should not pass any law for incorporating banks that would be effective until it had first been submitted to a vote of the people for ratification, if they thought corporate banking was entirely free from objection? Did not the fact that the limited liability of the stockholders and the past bitter experiences with corporate banks have considerable to do with it?

"The blot and stain of bad banking is confined to no one class of banks. The fact that the private banker has everything at stake to back up his business is considered by many as equal if not superior as a guaranty of safety to any examination that can be made by an official, who is usually a stranger to local conditions, can possibly be. It is no answer to say that some who start private banks never had anything at stake. The same thing shows up in corporate banks. Law is not a cure-all. Defects in human nature will show up in spite of laws and will ever continue to do so. The report of the Dawes committee assumes that the people cannot discriminate for themselves what kind of a bank they should do business with and should be compelled to patronize corporate banks only. Mr. Harris seems to think that in agricultural communities where there is no bank other than private that the farmers should be compelled to go into the banking business by taking shares in a corporate bank or go without banking facilities. This is his idea of American liberty. In one-bank towns, if it is a private bank only and the people are not satisfied, it is an easy matter for them to organize a corporate bank, and in large cities where it is claimed the private bank evil is the greatest, there are plenty of corporate banks to patronize, and more being organized all the time, some of which are little more than branch banks of the central districts.

"The question for this association to decide is, whether they want to change this association from a bankers association to a corporate bankers association. Do the needs of the state demand that all banks shall be incorporated? Are the exigencies of the case so great that the long recognized right of the individual to engage in business as an individual should be surrendered? Is corporate banking the only kind this association is going to longer recognize? We are not a legislative body and must submit our wants to the legislature for approval. Do you think a recommendation of this kind will be looked upon as free from selfish motives and is for altruistic purposes? Will it not look more like an attempt to get control of the banking business of the state? Will not the association be accused of attempting the organization of a trust or monopoly which will likely bring upon the banking business of the state harsh and unjust laws? Does it not smatter too much of class against class and entirely destroy the primary purposes and object of this association? Why must we come to the parting of the ways and the long years of close association be severed? Can this association no longer continue part corporate and part private? Is greed, intolerance and selfishness the back of it, or is it mere blindness upon the part of those who believe that the day has come when individual effort along individual lines must be merged in corporate action?

"The comptroller of the currency, in his report for 1911, gives the number of failures of state and private banks during the year ending June 30, 1911, as follows: Total failures, 56. State banks, 28, with liabilities of $12,678,697; private banks, 22, with liabilities of $3,150,750. Four savings banks and two trust companies also failed. Number of national bank failures not given.

"The comptroller in this report states that subsequent to the year 1896 statistics are wanting relating to the settlement of the affairs of failed state and private banks, making it impossible to give the amount and rate per cent of dividends paid to creditors. Yet Mr. Harris in a reported speech before the Chicago Association of Commerce, gave what he calls statistics to show a ridiculous situation of private banks as compared to corporate banks. Corporations do not possess all the virtues and advantages that our distinguished president claims for them. Brought up under the shadow of their greatness he has lost sight entirely of the needs of the smaller communities. There is a place for all and this great association cannot afford to have an impression go out that it is willing to destroy one class of banks to give a monopoly to others.

"The people themselves will act when they think it is necessary. Why fear them? Why use the threat that unless we act, some dire legislation is in store for us? This argument is too old and threadbare to be used by a real live progressive. Our mission should be to guide and direct, not to force and drive. We, as an association, are organized for mutual benefit and not for the purpose of putting one class of our membership out of business. Our constitution, which has been recently revised, still provides for the appointment of a standing committee whose purpose and object is to protect the private banker's interest. Why should our president undertake to override its duties and functions? The fact that this committee is a constitutional one puts the private banking interest in its control and is not a matter to be taken up by the association as a whole. Was this compact and constitutional provision made simply to be broken and not as a guarantee of protection to the private banks? If so, why a constitution at all? Is this association going to substitute the rule of the majority in place of its constitutional limitations? If it so acts in its own affairs, what confidence can the public place in its recommendations?

Open Letter from Private Banker

Charles W. Wilson, president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, at Stewardson, wrote to President B. F. Harris what he must have thought to be a most convincing reply, for he had it printed as an open letter and sent to all private bankers in the state with the advice, "please do your duty." Mr. Wilson says:

Dear Sir:

Your printed communication of the 10th inst. is at hand and contents fully noted, and in reply beg leave to state, that I seriously object to the plan you propose concerning private banks and make this personal appeal for justice. I would consider it just as reasonable and as much justice for a law to be passed that all old practicing attorneys and doctors who are not graduates of some law school or who have not passed an examination, to pass a law now (after years of service or practice) to require them to pass an examination or quit their practice. I have reference to lawyers and doctors who are practicing under the practice act.

When that ceased and a new law was placed on our statute books, if they had practiced so long, etc., they were not molested, but thereafter all new attorneys and doctors were compelled to take an examination, etc. Why is it that you propose to go away back in this particular regarding private banks?

Those objecting to them need not patronize them, and those now running private banks and are not satisfied, let them change to state or national banks, or quit the banking business. I do not think there is a private banker in the state of Illinois, objecting to private banks, and we are paying our dues to the association as well as state and national banks hence we are entitled to protection or our money is thrown away.

If a law is to be passed governing future banking business in Illinois, or even go back, say five years, why go ahead and let it come, but try and let private banks, already established for years, alone. I have no objection whatever to laws governing future banking or banks.

Who loses or gains, or who is more interested than a bank's customers, let it be private, national or state, and if their patrons are satisfied and patronizing said bank or banks, whose business is it? If they are not satisfied let them go elsewhere to do their banking, or start a bank to suit themselves.

I do sincerely hope that you will reply to this communication and give the matter your respectful attention.

Has there been any more bank failures in the state of Illinois within the last five or ten years, of private banks than national or state, and was the percentage of loss to customers any greater in private banks than other banks? And if not, why do you propose such stringent laws governing private banking, especially when we have the greater number of banks in the state, and the greater number belonging to the association?

On March 29, 1912, banks in the state of Illinois were as follows:

National banks members of the association 428 total 445

C. R. WHEELER
Peoria, Ill.
President First National

W. M. E. STONE
Peoria, Ill.
Vice-president and Cashier First National

State banks members of the association 548 total 561

Private banks members of the association 565 total 635

In case of a private bank failure the entire wealth of the stockholders are liable without limit, while in national and state banks, double their capital and the matter is closed.

Why are you so particular concerning private banks?

I pronounce it "Class Legislation," to which I am strictly opposed.

Please be kind enough to furnish me with a list of all private banks, together with location, and greatly oblige,

Respectfully,

Chas. W. Wilson, President.

Farmers & Merchants Bank.

P. S. Mr. Private Banker, the above is a copy of my reply to Mr. Harris's communication of the 10th, and if the above meets your approval, please do your duty. Would at least be pleased to hear from you. I am at your service in any honorable way for protection properly due us.

Stewardson, Ill., August 24, 1912.

On the printed cards of the Farmers and Merchants Bank the prospective depositor is told that "In case of failure our stockholders are personally and collectively liable to the full extent of their entire wealth without limit. While in national and state banks liability ceases at double capital stock. M. L. Richardson, Cashier."

As opposed to all of this peculiar logic will come the safe and sane plan offered by the Dawes committee and endorsed by more than a hundred newspapers and as many public speakers. At Peoria the situation likely will come up as a discussion or debate when the weaknesses and fallacies or strength and safety of the Dawes plan can be developed. The Dawes committee welcomes criticism and suggestions.

FIRST NATIONAL OF PEORIA EXTENDS INVITATION

This publication has received a very unique request from Peoria, Ill., the next convention city of the Illinois Bankers Association. The letter comes from the First National Bank and the Savings Bank of Peoria, asking us to extend to all convention visitors the opportunity of using the commodious quarters of the above banks at No. 210 and 212 S. Adams Street as temporary offices while in the city. All mail may be sent to convention visitors through the above banks and telegrams addressed in their care will be delivered to the proper parties immediately. Probably no other bank in the country is better fitted for this service than the First National Bank and the Savings Bank of Peoria.

Visitors to the Peoria convention next week will take more than usual interest in an inspection of the magnificent new First National Bank building. It is an imposing four-story structure, located in the heart of the business district, and unquestionably one of the finest bank buildings in the West. The exterior of the new building is of the finest white Green River stone, with massive columns, hand carved, lending a wonderful air of strength and dignity. The interior presents not only an air of luxury, but an appreciation of ease and comfort for the transaction of business for both customers and employees. The furniture is of the finest mahogany, grills, counter screens and lighting fixtures are of solid bronze, while the counters are of the finest Brescia Pavanossa marble. The walls are decorated in gold to match the marble fixtures, and the exterior of the enormous vault is of the whitest English veined Italian marble. The huge round door of this

The magnificent lobby contains seventeen hundred square feet, with a beautiful floor of finest quality of Tennessee marble. An enormous skylight of art glass, forty feet overhead, provides ample light for the easy transaction of business.

The officers of the two banks have richly appointed private offices for consultation with their customers, while for the convenience of their many feminine patrons a woman's corner is set aside, just off the main entrance. This room is fitted with writing desks, telephone, etc.

In addition to the secrecy afforded in the safe deposit vaults, coupon rooms are provided for patrons who wish to be unobserved when examining their papers, bonds and other valuables. Storage vaults in the basement provide safekeeping for more bulky packages.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

Omaha

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

That an era of real prosperity has been inaugurated in the Central West is gathered from the prosperous showing of the national banks of this section on the last call. Farmers are selling off enough of their wheat to pay their obligations and country banks are increasing their balances in the city banks. In Kansas City an increase of 13½ million dollars in the deposits of the fourteen national banks in about 2½ months tells an interesting story of western prosperity, expanding trade and increasing wealth. The total deposits in the national banks of Kansas City exceed 110 million dollars, being over 11 million dollars more than those of one year ago. The increase of 13½ million dollars between June 14th and September 4th, the dates of the last two calls, compares with a decrease of 2½ millions in about the same period of 1911. Cash and sight exchange amounts to 10½ millions more than last June and 6½ millions more than a year ago. Total loans and discounts are 3¼ millions greater than in June and 5¼ millions more than a year ago. State banks and trust companies, numbering sixteen, show total deposits of nearly 32¼ million dollars, a gain of 1¼ millions since June and 1½ millions more than a year ago. In Omaha the situation is quite as encouraging, the ten national banks having deposits of nearly 64 million dollars, being over 4½ millions greater than a year ago and about 5 millions greater than at the time of the last call. The tabulation shows an increase of 3½ millions in loans over the same item on September 1, 1911. All the bankers of the Central West are enthusiastic over the excellent crop prospects and predict a large increase in deposits within the next three months. Reports are coming in from country towns telling of the bumper crops in all parts of this section. The recent rains which were general over the prairie states have added materially to the crop situation.

To Finance Cotton Crop

Should the plans now being formulated by the bankers of Texas mature, it is likely that the farmers of that state will have abundant money advanced them on their cotton crop to insure good prices. Texas cotton growers have complained for years that they were compelled to sacrifice their cotton because the banks refused to make such loans as were needed. This year the farmers and the bankers of Texas are coming to a working agreement whereby there will be better selling methods for all farm products. The first Texas bank to announce that it would loan money on cotton was the banking firm of W. L. Moody & Co. of Galveston, and it has placed $5,000,000 at the disposal of the farmers, which will take care of 125,000 bales on a $40 per bale basis. Col. George W. Breckinridge, of San Antonio, announced that his bank would take $500,000 worth of cotton paper and several smaller banks have signified their willingness to look after neighborhood needs. It is believed that this action of the Texas banks will save the farmers of that state at least $10,000,000, which otherwise would be lost by the farmers being forced to market their cotton on a low market.

Death of Abner W. Trumble

Abner W. Trumble, president of the Packers National of South Omaha, died last week at the age of eighty-two years. Mr. Trumble was born in Orleans, N. Y., and came west fifty-seven years ago and settled in Sarpy county, Neb. A remarkable circumstance connected with Mr. Trumble's career was that twenty years ago, at the age of sixty-two years, when most men think only of retiring from active work, Mr. Trumble really entered the profession in which he met with such signal success. At that time he took a minor position with the Packers National of Omaha and in twenty years worked himself up to the top. On his eightieth birthday he was elected president of that institution. Despite the fact that Mr. Trumble was four score years of age, he was always the first man at his desk in the morning and among the last of the employees to leave the bank in the evening. He prided himself upon his good health and often remarked how young he felt. He was well known among the banking fraternity of the Central West, having held many offices in the Nebraska Bankers Association. Mr. Trumble is survived by his widow and three sons. Burial was at Gilmore, Neb.

F. P. Neal Draws First Prize

Fernando P. Neal, chairman of the board of directors of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, was greatly surprised last week when an express wagon delivered at the bank the beautifully mounted head of a buffalo. For several hours Mr. Neal was mystified, not knowing who could have sent him such a handsome present. Then he remembered that at a recent meeting of the Colorado Bankers Association at Pueblo, which he attended, an 1,800-pound buffalo was served at a barbecue. As the bankers registered they were given numbers and these numbers were used in a drawing for three prizes—the buffalo head, the hide made into a rug and the feet mounted on the legs of a mahogany table. Mr. Neal drew the first prize, the buffalo head. He has had it placed over the door of his offices in the Southwest National Bank of Commerce.

John T. M. Johnston

John T. M. Johnston, president of the National Reserve Bank, was the first Kansas City banker to return from the meeting of the American Bankers Association at Detroit. After speaking of the good time he had had in Detroit, Mr. Johnston said: "As I see it, politics cannot retard general prosperity. The present outlook is brighter than it has been for five years. Industrial enterprises and business generally are pushing along in a most satisfactory way. The advance of call money in New York going to 6 per cent will not disturb things. I wouldn't be surprised to see it go to 8 per cent. It will simply retard speculation and this should be done so as to leave a larger volume of money for the moving of the crops. There will be no great stringency in money matters, as the country is in excellent condition and bankers have prepared themselves fully to meet crop demands."

Central West Notes

Kansas City's postal savings bank was one year old last week. Deposits aggregating $650,000 have been received by this bank, of which $391,985 remain on deposit. Kansas City stands fourth among cities having the largest amount of deposits per capita. Forty per cent of the depositors were foreigners.

Another important consolidation in the Central West territory came last week when the First National Bank of Great Bend, Kan., took over the Brinkman Bank of that place. The old officials of the Brinkman institution will become officials of the consolidated bank, while J. George Brinkman, president of the Brinkman bank retires to look after private affairs.

M. Inhelder, president of the Pierce State Bank of Pierce, Neb., has sold his entire interest in that institution to C. E. Staley of Omaha who will become president. Mr. Staley is secretary of the Bankers Mortgage Loan Company of Omaha.

F. E. Carr, sixty-five years old, a well known Kansas banker and president of the Wellington National Bank, Wellington, Kan., dropped dead in his home there last week. He is survived by a widow and four sons: J. H. Carr, cashier of his father's bank; Frank Carr, in the Kansas National Bank at Wichita; D. M. Carr, cashier of the Bank of Cheney, Kan., and W. C. Carr of the Wichita Wholesale Furniture Company. He was a cousin of C. Q. Chandler, president of the Kansas National Bank in Wichita, and also a relative of Dr. W. S. Woods, for many years president of the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City.

The final 25 per cent, due depositors of the failed American Union Trust Company of Kansas City, will be paid October 1st as promised several months ago when the Commerce Trust Company took over the affairs of the defunct bank for liquidation. Delay has been caused by several cases in court which will be settled soon.

Ferdinand Herff, vice-president and for many years cashier of the San Antonio National Bank, has succeeded George W. Breckinridge as president. Mr. Herff has been with the bank more than forty years.

John P. Gordon, state auditor of Missouri, was injured in Kansas City recently by being struck by an automobile. He has been able to return to his home in Jefferson City.

The announcement of group meetings in Kansas as arranged by the Kansas State Banking Association follows: November 13th, group 5, at Great Bend; November 14th, group 6, at Harper; November 15th, group 3, at Chanute; November 20th, group 4, at Beloit; November 21st, group 1, at Kansas City, Kan.; and November 22d, group 2, at Lawrence.

George W. Allison, formerly connected with the Gate City National Bank of Kansas City, and a banker with interests in Leavenworth and Sterling, Kan., has purchased from T. J. Collins the controlling interest in the Union State Bank of Muskogee, Okla. He has been elected president of that institution.

R. C. Menefee, treasurer of the Commerce Trust Company of Kansas City, was the host to a small party of Oklahoma bankers who visited the fort, the various state and federal prisons and the Soldiers Home at Leavenworth last week. The visitors were Boone V. Hite, president of the Anadarko State Bank; James A. Menefee, vice-president of the Anadarko State Bank and former state treasurer of Oklahoma; A. N. Benedict, cashier of the Apache State Bank and B. C. Zollers, cashier of the State Bank of Marble City.

The following new banks have been chartered in Texas recently: The Citizens State Bank of Rockdale, capital $30,000; the First State Bank of Rice, Navarro county, capital $40,000; the Farmers State Bank of Rice, capital $20,000; the Temple Trust Company of Temple, capital $200,000; the Hagerman State Bank of Hagerman, capital $10,000; the Smiley State Bank of Smiley, capital $15,000 and the First State Bank of Aransas Pass which has reorganized increasing its capital from $15,000 to $50,000. In Oklahoma new banks are: the Guaranty State Bank of Okmulgee, capital $25,000; the Bank of Salina, capital $10,000.

AT THE BURROUGHS BANQUET

It didn't cost a cent to go out and eat a swell dinner at the Burrough's plant at Detroit. They furnished even the street car tickets. That's why the visitors sang "the gang's all here," and sang it truthfully.

Those easily identified in the picture are (1.) James P. Roach, American Exchange National, N. Y.; (2.) E. F. Schoeneck, Corn Exchange National, Chicago; (3.) C. R. Hieronymus, Harris Trust and Savings, Chicago; (4.) H. M. Batchelder, president Merchants National, Salem, Mass.; (5.) Walter Snider, cashier First National, Oak Harbor, Ohio; (6.) Wm. A. joined forces, making not only an unusually strong banking organization, but bringing together in close business relations financiers and professional men of the highest standing and noted for their keen business integrity and sagacity. Charles R. Wheeler, president of the First National, is a financier whose reputation for careful yet progressive business methods is far from confined to the limits of Peoria. W. E. Stone, vice-president and cashier of the First National, is another officer whose careful judgment is relied upon by the best of business men. Mr. Stone was born and brought up in the banking business, being the son of W. E. Stone, who was connected with the First National as cashier for over thirty years, and is a nephew of Marshall P. Stone, founder of the bank of M. P. Stone & Company over fifty years ago.

The First National ranks high among the oldest national banks in the United States. When its charter was obtained in 1863, there were but 175 other banks holding charters, and of these only 63 now survive. The Savings Bank of Peoria was organized in 1868 and is the oldest and largest savings bank in this part of the country. Under the able direction of Henry Hedrich as president it has established a very large clientele among all classes of people and has a business which is steadily growing.

Visitors will be heartily welcomed to this institution, which has not only builded for itself a most substantial business, but which is also closely allied with the progress of the second city in Illinois.

FRANCIS J. KILKENNY

Francis J. Kilkenny, confidential secretary to Comptroller of the Currency L. O. Murray, a former Chicagoan, has been spending his vacation in this city. Mr. Kilkenny is the father of the Irish Home-Going Association, having made several trips to his native country. As a result of his splendid organizing ability he has stirred up a lively interest on the part of patriotic Irishmen in the matter of visiting their old homes. A number of the important industries in Ireland which were languishing have been revived as a result of these visits.

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

Bank deposits in Minneapolis at the last call reached $111,178,939. The figures are $18,663,000 greater than last year at the same time and $7,532,000 more than the June totals. The former high record of $106,000,000 in Minneapolis has been passed sixty days ahead of the usual maximum time. Commercial bank deposits are $90,474,843, and for savings banks that report on call, $20,704,095. Commercial loans of $65,007,876 are nearly $4,000,000 greater than in June. Clearings reached the highest point for the year September 12th, or $4,527,974. For the week the clearings were $24,347,273, as against $22,015,442 for the same week last year.

Legality of Library Bonds Questioned

Question as to the $600,000 St. Paul library bonds has been raised by E. H. Rollins & Sons, the purchasers, on the ground that laws passed at the recent special session of legislature, not mentioned in the governor's call message, are not valid. The bond issue was not specified in the message. The attorney-general says Minnesota has no constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from making laws at an extra session not recommended or specifically mentioned by the governor's call. The question is being investigated.

St. Paul Nationals

The seven national banks of St. Paul showed deposits of $44,246,653 at the last call and resources of $53,686,473. On June 14th the deposits were $44,499,197 and resources were $55,212,375. Notwithstanding the great demand for money to move the crops the almost identical statement for the last call is considered a good sign by the bankers. Deposits in the state and savings banks approximated $10,000,000.

Denies Rumor

James J. Hill denies a rumor that he has taken over the Second National at St. Paul. W. B. Dean, acting president, agreed that negotiations are on for sale of the stock, and that 3,300 of 4,000 shares are ready to be returned over. The book value is given at $224. Mr. Hill's denial consisted in a statement that he knows nothing about the reported purchase by him of the bank's stock.

Provident Loan of St. Paul

In the six months that the Provident Loan Society of St. Paul has been running, 675 loans have been made aggregating $34,500. Forty-nine delinquents are gradually being brought up. Fifteen loan organizations may decide to settle loans on the same basis as the Provident, or business men's organization.

Dakota Banks Consolidate

The First National and the Union National of Grand Forks, among the largest banking houses in North Dakota, have consolidated by the former taking over the latter and increasing capital to $200,000 with $50,000 surplus. Among stockholders of the new concern are M. F. Murphy, Stephen Collins, Sidney Clark, D. H. Beecher and A. I. Hunter. More extensive financial accommodations are required, it is said, owing to the growth and prosperity of the tributary territory which resulted in the consolidation. Each bank had capital of $100,000.

More Banks for Northwest

Crop conditions will result in the establishment of more banks in the Northwest, in the opinion of Adam Hannah, president of the Savings Bank of Minneapolis, who has had a conference with eight bank cashiers in North Dakota as his guests in Minneapolis. Rudolph Hoel of Ray said: "One thing is a certainty, that many farmers are going to pay their debts. There have been large yields in everything and the farmer is due to be king." Other cashiers present were F. M. Chard, Rolla; M. N. Gergen, Perth; A. B. Brandt, Hampden; P. J. Anthony, Munich; J. J. Behles, Garrison; R. N. Harmsen, Krem; Conrad Olsen, Charlson. Mr. Hannah said: "Minneapolis has a wonderfully prosperous country to do business with this year. The crops were never so good, and the latest reports brought in direct by the visiting bank cashiers show that it is not only in wheat, but in flax, barley, oats, rye, corn and other crops that there have been big yields this season." Four banks that Mr. Hannah announces will be started are to be at Golden Valley, N. D.; Bailey, N. D.; Schafer, N. D.; Dagmar, Mont. Mr. Hannah is president of the banks represented by the eight cashiers at the conference.

Alberta State Organized

The Alberta State Bank, capital $10,000, has been authorized by the Minnesota state bank superintendent. Incorporators are: Bert Winter, Minneapolis; Charles Eystad, J. A. Schultz, L. M. Larsen, Christian Cudrio, Charles Bruer, R. B. Jallo, G. H. Farwell, of Alberta; F. R. Putnam, J. J. Gelb, William Gausman, Fred Audert, Frank Geiselman, John Grove, of Morris; M. S. Carl, Clara City.

Back From the East

George H. Prince, vice-president of the Merchants National, and A. B. Chamberlain, president of the Security National, have returned from New York. Mr. Prince says the financial condition in the East is satisfactory. "Money is in good demand," he said, "due to good crops all over the country. Indications are that there will be plenty of money, for there is no stringency in sight." Mr. Chamberlain says there is no doubt New York can

Vacant Lot Gardens

Vacant lot gardens of Minneapolis had so impressed F. E. Alsberg, banker of Amsterdam, Holland, that he asked to see them as soon as he had reached the Northwestern National. He was returning from the Pacific coast by way of Winnipeg. Mr. Alsberg said he heard of the gardens at home. He said: "Amsterdam is sometimes called the city of tulips and every householder takes sincere delight in raising flowers. I think Minneapolis is fortunate in realizing the great benefits that come to a city when vacant lots are covered with growing flowers."

Northwestern National Exhibits Ore Samples

The Northwestern National Bank has obtained the state university state fair exhibit of ore samples from the iron mines from which it gets royalties. With the exhibit is a working model of mine apparatus. The exhibit has attracted as much attention as the crop sample show which the bank has just concluded in its lobby.

Northwest Notes

The State Bank of Palisade, Minn., has been authorized with $10,000 capital. J. O. Werntz is president and J. G. Meyers is cashier.

C. W. Farwell, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National Bank, absent for a long time recuperating in the South, has returned to his desk. Mr. Farwell has resumed his high opsonic index.

The Commercial National of Minneapolis has opened in the Lumber Exchange. It is capitalized at $200,000 and has surplus of $50,000. It will have a safety deposit department. S. E. Forest is president. Vice-presidents are: S. H. Bowman and A. J. Mealey. Guy C. Landis is cashier.

Thirteen million bushels of grain received in thirteen days at Minneapolis is a record-breaking report in Minneapolis for September. Of 1,543 car loads, 916 were wheat. This record compares with 7,738,000 bushels of grain a year ago.

Joseph Chapman and George F. Orde, returned from Detroit, say that the automobile industry will be a great asset of Minneapolis. "It will be eventually one of the biggest manufacturing and distributing lines," said Mr. Chapman.

RICHMOND TRUST COMPANY TO OPEN

John Skelton Williams of Richmond, Va., who will be president of the Richmond Trust and Savings Company, which has just been formed in that city with a capital stock of $1,000,000, has announced that the institution will begin business on October 1st. The board of directors will include prominent Richmond, Baltimore and New York men. Subscriptions to the stock exceeded the amount offered by $800,000.

Sidelights on the Convention

William P. Sinnett, cashier of the Market Street National, Philadelphia, seemed to get a lot of enjoyment out of the Detroit convention, and found many friends of the Market Street National among the delegates and visitors.

James A. Lewis, formerly treasurer of the National Biscuit Company of Chicago, now hands out cards as manager of the bond department of Henry L. Doherty & Co., 60 Wall Street, New York. He found many of his Chicago acquaintances in the Detroit crowd.

Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Bopes of Lynchburg, Va., registered for the American National of that place. Mr. Bopes is president of this well established financial institution. He and his wife found a lot of friends at the Detroit convention.

Clifford DePuy, son of the late publisher of the "Northwestern Banker" at Des Moines, mingled with the Detroit throng and met many of the friends of his father, who were pleased to know that he will continue this important financial publication at the old stand.

James F. Allen, he of the genial manner and complete wardrobe, formerly of the Oriental Bank of New York, and who has been missed at conventions the past year or two, reappeared at Detroit. His cards announce J. F. Allen & Co., Bankers, 111 Broadway, New York. Mr. Allen reports a good line of business.

Houston Isbell Shelley, cashier of the City National at Selma, Alabama, reports a good line of deposits in excess of a million dollars. Mr. Shelley was one of the many Southerners who found big reward for attendance at the convention.

Charles A. Elder and wife were at Detroit representing the Globe Savings Bank of Los Angeles, of which Mr. Elder, formerly a resident of Illinois, is the president. A. C. Hupp, formerly a cashier of the State Bank at Arlington Heights, and F. H. Haskell, formerly cashier of the First National at Mendota, are other Illinoisans connected with this bank. Capital is now half a million, with deposits in excess of two millions.

Nobody had a better time at Detroit than did Jos. A. McCord, vice-president of the Third National at Atlanta, Ga. Mr. McCord was accompanied by a number of the members of his family. The new home of the Third National is a corker, and their line of deposits in excess of four millions makes them one of the important financial institutions of the South.

D. E. Waters of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) National City Bank handed out a statement at Detroit that surprised. The combined deposits of the Grand Rapids National City and the City Trust and Savings are $8,408,000; total resources are over eleven millions. Mr. Waters is a member of the A. B. A. executive council, and also one of the receivers for the Flint-Pere Marquette Railway System. He is chairman of the board of directors of his bank.

The new statement of the City National of Galveston, Texas, printed under date of September 4th, shows deposits of $4,700,000. The official list of officers includes J. W. Hoopes as vice-president and cashier. Mr. Hoopes is secretary of the Texas Bankers Association and also presided at the sessions of the state secretaries section recently held in Detroit, which he made among the most important of the convention.

Charles H. Huttig, the new president, was presented with a silver loving cup which came from the St. Louis Clearing House Association. Three beautiful clusters of American Beauty roses followed the loving cup, which were the tributes of Mr. Huttig's friends. William Livingstone, the retiring head, was presented with a chest of silver.

A resolution was adopted extending the thanks of the convention to the newspapers of Detroit, to the speakers who had given their services, to the persons and establishments that had assisted in the entertainment of the delegates and to the citizens of Detroit, for whom the bankers declared they have a most cordial feeling.

Bradford Knapp, special agent for the department of agriculture at Washington, made an extemporaneous talk at the Friday session in which he advocated the urgent need for the dissemination of knowledge pertaining to agricultural subjects. He gave a history of the work which has been accomplished by the department which he represents, and spoke enthusiastically of the possibilities which lie in American farming.

One of the most enjoyable entertainment features of the convention was the banquet tendered the visiting bankers by Hiram Walker and Sons, Ltd., at Walkerville. More than 1,000 bankers were in attendance at this function. Throughout the banquet music was rendered to entertain the guests. William Livingstone acted as master of ceremonies. Following the banquet the visitors inspected the plant, and after an excursion on Lake St. Claire, returned to Detroit in time for dinner.

The bankers declared themselves in favor of one-cent letter postage. It was pointed out that the government is carrying first class mail at an enormous profit, which, however, is eaten up by the loss sustained on the second class matter, and that the bankers are bearing a large proportion of the burden of the cost of transporting this class of matter through the mails. The association went on record as endorsing the movement.

Des Moines, Sept. 18.—Iowa's prosperity is well indicated by the biennial report of the state banking department under the direction of the state auditor which shows deposits in the state and savings banks of Iowa of $278,700,000. But what bankers consider most interesting is that there has not been a single failure among state or savings banks in four years and that the capital stock of these banks is greater now than the deposits were 21 years ago. This total deposits of banks under state jurisdiction 21 years ago was $33,781,000. The capital is now $35,982,000, and the deposits, by the above figures, are shown to be almost ten times as large now as in 1891. The report covers deposits and capital stock of state and savings banks and trust companies. There are now 1,016 such institutions in Iowa, while in 1891 there were 205 such institutions. During the past year three state banks, sixteen savings banks and one trust company have suspended and quit business after liquidation. There have been new charters issued to twelve state banks and 83 savings banks, and the following table, compiled by the state banking department, shows the deposits, number and capital of the 1,016 institutions under its supervision:

National Banks

The call of the comptroller for the condition of business of national banks on September 4th found that the four national banks of Des Moines had a combined deposit increase for the past year of more than $2,000,000, although the total deposits showed a slight decrease over the June call, owing to the excessive demand for money now for moving crops. The Iowa National showed deposits of $8,263,000 on September 4th, as against $8,642,000 on June 14th and $7,159,000 on September 1, 1911. For the same periods the Citizens National showed deposits of $2,100,000, $2,065,000 and $1,869,000; the Des Moines National,

The total deposits of the four banks on September 4th: $19,439,000; June 14th, $19,512,000; September 1, 1911, $16,623,000. On deposits for the June 14th to September 4th period all gained except the Iowa National, while on the year all showed big gains, especially the Des Moines National, which increased its deposits over $1,000,000.

A. C. Miller at Head of Des Moines Trust

A. C. Miller, president of the Home Savings Bank, who retired from active work several months ago, is going to get back into active harness as president of the Des Moines Trust Company, which has been reorganized. Mr. Miller and W. G. Harvison have purchased a block of stock in the company and Mr. Miller, at a board meeting, was chosen a director as well as president. The capital stock of the Company was increased to $100,000, fully paid up, and Mr. Miller will have active charge. Nelson Royal, who was instrumental in the organization of the company two years ago, was elected a vice-president and he will continue to take an active part in the business of the company. The members of the board of directors now are: A. C. Miller, president; Nelson Royal, vice-president; Guy B. Brunk, secretary; F. C. Waterbury, A. D. Struthers, W. G. Harvison, W. F. Cook and Dr. C. M. Werts. Mr. Miller has been in the banking business thirty years.

Politics No Detriment to Business

Politics, the bugaboo of business in former years, is no longer a detriment and business is now moving along just as nicely and as smoothly as if presidential year were a million years ago, writes Homer Miller, president of the Iowa National Bank. This year politics is the "mascot," not the "jinx" of business. "It was to be expected that the presidential year would retard business progress, but the multiplication of candidates, parties and issues has brought about a political situation which is really helping the business situation," he says in his note on trade conditions. "A clearly defined contest between two candidates or two parties on one of two issues might seriously have hampered business activity. While some business may be more or less affected by the

New Bank for Keokuk

Keokuk will soon have a new bank with a capital of $100,000 as plans for the organization have reached such a stage now that E. A. French, the organizer, has announced tentative plans. The new institution will be housed at Eighth and Main streets in that city and about fifty of the most prominent merchants of Keokuk have subscribed for the capital stock, which will be fully paid up. Mr. French, who formerly was with the Central Savings there, has also been connected with banks at Collins and Waterloo, Ia.—as vice-president of the Citizens Savings at Waterloo—assistant cashier of the Blackhawk National there and as cashier of the Exchange Bank at Collins. He says the bank is now assured and that application will soon be made for a state charter. The entire banking business of Keokuk is now handled by three banks.

Attempt at Bank Robbery

Bank robbers are still active in this state, as proven by the reports of an attempt recently to rob the Bank of Callender at Callender, Ia. Three men rode into the town, entered the bank and blew off the outer door of the safe unseen. Mrs. A. Arent heard the sound of the explosion and as she was on a party line with the bank telephone the bank phone rang when she called up and this frightened the men away. They evidently took it for a burglar alarm, as they ceased work immediately. They then boarded a train and escaped. In the safe was $1,800.

Otto Hill

Otto Hill has been elected cashier of the Davenport Savings Bank and will assume his new duties on September 19th, when he returns from a vacation spent in the East. He succeeds the late Henry C. Struck and has been an assistant cashier. Mr. Hill has been in the banking business since 1891; ten years with the First National Bank there, eight years with his father, John Hill, and three years with the Davenport Savings. The vacancy created by Mr. Hill's promotion has not been filled. The directors also declared a semiannual dividend of 6 per cent on the capital stock of $300,000, payable October 1st.

Europe in Favor of Taft

Europe favors the re-election of Taft in the opinion of E. H. Rich, cashier of the First National Bank of Fort Dodge, who has just returned from a three months' tour of Europe. The English and European papers, he declares, are very strong against Roosevelt and are advocating the return of the president. Roosevelt's erratic deeds have lost him much of his old time favoritism on the other side of the Atlantic, he believes. He adds that crop conditions in Scotland and England three or four weeks ago were not at all promising. He visited Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, France, England and Scotland.

Ask Withdrawal of Tax Assessment

The First National Bank of Council Bluffs has begun a fight there asking that the tax assessment against that institution be set aside on the grounds that the state law regulating the taxation of national bank stock is unconstitutional. The assessments complained of fixed a value of $145 a share on the 2,000 shares in the bank. The bank holds that the present law is a discrimination against moneyed capital invested in bank stock and violates the national law permitting the assessment of national bank stock.

Iowa Banking Notes

The First National Bank of Perry is extremely proud of its September 4th statement which shows that it now has deposits aggregating $538,558, an increase from $491,000 on June 14th, or a gain of $46,700, which they contend is a grand showing for a bank in a city of its size.

George W. Curtis, Jr., owner of the Ferguson (Ia.) Bank in Marshall county, was arrested at Marshalltown last week on a charge of embezzling $1,095 school funds. Until recently Curtis was treasurer of the local school district. He was indicted by the grand jury but denies the charges. He formerly lived at Redfield.

Wallace Hamilton, a teller in the Merchants National Bank at Cedar Rapids, was married last week to Miss Hazel Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Hall of Coggon.

H. M. Pattee of the First National Bank at Perry is reported quite ill at his home there, threatened with typhoid fever, but the attending physicians hope to break up the fever.

Sioux City

By JOHN J. BIDDISON.

By showing a $3,000,000 gain in deposits over that indicated by the June report, Sioux City national banks distinctly emphasized the prosperous condition of this city and territory in the last statement made on the call of the comptroller. Deposits were found to be above $16,000,000, and available cash close to $7,000,000, an increase of nearly $1,000,000. The remarkable growth of the city, both in a building and a business way, is given credit for the improvement. Any increase at this particular season is looked upon as unusual.

Death of South Dakota Banker

Efforts to save the life of Chas. E. Floete, the Armour, S. D., banker, who was brought to a Sioux City hospital for an appendicitis operation, proved unavailing. His death was occasioned by hemorrhage, following the operation for gangrenous appendicitis. His body was taken to Armour in the private car of Superintendent L. B. Beardsley, of the Milwaukee railroad, accompanied by a delegation of local Shriners, of which order Mr. Floete was a member, and the funeral was conducted at Armour by his brother Masons. Mr. Floete was reputed to be one of the wealthiest men in his state and was well known throughout Iowa as well as South Dakota.

Banking Notes

Miss Jennie C. Rhodes, daughter of F. H. Rhodes, an Estherville, Ia., banker, was married on September 4th to Dr. Arnold R. Moon, of Williamsburg, Ia. They will go to Australia for a year's honeymoon. Mr. Moon will there pursue graduate medical studies.

George B. Perkins, president of the First National Bank of Sac City, Ia., is building for himself a $10,000 residence of 12 rooms. It will be thoroughly modern, even to a vacuum cleaning system built in.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers Savings Bank of Sac City, Ia., S. M. Elwood was re-elected president and J. H. Denman vice-president. M. M. Heptonstall, cashier, tendered his resignation, effective March 1, 1913.

Indictments have been returned against Chas. E. Baldwin by the grand jury of Sioux county at Hawarden, Ia. He is accused of defrauding the First National Bank of that town out of $3,000 through the use of faked credentials. He was captured at Vancouver, British Columbia.

J. J. Adkins, of Carthage, S. D., and his son, B. E. Adkins, have purchased a controlling interest in the Peoples State Bank of Howard, S. D. The former becomes president and the latter cashier of the bank.

The Melham brothers, of Watertown, S. D., have purchased a majority of the stock of the Florence State Bank, at Florence, S. D., and will consolidate that institution with the Farmers State Bank, of which they are now the principal owners. The combined capital is $25,000, to which is added a considerable surplus. The officers of the consolidated bank will be: J. O. Melham, president; A. Melham, vice-president; P. N. Larson, cashier; G. J. Eggen, assistant cashier.

M. W. Fritz, president of the Farmers Savings Bank of Manson, Ia., with his wife and son, have returned from a two months' trip abroad. B. E. Sebern, cashier, who has been the victim of a paralytic stroke, is slowly recovering, though still without the power of speech.

The Oklahoma state banking board has taken charge of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Sapulpa, placing L. H. Patton and M. R. Garrett, bank examiners, in charge to check up the books. The depositors are protected by the state guaranty fund.

WHAT SOME OF CHICAGO'S BANKERS SAY ABOUT THE CONVENTION

The general opinion of Chicago bankers who were in attendance at the A. B. A. convention held in Detroit last week seems to be that it was an unqualified success, and that the sessions were productive of much good, not only to the banking fraternity, but to the public at large. Following are the impressions of some of those who were present:

Ralph Van Vechten, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial National: "I think the convention one of the most successful that has ever been held. The only serious drawback was the extremely hot weather during the first two or three days, which detracted from the attendance at the meetings, but after the weather improved there was a good attendance and much interest taken in the proceedings. One of the best features was Mr. Chapman's session on agricultural and financial development and education. This was well attended and the talks all were interesting and instructive. Detroit bankers were most hospitable and their entertainment was of a high order of excellence. Some criticism was offered during the first three days regarding the apparent lack of accommodations, but ultimately, I think, everybody was well taken care of. I believe members of the association are taking a more serious view of its aim and objects, and I think from now on better results will be accomplished in all directions. This is true of the work of the sections as well as of that of the main organization. The clearing house section, with which I am the most familiar, is taking up a number of practical questions, which are of great benefit and importance, not only to the banking fraternity, but also to the public at large. It is interesting to note the growth of the association since the previous convention at Detroit fifteen years ago, at which there were only a few hundred bankers present and the total membership numbered only a few thousand as against thirteen thousand odd to-day. This strikingly illustrates the growth of the banking business as well as the tendency of bankers to become members of an organized movement for the betterment of general banking conditions."

Ernest A. Hamill, president of the Corn Exchange National: "I think the A. B. A. convention at Detroit was very successful. The very hot weather which prevailed the first few days had a tendency to affect the attendance at first. I was glad to see such a large number of bankers. A general spirit of optimism was manifested. I think Detroit is a very beautiful city and that she is making rapid progress."

Henry S. Henschen, cashier of the State Bank: "I was especially interested in the meetings of the savings bank section, being a member of its executive committee. I think the sessions of this section were the best since it was organized eight or nine years ago. The attendance was the largest and the addresses the best. Bankers were particularly interested in hearing from a director of the postal savings bank, Theodore L. Weed of Washington, who spoke before a crowded hall. Most of his hearers, of course, were not in sympathy with the postal savings bank, but they gave respectful attention to what the director of the entire system had to say on the subject. The chairman found it necessary to rule that no questions of a controversial nature be put to Mr. Weed, but many queries relating to the operation and future plans of the postal savings bank were willingly answered by him. Mr. Weed proved to be an interesting and well informed speaker."

William G. Edens, assistant secretary Central Trust Company of Illinois: "I was much pleased with the results of the convention. I think the bankers and the citizens of Detroit are entitled to a vote of thanks for the excellent entertainment afforded the visitors and delegates. The large attendance, the splendid program and the interest manifested by the delegates in the convention and in the meetings of the various sections, will, no doubt, be of value to the association and to banking interests generally throughout the United States."

J. Fletcher Farrell, vice-president of the Fort Dearborn National, re-elected treasurer of the A. B. A.:

"I think the Detroit convention was one of the most successful ever held in the history of the association. While the extremely hot weather of the first few days affected the attendance somewhat, I believe that as a whole the sessions were well attended. Much enthusiasm and interest were displayed by the delegates and visitors. We were extremely fortunate in being provided with such an interesting and instructive program. One of the features of the convention was the meeting of the committee on agriculture and financial development and education, presided over by Chairman Joseph Chapman of Minneapolis, which was well attended by bankers, agriculturists and educators from all over the country. Much interest was manifested in this most important subject by those in attendance. This committee is deserving of great credit for the work which it has accomplished and the enthusiasm which it has created throughout the various states. A great deal of time and energy have been devoted to the improvement of general agricultural conditions and methods throughout the country, to education of the youth along these lines and to a more expeditious system of financing the farmer."

"Detroit is a progressive, energetic, thriving and up-to-date city, representing all of those elements which combine to render any place ideal for holding a convention. Too much praise cannot be given her citizens and her bankers for the royal manner in which they entertained their guests. The entertainment committee is to be congratulated on the splendid and efficient manner in which they provided for the comfort and enjoyment of their visitors."

"The last year has been one of the most prosperous and successful in the history of the association, showing the largest increase in membership. This has been brought about by the hearty co-operation and support which have been accorded the association by all of its members. The organization is on a sound financial footing. Members have been very prompt in sending in remittances for their annual dues. I believe that the American Bankers Association has been productive of much good, having identified itself with a number of important movements vitally affecting the welfare, not only of the banking fraternity, but of the general public as well. Its prestige and efficiency consistently have increased under the administration of the splendid men who have been at its head. I believe that the ensuing year will result in the accomplishment of much profitable and beneficial work, and that the A. B. A. will more than live up to its reputation for usefulness and efficiency."

Big Bank Merger

Two big St. Joseph, Mo., banks consolidated their interests on Monday of this week when the First National Bank of Buchanan County and the Merchants Bank merged into one institution, to be known as the First National Bank of Buchanan County, with banking rooms at Fourth and Felix Streets, in the splendid building now occupied by the First National. Stockholders of the Merchants Bank received stock in the First National equivalent to their holdings in the Merchants and in lieu thereof, and the present business of the Merchants Bank will be liquidated by the reorganized First National. T. W. Evans, president of the Merchants becomes chairman of the board of directors of the consolidated institution and W. S. McLucas, the cashier, becomes active vice-president.

The deposits of the combined banks are over seven millions and the total assets approximately $8,500,000. Mr. Evans is the dean of the banking fraternity in St. Joseph, having occupied official bank positions there for the past thirty-five years. R. T. Forbes, who is to be the president, is an ex-Chicagoan, having been president of the Drovers Deposit National of this city. He has been engaged in the banking business for the past thirty years. Jacob M. Ford, vice-president of the First National, has been with that institution for twenty years. R. L. McDonald, also a vice-president, has been a director and vice-president of the Merchants Bank for many years. W. S. McLucas, who will be active vice-president, has been a resident of St. Joseph for the past thirteen years. In 1909 he and others purchased the controlling interest in the Merchants Bank. J. E. Combs, vice-president and cashier of the First National formerly was cashier of the Illinois Trust Company of East St. Louis. R. S. Brittain and R. N. Ridge, assistant cashiers of the First National, have been in its employ for a long time. Max Andriano, assistant cashier of the First National has been in the employ of the Merchants Bank for thirty years and has been assistant cashier since 1890.

The directors of the First National Bank are as follows: J. E. Combs, J. L. Davidson, Thos. W. Evans, J. M. Ford, R. T. Forbes, Dr. Jacob Geiger, W. H. Griffith, F. S. Hayward, E. A. King, R. L. McDonald, W. S. McLucas, John A. McGee, Ben Phillip, W. A. Tilden, O. W. Waller.

The new institution will be one of the strongest banks in the Central West and will be splendidly equipped for the transaction of all business.

BANK ROBBERS GET $5,000.

Cadillac, Mich. Sept. 16.—The safe in the Leroy Exchange Savings Bank in Leroy, a village twelve miles south of here, was blown open at 1 o'clock this morning and $5,000 in currency was taken by two robbers. About $7,200 in negotiable paper was left scattered about the floor of the bank. Chase was given but they escaped in a rig which had been near the bank before starting the robbery.

the science of agriculture. Better than that, Mr. Chapman said that the products at the fair were examples of what brains mixed with elbow grease could do.

IN a word, the banker-agriculturist believes that the wheat, rye, barley, oats, heating plants, ventilating systems, traction engines and gasoline pumps on exhibition prove beyond a doubt that the better farming propaganda, agitated of late, has borne fruit.

ALEX V. OSTROM, cashier of the New Minneapolis bank, started as a messenger boy in the Swedish-American.

PRESIDENT GODDARD, of the State Bank of Chicago, says: "The nation is experiencing an unusual wave of prosperity, and the coming year will see records broken in all lines of activity. The enormous crop yield and increasing volume of trade, great financial resources and optimism on all sides, have caused the usual wave of uncertainty, because of a presidential campaign, to become nil."

AT a meeting of the executive committee of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank Chester Corey was appointed manager of the corporation department to succeed Andrew Cooke, vice-president, who recently resigned. Mr. Corey has been associated with the Harris organization for the last nineteen years.

QUITE a gathering of the leading anti-supervisionists in Chicago on Wednesday. Result: a meeting of private bankers has been called at the headquarters hotel in Peoria for Monday night, just before the state convention opens. A club room for 200 has been ordered.

THERE were a few pro-supervisionists in town the same day, to plan the future of the Dawes report and of the nominating committee. It isn't sure that this report will come before the council, since it in reality is matter for the convention direct.

PRESIDENT HARRIS can be depended upon to recognize the groups on the nominating committee as in all other matters. His fairness is proverbial.

IF the convention gets to going, there is no telling what may develop in the way of nominations from the floor. For the first time this year the delegates, and not the council, elect the treasurer also. The nominating committee may not pacify all the candidates.

THE fate of Vice-President John D. Phillips probably will be settled indirectly by the action of the private bankers on Monday night. If they get "too anti" they will not expect one of their number to go into the big chair.

PHILLIPS is a fine man and a good banker and his close friends will keep his best interests in view.

FOR the chairmanship of the council there are two candidates, good friends to each other and to every one else. They are George Woodruff of Joliet and Col. J. S. Aisthorpe of Cairo. The situation has been pretty well sized up and it is likely that at Peoria, before the final council meeting, a decision as to which will go into the voting can be arrived at.

THE proceedings book for the second annual conference of the bankers committee on agricultural development and education is out. It is a book of almost four hundred pages and covers what is known as "the Chapman Farmer Conference" held at Minneapolis and St. Paul on August 7th and 8th, this year.

MORE than twenty-five thousand copies have been ordered by state associations, colleges, banks and educators for distribution.

It is the most valuable text book on the subjects treated ever put into print. The best offerings of the best experts in every branch of the better farming uplift are included.

THERE is little doubt but that the A. B. A. administrative committee will reappoint the Frame committee on new constitution, for, under the amended constitution, convention named committees are limited in service to the time of the convention.

THAT amendment was not intended to thwart the will of the body but to prevent the schemer from creating a useless committee by resolution such as has been done so frequently.

IT is believed that assurances were given at Detroit that the Frame committee will be given every encouragement to trim the working forces of the association and of the sections, such as the size of the council and of executive committees, down to a business basis. It will bring the expenses to a point within the income, if it is to meet with general approval.

PROBABLY the meeting place will be in St. Louis and it will not be a secret or secretive affair. Those who are interested or who have suggestions to make are welcome to attend or to send letters to members of the committee.

WE have seen the tax assessor's return for a lot of private banks down state which advertise "responsibility" all the way from two hundred thousand to half a million.

HONESTLY, we'd be ashamed to tell you the taxes they pay. It may come out in the wash at Peoria but the responsibility will be on the kickers.

WHEN compared with the taxes paid by incorporated banks in the same towns it makes a noise like a scandal. A squeaky old delivery wagon in Chicago pays more than any one of several of the high-and-mighty among the antis. "There's a reason."

GOVERNMENT TO DEPOSIT CASH IN WESTERN BANKS

It is reported that the treasury department of the United States is contemplating depositing in western banks from twenty-five to fifty millions. This will enable the banks better to take care of demands for funds on account of the crop movements.

DOES YOUR BANK INVEST IN BONDS?

If so, do you buy—

- First: For temporary investment?
- Second: For permanent investment?
- Third: For income?
- Fourth: As a "secondary reserve" proposition, or
- Fifth: For appreciation?

In either of the above cases, we are prepared to submit offerings to conform to your needs, requirements and preferences. A letter from you will enable us to do this.

would be possible for a man having the confidence of both the Investment Bankers Association officials and the magazines to suggest a series of articles to the various magazines along educational lines. I further believe that the relation of this association to the magazines should be such that the best class of magazines will make their standard for financial advertisers a membership in the Investment Bankers Association, or require those who advertise in their columns to have at least equal financial standing. After a discussion of the pros and cons of this feature, I should be glad to have it referred to the committee on publicity and domestic relations.

My second suggestion is that the association should at once commence to establish a statistical bureau, which would stand ready to furnish information (mind you, not advice) regarding investments to all its members. To establish such a bureau would mean a considerable amount of work, as well as some considerable time. There are now in existence various bureaus on statistics, some of which have placed their services at our disposal. These should be carefully considered, their value should be determined, and if such a bureau should be established and maintained at a high standard, the Investment Bankers Association could do nothing which would bring sound investments into greater repute and, conversely, at the same time, wipe out the many wildcat schemes which from day to day come to the surface. Such a bureau could devise a blank form of report, which would give the essential statistics regarding any company which might be inquired about, and should be held as confidential information to our members. It would also be necessary, it seems to me, for each member of our association to keep on file in the secretary's office of our association copies of all public offerings of bonds purchased by them, and be willing to give to the secretary such information from time to time as will disclose the real character and worth of such bonds.

My third suggestion is that the members of this association dealing in municipal bonds will place on file with the secretary of this association a copy of the legal papers of all municipal issues published by them from and after September 1, 1912, together with a copy of the opinion of the attorney approving the issue of bonds, and that a register be kept in the office of the secretary of all such municipal issues, showing the house purchasing the same, amount and date of issue, rate of interest, attorney approving the same, this record having reference also to a certain file number where the details will be found. This may not seem especially valuable at the commencement of our career, but it will become a part of our statistical department and each year will, in my judgment, become more and more valuable to the members of this association. This undoubtedly, if recommended by the board of governors, should be referred to the committee on municipal bonds.

My fourth suggestion is one concerning legislation and I think we have a most excellent committee to do a most important work. I would suggest that each member of the board of governors make it a point to call to the attention of Allen G. Hoyt, the chairman of this committee, the situation from time to time as it comes to him regarding his own territory and state. I would also suggest that the secretary likewise be notified, so that we will have in the office of the secretary such knowledge as each of you think the situation should have and through our general offices lend the legislative committee such assistance as we can.

be held in Chicago, at the invitation of the Chicago Clearing House Association.

Wednesday Session

The first session of the big convention was held Wednesday morning in the Orpheum Theatre, the meeting being devoted to a discussion of educational topics. The invocation was delivered by the Rev. A. M. Little, D.D., Ph.D., of Peoria. G. W. Curtiss, president of the Peoria Clearing House, extended the welcome of the City to the visitors and delegates, which was gracefully responded to by W. T. Fenton, vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago, and president of the association in 1898-99. Following Mr. Fenton, President B. F. Harris of Champaign delivered his annual address, which will be found in part in another portion of this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER. Dr. George E. Vincent, president of the University of Minnesota, talked on education and national efficiency. Dr. Vincent's address will be found printed in full elsewhere in this issue. H. E. Miles of Racine, Wis., who was down on the program for a talk on vocational education, was unable to speak. W. T. Abbott, vice-president of the Central Trust Company of

SECRETARY CRAMPTON WRITES RESIGNATION

At the close of the Peoria convention, when everyone was weepy, soft-hearted and full of forgiveness, was the time chosen to put over a deep-laid plan to increase the salary of Secretary R. L. Crampton from three to four thousand dollars on the plea, not of efficiency, but, that he was "going to get married" and needed the money. The job was well laid but the watchful, intrepid W. G. Edens was on the job as usual. He told the members what they already knew and did it so effectively that what looked like a unanimous vote in favor in reality "hung up" the salary job by a vote of twenty-four to three.

It was referred to the administration committee to be decided fully and reported at the mid-year meeting of the council. Crampton was so chagrined and disappointed that he gave the committee "one hour" to decide and to warm up matters wrote his resignation.

S. B. MONTGOMERY
QUINCY

The "Judge" as vice-president of the Illinois Bankers will be an active member of the administrative committee. He is the active head of the largest bank in the state outside of Chicago, but gives fully of his time to association matters.

That, however, did not bring the desired increase and at time of going to press the committee was in no humor to be bulldozed. It is said that among other plans is one in which a prominent secretary in an adjoining state cuts a central figure.

Peoria, Sept. 27th.—President John D. Phillips of the Illinois Bankers Association, has declined to be stampeded by the Crampton resignation and will not call the administration committee together for some time. He wants time to investigate the situation and so to be certain to carry out only the expressed will of the members of the association. Thus it is likely Crampton will find himself taken at his word, for he demanded an immediate increase of $1,000 per year.

Neil J. Shannon

Neil J. Shannon, assistant to Judge Charles S. Cutting, has been appointed trust officer of Foreman Brothers Banking Company. Mr. Shannon has been connected with the probate court for twenty-two years. Foreman Brothers recently established their trust department.

J. S. AISTHORPE, CHAIRMAN OF COUNCIL

At the conclusion of a friendly race for the chairmanship of the executive council of the Illinois Bankers Association, with favor fairly well balanced between George Woodruff and Col. Aisthorpe, the younger man withdrew and nominated the elder, at the Peoria convention. It was a fine, manly act on Mr. Woodruff's part and was deeply appreciated by Col. Aisthorpe and by all who take into consideration the finer ethics of such a situation. A slender victory, by two or three votes, isn't in it with a magnanimous act, and everybody says it's for Woodruff next year. So it should be, in a high minded association.

FINLEY BARRELL & CO.

Finley Barrell & Co., bankers, Chicago, now are located in their new quarters in the Rookery.

As the result of an illness which made serious operation necessary, William B. Kincaid, thirty-four years old, teller for the New England National Bank of Kansas City, died Sept. 16th. He was the son of Charles Kincaid, cashier of the Park National Bank.

J. S. AISTHORPE
CAIRO

The new chairman of the executive council of the Illinois Bankers is one of the best known bankers in the state. His elevation to official station was exceedingly popular, and came as a reward of years of earnest, disinterested service to the association. His tour of the chairs will show results.

OCTOBER INVESTMENTS

The bonds offered below were purchased by us after a thorough investigation to satisfy ourselves that they were a safe and suitable investment for our own funds. Having done this, we expect to continue to buy and sell at the market price any bonds once purchased, so that at any time before the bonds become due an investor may come to us for a market.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

BURROUGHS has a new adding and subtracting machine which is being tested out in the presidential campaign. It is used at the Wilson headquarters to add up the times that Roosevelt calls his competitors such names as "liar," "thief" and the like.

IT is the plan to subtract when he says anything nice about either Taft or Wilson. Thus far it has been all adding. A single-barreled machine would do for the Colonel.

A NEW YORK fortune-teller who wanted to send a message to the President predicting his election was arrested as insane. Yet the members of the D. R. Forgan Illinois-Taft committee all get away with it.

DOWN at Peoria—Nelson H. Greene posted notice of "a reward of $50 for a canteloupe that tastes of melon."

SOMEONE tagged Harris with a bull-moose pin and a label—"Nobody's honest but me —T.R."

THEY took a straw vote down here on Wednesday. The nearer the distillery the bigger the Moose lead.

W. E. STONE had a good one to tell of a battle between a cow and an aeroplane. Time and place was when she "jumped over the moon."

IT was told down at the convention hall that one of the blooming young agricultural farmers from down-state wrote to James J. Hill for advice and got the following (ten-collect) telegram:

"Chin farming will not do; you've got to work."

J. N. DOLLEY, the "Blue Sky" man from Kansas, was the center of many groups. He isn't in the claim business but does things. Other states give Kansas and her banking commissioner the discoverer's medal when it comes to a remedy for fake stock swindles.

MORE than one hundred bankers came down on the Chicago-Peoria special over the Rock Island, in charge of General Agent L. H. McCormick. The equipment and the dining-car service were specially fine and were highly commended.

IT wasn't difficult to defeat supervision—not in the private bank belt—when 190 private bankers were in Peoria and when not less than 35 depositary banks were in an obliging humor.

PEORIA banks did not feel like going against any of their guests and so—for the moment—became anti-supervisionists. After it was over the reversal to type came about and—so we are informed—the privates themselves will take up the good work along in October.

TRULY the wiser among them have seen the handwriting on the wall and are converting their slower brothers. They believe in supervision—perhaps not in its desirability—but in its certainty. They are not going to let someone else draw or control the bill, for

WEST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 61 per cent. Population 54 per cent.

EAST of Chicago, in the past ten years, new banks have increased 15 per cent. Population 12½ per cent.

¶ If your business is increasing the new business of your bank, your field (the field of new accounts) is in the territory covered like a blanket by THE CHICAGO BANKER. The rest is obvious.

they see the advantage in doing that themselves.

AS one of their leaders said: "What would happen if the socialists or the demagogues of the political parties took up the plain words of the Abbott resolution and told the rabble why they lost their money in the failing, irresponsible banks?"

IT would put the Illinois Bankers Association in a very bad light to say the least. Should a wave of bank reform ensue, dangerous riders and restrictions could be hitched onto any proposed bill. Even guaranty isn't beyond the possibilities.

MANY bankers believe that unauthorized and unsupervised banking could be made a misdemeanor by amendment of the criminal code and thus not require a referendum vote. Certainly that would be a short cut to sure results.

THERE were those at Peoria who tried to stampede the A. B. A. members into holding their annual meeting only two weeks after holding one at Detroit. Fortunately the Illinois vice-president, H. E. Otte, arrived in time to say "nothing doing."

JUST his promptness and fairness were required to prevent another famous Illinois mix-up with duplicate sets of officers confusing each other and everybody else for the next whole year.

NO retiring president ever received such tribute as did B. F. Harris. The speeches, the resolutions and above all the feeling of the convention, were for him to a most unusual degree, and that at a time when most conventions are lauding the incoming officials.

PRESIDENT-ELECT JOHN D. PHILLIPS was chief among those who tried to tell of what Mr. Harris had done and to predict the carrying on of his famous welfare policies.

IN truth, Mr. Harris was put on a pinnacle where, as Mr. Phillips said, "his record will be very hard to live up to."

ST. LOUIS came over forty strong in a special "interurban," and among other things took a straw vote on the way. It resulted (all bankers but one) Wilson, 18; Taft 13, and Roosevelt, 5. How's that?

R. S. HAWES and J. A. Lewis took the vote and counted it.

NOTHING cleverer was gotten off at the Peoria meet than the response to the address of welcome by W. T. Fenton of Chicago. He also tossed some fine bouquets to Mr. Harris and supervision. Be it said that no man was out of favor at Peoria for speaking his true, known convictions.

BANKERS are too broad for that. Secretly they do not admire a dodger nor a trimmer. They're too manly and high-minded for that.

W. G. EDENS had been in Peoria several days ahead of the convention attending a meeting of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. Thus he had a start on the rest in having his picture in the papers first.

MR. EDENS also remained behind when the big Chicago special pulled out on the Rock Island. He was to preside at a state convention on good roads on Friday. His activities seem to be as effective as they are innumerable.

NO more interested nor attentive attendant at the sessions could be discovered than Edward E. Crabtree, who was president just before Mr. Harris and who was elected to the A. B. A. executive council at Detroit a few weeks ago.

WALTER S. REARICK is an incorporated state banker, but sits in counsel with his former associates—the private bankers. He was first to "tumble" to the "consent" features of the supervision resolution, but he wasn't soon enough—not quite.

AUGUST BLUM gave a dinner at the Creve Coeur Club to the incoming president, John D. Phillips. Twelve covers were laid and a theatre party followed. (This reads like a real society item.)

ALEX. D. CAMPBELL of the Hanover, New York, attended his first Illinois convention this week. Says it beats Detroit for interest and in its splendid program.

THE next Illinois convention will be held in Chicago. That was promptly decided at Peoria when August Blum read a telegraphic (Continued on page 39)

Illinois Bankers Convention at Peoria

"It is a privilege and pleasure in behalf of the Peoria Clearing House Association, an organization embracing in its membership every bank in the city, to extend to your annual gathering a hearty and cordial welcome to our city and hospitality, and to express the hope that your deliberations may be of interest and

House in opening the largest state convention of bankers ever held in Illinois, and probably the largest ever held in the Union. Its brevity and clarity commended it as a model of its kind. W. T. Fenton of Chicago, an ex-president of the association, responded neatly and the big conference was under way.

The Presidential Address

Next came the address of the high-gaited, progressive president—B. F. Harris of Champaign. He crowded the recounting of the activities of the year into a twenty-minute address which was a fitting climax to his tour of the chairs. He took a Gospel text which he served up à la Outlook and which went well. The "Fra" would call a far less pretenhave the truer ring, if we likewise labored to place our own houses in order. Being assured that this great association of some sixteen hundred banks,—representing upwards of two billions of banking power—desired to put itself on record in the matter of state supervision of all banks not under federal organization, that proposition was taken up. We proceeded on the theory that the majority should rule and that the executive officer can render no greater service than seeing that such majority may have its proper hearing and opportunity. At this late day,—when many governmentally supervised banks practice self and reciprocal outside expert inspection,—when the people, whose money we hold, demand and the courts approve,—when broad-minded bankers do not question the propriety nor the right of public supervision, there can be no argument against supervision. Banking legislation springs from a realization that under the system of individual banks, some regulation and inspection is necessary to protect depositors, as well as banks, against bankers who may be either inexperienced, improvident, or prone pleasure as well as of advantage and profit. While we are not the largest city in our state in either population or volume of business transactions, we shall not admit that you could receive anywhere a more sincere or cordial welcome than we extend.

"You are a representative class of business men and citizens, more nearly controlling perhaps than any other the welfare and destinies of the communities in which you reside; and that this influence should be wisely directed it is well for us to come together for the discussion and consideration of those problems which directly affect us, and through us the welfare of our people. It is not my purpose, and I have no wish to enter upon any discussion of any subject which will come before you, but commending you to the duties and pleasures of the hour we trust and hope that your deliberations will be harmonious, and that when you return to your homes it will be with pleasant remembrances of us which you will from time to time recall and treasure."

Such were the welcoming words of President G. W. Curtis of the Peoria Clearing tious thing "a preachment." He then recounted the efforts of the association in the direction of a better citizenship and good government. Floral bouquets of size and fragrance were tossed to other associations—banker and otherwise—interested in the good work of agricultural improvement, good roads, education.

Bank Supervision Touched Upon

On this important part of his review of the year's work done by the association. Mr. Harris said in part:

"Alive as the association has been in other fields of public welfare it was apparent that our efforts would come with better grace and to use the funds of their bank for their own improper advantage.

"To further safeguard the people—to be better prepared with capital and otherwise to meet financial stringency,—to remove unfair competition that results in bad banking and failure,—to pay a fairer share of taxes, to put the banking business on the high and dignified plane that the custodians of the people's money must occupy,—to drive out the financially and morally irresponsible, who disgrace the profession and defraud the public,—to put Illinois in the high place that is hers,—these are a few of the results springing from adequate supervision any one of which should be sufficient to secure it.

"While this association would serve each individual member wherever it can, we must lose sight of the individual or particular bank, for this association is concerned only with building up the safety and service of banking in its entirety. As public rights are above individual rights, so the welfare of the association and the fraternity is above that of any member.

"A few uninformed, or otherwise, claim that supervision does not reduce failures, yet over any period of years since the war, statistics show that private bank failures are five to one as compared with those of supervised banks, and the losses, estimated on the basis of similar deposits, are several hundred times more. Short sighted indeed is he who asks and accepts the solemn trust of the people's funds and ignores their rights in the matter of all reasonable protection.

"Supervision is certain to come and we must anticipate the movement, for it will bring more prosperity to the honest private banker and strength to all.

"If a bank is unable to pay a fair return on the capital necessary for a sound business then the community doesn't deserve a bank, any more than it deserves other conveniences it doesn't support. If the individual hasn't the capital required, then he isn't entitled to go into the business, unless he co-operates with a number of his fellow townsmen and farmers and organizes, in that way, one of the strongest and most helpful banks any small community can have. There is no foundation in fact for opposition to bank supervision in this state, other than that growing out of purely selfish reasons and the opportunity to do, under unsupervised banking, the things that should not be done under any system of banking. Many private bankers are frank enough to admit this, and some will admit nothing, while it is certain that more than half of them are favorable to any reasonable proposition.

"On the basis of the foregoing there was appointed an unusually strong and representative committee of nine of our members, three of each class of bankers, with Charles G. Dawes, of Chicago, chairman. That committee, after diligent and painstaking effort, without expense to this body, submitted its report in terms as favorable as could be asked. The proposition is now up to this association and it must act directly and should instruct its officers specifically.

"Blue Sky" Bill and Sharks

"In further accord with the policy of public welfare there should be legislation in this state, following the line of the Kansas 'blue sky' bill, to save the people of the state from the enormous loss they suffer through purchase of 'wildcat' and worthless so-called securities. The July report of the postmaster-general shows $120,000,000 lost to the people during the year, in 'wildcat' securities sold through the mails. Millions more were lost and not reported and still other millions by personal and direct sales. The stuff sold was largely bogus mining, insurance and fake medicine stocks and worthless land. The government convicted and sentenced 452 of these sharpers and 571 yet await trial, while thousands have escaped. The 'loan shark' situation, and the immigrant banks, who prey on foreigners, also need attention, and it should be the privilege and duty of all good bankers to assist in driving out of the state these several classes of human sharks, many of whom pose as bankers."

Mr. Harris then confided further plans for an allegorical picture-postal campaign and for welfare work to the association. He came out strongly for the abolition of that part of the bankers' constitution which keeps the ex-presidents on the executive council for life. He thought benefits might come if national and state bank members met annually as the private bankers now do.

GOOD ROADS CONVENTION

On Friday, September 27th, a state good roads convention was held at Peoria under the auspices of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. Convention headquarters were at the Jefferson Hotel, as was the secretary's convention office. Delegates and guests were invited to call at the secretary's office for registration, credentials, badges, etc. At ten o'clock group meetings were held, and at noon, luncheon and the main business session. Mayor E. N. Woodruff of Peoria delivered the address of welcome, after which a report was heard from the committee on policy, containing outline of the platform of the association. There was a discussion of the report by the Hon. A. P. Grout, president Illinois Farmers Institute; the Hon. Oliver Wilson, master National Grange; the Hon. Edwin R. Wright, president Illinois Federation of Labor; the Hon. Charles J. Piez, president Illinois Manufacturers Association; D. Ward King, inventor of King road drag; J. D. Phillips, Illinois Bankers Association; S. E. Bradt, highway commissioner, De Kalb, Ill.; A. G. Batchelder, New York; Mrs. H. M. Dunlap, Savoy, Ill.; the Hon. Eugene Kimbark, president Chicago Association of Commerce; the Hon. Homer J. Tice, Greenview, Ill.; the Hon. C. S. Hearn, Quincy, Ill.; W. L. Park, first vice-president Illinois Central Railroad, and John D. Shoop, president Illinois State Teachers Association. There was a general discussion by delegates, report of committee on constitution and reports of officers.

At 8 P. M. there was a mass meeting in the Coliseum, at which addresses were delivered on the press and good roads by E. F. Baldwin, and on road building in Colorado by Thomas J. Tynan, warden Colorado state penitentiary. Mr. Tynan illustrated his lecture with moving pictures and told of the use of convict labor in the construction of roads in Colorado. Following Mr. Tynan, Jesse Taylor, editor "Better Roads," Jamestown, Ohio, talked on the general subject of good roads. After reading the platform the meeting adjourned.

Officers of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association are as follows: William G. Edens, Chicago, president; S. E. Bradt, De Kalb, first vice-president; C. A. Kiler, Champaign; second vice-president; C. G. Miller, Cairo, third vice-president; F. A. Garner of Quincy, fourth vice-president; Thomas Suduth of Springfield, treasurer, and R. J. Finnigan of Chicago, secretary.

Trust Company Service in New York City

This company, with ample capital, large resources, and an efficient, and well-systematized organization, which dates back to 1864, has the ability and disposition to give good trust-company service.

Our various departments, including banking, foreign exchange, bond, trust, transfer, reorganization and collection, are well equipped with modern facilities for transacting business promptly and economically.

For these reasons we feel justified in cordially inviting the New York accounts of banks and trust companies.

FIRST NATIONAL OF HARVEY

First National of Harvey is one of the growing, progressive banks of the state. In the past five years it has grown to be a bank of $447,000 strong. It has a capital of $50,000 and surplus of $10,000. Deposits are $332,000. Frederic R. De Young is president; W. D. Rogers and W. E. Powers are vice-presidents; David Wiedemann is cashier and Wm. Plagge, assistant cashier. The bank's business during the past year has increased over $100,000.

SCHOOL CHILDREN TAUGHT TO SAVE

The school savings system recently inaugurated in Cedar Rapids, Ia., has met with more than usual success, a fact which is attested by the report submitted to the board of education by John Burianek, Jr., cashier of the Peoples Savings Bank of Cedar Rapids, which institution has been acting as custodian of the savings of the school children. Stamps are sold to the depositors and are pasted on cards. The total number of accounts opened by children who filled one or more cards was 1,100. Of this number 85 withdrew their entire balances, leaving 1,025 active accounts. The total number of stamps sold was 294,355, amounting to $2,943.55. The total amount withdrawn was $561.88, leaving to the credit of the system a balance of $2,381.67. All of this was accomplished in the comparatively short time of three months and one-half. Miss Ethelyn Grau has had charge of the department.

NATIONAL BANK OF DECATUR

National Bank of Decatur is the oldest national bank in that city. This institution has capital stock of $200,000, surplus of $100,000 and undivided profits of $76,377.83. Deposits are $1,768,434.83. B. O. McReynolds is president; John Ullrich and C. P. Thatcher are vice-presidents; J. A. Meriweather is cashier and James M. Allen and Wm. A. Phares are assistant cashiers. Recently the bank took over the banking house of L. Burrows & Co. The institution was organized in 1873 as the Decatur National. In 1893 the present name was adopted. A modern bank building will be erected on the site of the old Burrows bank, and the capital stock will be increased to $250,000. The bank has been successful since its organization and enjoys the respect and confidence of the public.

COMES OUT FOR BETTER FARMING

W. B. Harrison, recently elected secretary of the state secretaries section of the A. B. A.,

W. B. HARRISON
Enid, Okla.

secretary of the Oklahoma Bankers Association and editor of the "Oklahoma Banker," in the September issue of that publication has enlisted himself among the advocates of improved agricultural methods and conditions in the United States. Mr. Harrison said in part:

"Look what was done in Oklahoma alone this very year—actually millions of dollars in wealth were added to the state by inducing the farmers to plant more of a single crop than they have been planting heretofore. How can the results of such work be estimated in dollars and cents?"

"But that is only a small part. Our national growth has been one-sided—terribly so. We have built great cities and polished them to as near perfection as we could, and we have utterly neglected our rural life. At last we are awakening to the enormity of the blunder of developing a citizenship in spots only."

He pointed out the urgent necessity for good roads, and deprecated the fact that so much attention is paid to traffic which goes over the railroads and so little to that which goes over the dirt roads, when, in reality, the former is insignificant when compared with the latter. He expressed it as his opinion that the banker must play an important part in the accomplishment of these reforms.

SPRINGFIELD MARINE BANK

Springfield Marine Bank is the oldest bank in Illinois, having been organized in 1851. Capital is $300,000; surplus of a like amount and undivided profits of $156,000. Deposits are $2,600,000. John W. Bunn is president; Ernst H. Helmle is vice-president; Henry Bunn is cashier and Shelby C. Dorwin assistant cashier.

TRAVELERS' CHEQUES EXTENSIVELY USED

That the travelers' cheques issued under authority of the American Bankers Association have proven extremely popular during the four years which this system has been in vogue, is attested by the fact that the Bankers Trust Company of New York, the redemption agent, has redeemed over $32,000,000 worth of these cheques. The plan for these cheques was originated by Fred I. Kent, vice-president of the Bankers Trust Company, formerly manager of the foreign exchange department of the First National of Chicago. They find ready acceptance all over the world, and for large as well as small amounts.

George E. Vincent Speaks on Education for National Efficiency

It takes competition to make a people know what they need to teach their youth. A hunting horde sets store by the arts of the chase; a fighting clan drills its offspring to shoot straight; the Spartans trained their young to do police duty over a slave population; Rome, in her days of expansion, disciplined her citizens for conquest and rule; Germany to-day, confronting all competitors, trains her population for military efficiency, industrial and commercial competition and scientific research.

The United States, isolated from the world-struggles of the last century, has found her chief opponent in Nature. To acquire territory from weak powers was easy. To master and develop this vast area was the national task. This was turned over to individual and incorporated contractors on the liberal and stimulating terms: "Go in and help yourselves. Your personal success will be a service to the nation." Men responded to this summons and formed that westward moving type of society known as "the frontier." This frontier life made men Jacks-of-all-trades with little esteem for experts; it developed in them independence, a sense of social equality, a contempt for those who assumed airs of superiority. The men of the frontier were absorbed in their personal careers. They felt little need for co-operation; they were individualists.

American education reflects the ideas of the individualistic frontier. Aside from a theory of general intelligence—a sort of police protection against ignorance—education is still thought of as an individual right and opportunity, rather than as a social function. It is a source of personal culture, a preparation for a profession or a skilled trade. Even the recent Shibboleth of social service carries with it a strong suggestion of individual satisfaction—a kind of personal luxury of altruism.

Distinguished president of the University of Minnesota makes an eloquent appeal to bankers at the Peoria convention—says efficiency rather than opportunity will be the true test of the individual, of the school, and of the nation

It is not merely the possession of distant islands which is bringing the United States into world politics. Deeper forces are at work.

industry will have to meet still sharper competition at home.

Words and phrases are struck out to fit the times. In Emerson's day America spelled Opportunity in capital letters. It would be a disaster to drop this stimulating idea from the national lexicon. But just now, it is Efficiency that is being put in italics, if not capitals. The call for efficiency is a summons to awake from complaisant dreams of national destiny and to organize under the guidance of a national purpose. We must learn to practise economy, to obey the dictates of science, to put value on expert knowledge and specialized skill. We must train our children for places in a well-organized and highly efficient national life.

Germany and Japan afford striking examples of national efficiency organized by strong, paternal governments. We may well ask, Can democracy discipline itself to such achievements? The aristocratically inclined, who hold to a "trust the capable few" philosophy, are skeptical. They who have faith in democracy, who believe in the "trust the many" theory are confident that this national task can be accomplished.

National efficiency for the United States demands the essential things which a strong centralized power can secure—classification, specialization, technical training, organization—and more than these, it must preserve the valuable factors which democracy favors—personal responsibility, initiative, social flexibility, ex-

Public lands have been occupied; natural resources have been appropriated, by individuals, corporations and government; population is increasing, exports of food-stuffs are declining; in a few years the tide may be running in the other direction. The truth is being pressed home that the days of careless exploitation of traditional agriculture, of easy-going industry and a wide-margin commerce are numbered. If we are to maintain even our present standard of living, we must change our methods. If we are to turn our vast resources to account effectively, we must put them into the markets of the world. If tariff walls are lowered, as they may be, American perimentation, resourcefulness and spontaneous loyalty. Education in an aristocracy must select and equip a favored few to command, must train and discipline the many for technical tasks, skilled labor, docile obedience to the captains of industry and government. Democracy must seek its leaders in all groups and must secure the intelligent and voluntary cooperation of the whole nation.

National efficiency demands the distribution of ability into many professions and callings, rather than concentration upon a few. We probably have too many lawyers, insurance agents, real estate dealers, brokers and middle-men,—possibly too many bankers—too few effective general farmers, fruit growers, dairymen, market gardeners, highly skilled artisans in many industries. Efforts to magnify these pursuits have been, so far, largely futile. City men's sentimental praise of rural life does not perceptibly add to the attractiveness of farming. Unctuous phrases about the "dignity of labor" do not cause men to flock into shops and factories. Until recently, the total effect of education has been to discredit manual labor, however skilled, and to turn ambitious boys and girls toward commercial pursuits. The fundamental nature of agriculture becomes more obvious every year. No national efficiency can be based upon manufactures and commerce. The soil is our greatest resource. The bankers of the United States are deserving well of their country because of the interest which they are showing in rural problems and in agricultural education.

Democracy cannot assign citizens to their life tasks by any coercions or authority. It is only by testing them and offering to them a variety of careers that distribution of functions can be effected. In a complex society the numbers of these callings essential to the national welfare grow rapidly. Education must recognize and give meaning and attraction to more and more of these activities. The motives which draw men into callings are social esteem, economic reward, a technique which challenges mental ability, a self-respecting sense of mastery and efficiency. Our society must widen its ideals of worthy and dignified work, must exalt expertness and must readjust rewards.

Current educational proposals are to be judged by the test of national efficiency. So-called vocational subjects are being rapidly introduced. German "continuation-schools" are held up for imitation. Agriculture as a school subject is earnestly and hopefully advocated. Along with praise of the new goes contemptuous allusion of an outworn and fossilized curriculum. It is too early to outline a system of national education, but certain guiding principles begin to define themselves.

If the best ability is to be sought in all classes there must not be a premature specialization and assignment to life tasks. There must be a period of general education, say up to fourteen, practically common to all children. This is a testing time during which aptitudes are discovered. This does not mean that a uniform system is to cover the land. Mechanical uniformity is a danger. The adaptation of each school to its special environment is a necessity. But this can be accomplished without provincializing the school.

A period of general education is especially needed in a democracy which aims at training not only specialized workers but intelligent citizens as well. Aristocracy may, for a time at least, secure efficiency by making its masses obedient servants. But democracy cannot accept what Lincoln called the "mud-sill" theory. Then, too, aristocracy may educate classes, but democracy must not merge men and women into fixed groups.

This general education, while not specifically a trade education, should contain much which has a direct bearing upon vocational choice and preparation. The days of mere book-learning are at an end. Manual training, drawing, music, cooking, sewing, school excursions, are not—when rightly handled—fads or frills. They are at once tests of aptitude and means of personal growth.

Vocational subjects should not be too early segregated from general education. If a social stigma once attaches itself to a calling or group, the vocation is hampered and antagonisms are aroused. Experience with agricultural education, for example, has proved the importance of keeping it in close relations with other types. To set off farm students as a group apart, is to discredit their training and to isolate them from the comradeship of high school, college and university. There is something inspiring in the life of a modern high school in such a state as Minnesota. Here, in one school community are children from town and country. They are working side by side in classrooms, laboratories, shops and experimental farms. The school is a unit at the same time that specialization for future vocations is well under way.

Experience shows that practical subjects rightly taught and properly related to the work of the school stimulate a keener interest in the other studies. Many of the formal pursuits get new meaning and charm when they are connected with the vocational activities. The new movement for practical education has therefore great value for general education.

It is equally true, however, that practical subjects when they are isolated or taught in a narrow way by unimaginative and uncultivated teachers lose a great part of their value. Agriculture may, if presented in its scientific and social aspects, be made a cultural study or it may be rendered so "practical" as to be of little significance. One of the pressing needs of to-day is teachers trained to present these new studies in an accurate, authoritative and at the same time inspiring fashion.

It must be remembered that a national system must offer education for all kinds of children destined for a wide range of social tasks. The older cultural education so-called has permanent and tested value. We cannot afford to throw away the rich heritage from the past. Many must be trained to preserve and enrich this noble tradition of knowledge, beauty and idealism. All must have some share in it.

This then is the national task: to work out a system of education which shall aim at making the United States an effective competitor in the world's arena. Efficiency must be secured, however, through and not at the sacrifice of our fundamental institutions. It must be a progressive efficiency, in that it gives scope to individuality and experiment. It must be an expert efficiency, which recognizes the authority of tested scientific truth and verified experience. It must be a social efficiency, arising not from coercion of the many but from their loyalty to a common ideal and purpose. It must be a moral efficiency, inspired not by mere hope of material gain but by a genuine desire to make our country a potent influence for social justice and for world welfare.

MONROE AND CLARK STREETS

J. N. Dolley on his "Blue Sky" Remedy

I am pleased to meet with the bankers of Illinois to-day here in the beautiful city of Peoria. We, as bankers, are an important part in the business world. No community, no commonwealth or nation, can be stronger financially or commercially than its banks are strong. No bank can be stronger than its managing force is strong.

The fundamental principles of banking to-day are the same as when the first bank was opened hundreds of years ago, and if you devi-

Illinois bankers at Peoria hail the discoverer of the "Dead-Shot" remedy for fake stock and bond promoters. Mr. Dolley tells his story in a simple effective way and names the states which have followed in the wake of Kansas vancements in Kansas. On some of them, you may not all agree with me, but they have done a great deal of good in Kansas banking circles, and some of them are rapidly spreading and being adopted by other states as sound and conservative banking principles.

I believe that much of the success and standing of a bank depends on its first organization. With this in mind, we secured the passage of a law in Kansas providing that a careful investigation be made before a charter is granted for a bank, for the purpose of ascertaining what the community's needs and demands were for additional banking facilities. During the past two years, we have refused more than fifty bank charters. We refused more than twenty before the law was passed. The law went to the supreme court of Kansas and the court said that it was constitutional. It must, of course, be administered fairly, honestly and frankly, without any prejudice or any likes or dislikes within the breast of the bank commissioner who has the right to refuse their applications. My contention is that where a community has sufficient banks satisfactorily to take care of its business and those banks generally are satisfying the people of that community, and are good strong banks, perhaps making some money, that additional banks should not be allowed to start when they will simply divide the business of the other banks and instead of having good, strong, and solvent banks, we will have a number of weak ones, some of them or all of them in danger all the time.

The Supreme Court of the United States has said in a Kansas case in connection with the guaranty law, that, under the constitution, the state has the right to enforce police power over banks, that it may go from regulation to prohibition, prohibiting the institution of the ate from those principles far, it means your failure. Conservatism, character and collateral are the important parts or principles of banking. And these same principles apply to the grocery store and to every other business in the commercial world. The same principles that the successful banker uses, applied to any other business means, in most cases, the success of that business.

There has been wonderful progress made, gentlemen, along the lines of bank supervision during the past three or four years: more progress and advancement than had been made during the ten, fifteen or twenty years preceding it. Not only has there been progress and advancement made by the several state departments, but there has been much progress made by the national government. The present comptroller of the currency, the Honorable Lawrence O. Murray, is, in my judgment, one of the ablest and most progressive that has ever held that position up to the present time. He has done much for the national banks.

I am advised that in Illinois you have about five hundred private banks that are not subject to state supervision and that the question is being discussed and agitated as to extending supervision over these private institutions. I believe the position you are taking along these lines is correct and that if Illinois expects to keep up with the rest of the states with its state banking institutions, it will be necessary for your state government to supervise closely and well all private banking institutions. The banking department of Kansas when first instituted and before its institution, received much opposition from private banks as well as incorporated banks. There is not a state banker in Kansas to-day who would entertain for a moment the proposition of dispensing with our banking department. It has done a great work for the depositing public, as well as the banks themselves. I do not believe that the time is very far distant when the business world will refuse to do business with banking institutions that are not under state or federal supervision. The depositing public is entitled to supervision. Take, for instance, the bank with $15,000 capital and $150,000 deposits, which means that the stockholders of the bank have invested $15,000 as against $150,000 invested by the depositing public. I hold that those depositors should have something to say about the way that bank is run, and the only way they can do this is through state or national supervision.

We have made a number of material adabuse the cashier. The cashier was a sturdy, husky young fellow and stood it about as long as he thought he could and then proceeded to throw the fellow out of the bank, which he absolutely was justified in doing. This party then started out and said he would break that "dam" bank, if it took every dollar he had. He sent us an application for a charter and I sent for him to come to the department. After some conversation, I told him about what had happened in the bank that morning. He at first denied it, but finally admitted that it was true. I then said to him: "I am not here, as bank commissioner, to assist you or any one else in wrecking banks. It is my duty to see that they are not wrecked, and as long as I am bank commissioner, I will not permit you to start a bank in that town, with the intention of breaking the present bank," and we refused to grant him a charter. On the other hand we do not permit banks to take advantage of the fact that we have the power to refuse applications for new banks. When an application is submitted for a new bank in a town on account of the fact that the present bank is not treating the people of that community as it should

First National of Champaign is the bank of which B. F. Harris, the retiring head of the Illinois Bankers Association, is vice-president. The other officers are H. H. Harris, president; N. M. Harris, vice-president, and H. S. Catron, cashier. The late B. F. Harris, Sr., was the father of H. H. Harris and the grandfather of B. F. Harris. N. M. Harris is a brother of B. F. B. F. treat them, that bank is advised that if they do not run their bank as it should be run and treat the people of that community as they should be treated, the application for a new bank will be granted. This generally brings them to time in short order and I want to say to you that this law has done a wonderful lot of good.

We go further than this. When a charter is granted for a new bank, we notify the president and cashier of the bank that they will be expected to come to the banking department before the bank starts, and spend two or three days in taking an examination. We have a self-constituted examining board, composed of myself and my first and second assistants. We give them a written examination on the Kansas banking statutes, the corporation laws as they pertain to banking, the negotiable instruments law and general banking and business practice. We do not limit this requirement to new banks, but it applies to all new cashiers or managing officers of Kansas state banks. Persons taking these examinations must make at least seventy points to pass. If they fall below this, they are given thirty days to study up and we then give them another examination. If they fail this time, they are rejected for one year. If they pass the examination they are given a certificate or diploma setting forth the fact that they have successfully passed the examination.

In this department order, which we have issued to all Kansas state banks, we also require that a new cashier or managing officer must have had at least two years' actual experience in banking in Kansas, or four years outside of Kansas, before he will be accepted at all. I believe that this is good banking.

The history of banking shows that much of the trouble in banks is caused by incompetency, lack of education and experience in banking, without any preparation by the would-be banker to fill the responsible position of managing officer of a bank. Many men are allowed to go into the banking business who have no talents, experience or education for this great, important work, and disastrous results too often follow, and it often is found bank in the first instance. It also said that when the Oklahoma legislature declared by implication, that free banking is a public danger and that incorporation and inspection are necessary safeguards, said the court, this court certainly cannot say that it is wrong.

Said the court further, it may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all public needs. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be necessary to the public welfare. The power to compel beforehand cooperation and supervision, and thus it is believed to make a failure unlikely, must be recognized if the government is to do its proper work for the people.

The banker must take the business interests of his community and zone into his full confidence and counsel and see that they are thoroughly and reliably informed through supervision by the state or federal governments. The business interests of the country are interested financially to the extent of a four or five times greater investment than the stockholders and owners of banks. The banker might refer to his institution as "my bank," but the depositing public and the business interests are and should be the potent power.

That being true, I believe the power should be used in protecting your property and your bank as well as the depositors' interests. Should some irresponsible party desire to start a bank, which would not be for the best interests of your community, I believe that the banking department should have the power and should refuse to grant such a charter. I can point out to you numerous instances in Kansas where charters have been refused, which, had they been granted, would have resulted disastrously to all parties concerned. For instance, a certain party went into a little Kansas bank one morning and wanted to borrow $1,500. He was advised that he had all the money borrowed that the bank could loan him under the law and any additional loan would be an excess loan and in violation of the law. He became very angry and began to upon investigation that their previous business career is badly tainted with dishonesty and an entire absence of moral character, so necessary in banking. The Kansas department is very anxious to elevate Kansas banking to the highest state of perfection and efficiency, and has decided that no steps can be taken to accomplish those ends with more certainty than our present position as to the preparation and education of the men for the Kansas banking service.

We issued this order some ninety days ago and we already can see its good effects. The principle is absolutely right. The lawyer, the doctor, and all other professional men are required by law to pass certain examinations, and why should not the managing officers of banks? They are public servants and are engaged in one of the greatest professions of them all, and you will all agree with me that there is nothing that will hurt a community, state, or nation more than a mismanaged or failed bank. We have the power under our law to remove cashiers and managing officers from state banks for incompetency. When we find a bank that is not being managed properly we notify the cashier or managing officer to come before the examination board and take the examination, and prove to us whether or not he is competent. If he fails in the examination, he is promptly removed from his position, until such time as he may qualify for the place.

We have very greatly improved our system of examination in Kansas and we believe that it will compare favorably with any other state in the Union. For over two years we have been requiring all directors to meet with the examiner and go through the assets of the bank with him, and at the close, sign and swear to a statement that all its assets are worth their face, except such ones as they may designate. This practice has a very wholesome effect in locating and eliminating bad paper. If a bank has any bad or questionable paper, some of the directors are going to catch it.

The directors are required to manage and direct their bank as their office implies and are not allowed merely to be figureheads. In one or two instances where shortages have appeared in Kansas state banks, the matter has been taken into court and it was shown that certain directors had not given the bank their attention and knew practically nothing about its management, and that court held that such directors were liable individually and collectively for such shortage and they were required to pay it.

It is one of the last things we do in Kansas, to close a bank when it is found in bad condition. Every effort is made to raise the money through its directors or stockholders necessary to put the bank on its feet again, and I am pleased to say that it has only been necessary for us to close two banks in Kansas during the time I have been bank commissioner, and their depositors were paid in full, before the bank was closed.

We have also established a secret service department in connection with the banking department, which is one of the most valuable assets we have. We secured a special appropriation from our legislature for this purpose. Very often, there is a question raised as to whether a certain cashier or managing officer of a state bank has not started on the downhill road, gambling, drinking in excess, or practicing some of the other vices which will sooner or later lead to his downfall. In these cases we immediately put one of our detectives in the field, and he shadows him for a few days, and in a large number of cases we have been able either to put a stop to it, or remove him before it has gone far enough to hurt the bank.

This secret service department has also done some wonderful work in ridding our state of bank robbers. At the time I became bank commissioner there were two of the worst gangs of bank robbers operating in our state that ever infested the Middle West, one on our south line, with headquarters in Oklahoma, and one on our north line, with headquarters in Nebraska. They would rob a bank in Kansas and escape across the state border and as a general thing would get away. They were robbing our banks of thousands of dollars, damaging our property and destroying a great many human lives. We have completely annihilated these robbers and have put over forty of them in the penitentiary, and we have not had a single bank robbery in Kansas for over a year.

Politics has been absolutely eradicated from the department, and not a single employee holds his job for political reasons. We have put the department on an absolute civil service basis. No one is employed until he has taken an examination and proven himself to be qualified for the position. We want the very best men we can get, regardless of what their politics is, and I am pleased to say that we are getting them.

I am on your program to address you more especially on the subject of "Supervising Blue Sky Investments." It gives me much pleasure to have an opportunity to lay before you some of the benefits of this most important legislation. I venture the assertion that your good state could not pass a single law that would be of more benefit to its citizens and the people of the United States, especially those of the great Middle West, than the Blue Sky Law.

Of the numerous fake companies which have in the past operated in Kansas, fully two-thirds of them have had their offices in your state in the city of Chicago. I do not say this for the purpose of condemning your great city or state. Every great city is a beehive for these fake companies and the thieves and confidence men that promote them. We are all proud of the great city of Chicago, but this is a question which all states having large cities have to contend with, and I wish to impress on you the importance of meeting this situation and doing your full duty.

Kansas was the first state to enact a Blue Sky Law, and the only state having such legislation until just recently. A large number of the states are considering this law and some of them have enacted it. Arizona has adopted a law which is practically a copy of the Kansas law. Manitoba Province, Canada, has also enacted practically the same law.

We enacted this law in Kansas in March, 1911. It compels all companies, persons or agents who desire to sell any stocks, bonds or other securities in Kansas to submit information to the banking department which will enable the banking department to determine whether or not they have a bona fide proposition and one that is worthy of the confidence and consideration of the Kansas investor. The intent of the Blue Sky Law is to keep out of our state the promoter whose promises are as limitless as the blue sky and whose only intention is to sell the stock of his company without any thought of returning anything to the investor other than a highly decorated stock certificate.

At the time the law went into effect there were between four and six millions of dollars being annually taken from Kansas, which was absolutely lost to the investor as well as to the state of Kansas. Postmaster-General Hitchcock after careful investigation estimates that there is from three to four hundred million dollars annually lost by the investing public of the United States. This money was being taken from our state and a much larger amount is being taken from your state, to the headquarters of the promoters in New York and the East. And, gentlemen, ninety-eight per cent of it is either borrowed from your banks, or is taken from your deposits.

Of course, the good banker has no objections to his customers withdrawing their money or borrowing from his bank, if he knows or has reason to believe that they are investing it where it will bring them returns. He wants his customers to make money and become thrifty, because that helps his community and indirectly helps his bank, but no banker likes to see his customers send their money out of his community and state, where he is sure that they will get no return from it, and will probably have to borrow more money to take its place. I contend that the banker should be strongly interested in the passage of legislation to prevent this great evil and should lend his aid and co-operation toward securing such legislation and toward its enforcement after it has been secured.

Up to the present time about 1,500 companies of various kinds and characters have applied for permission to do business in Kansas under the Blue Sky Law. Fully three-fourths of these have been mining, oil, gas and stock selling schemes of a fraudulent nature, whose only intent was to get the investor's money and did not have the slightest thought of ever giving him anything back. The purchaser was not making an investment, he was not even speculating, he was merely giving his money to a bunch of thieves. Of the remaining one-fourth, fully half of them were of the most highly speculative sort, the kind in which the investor stands 98 chances to lose and possibly two chances to win. They were not investments but wild speculations, with no more chance to win than you have to beat a shell-game at a county fair.

But of the 1,500 applications which have been filed we have granted less than 100, and the greater majority of those granted were Kansas industrial and home enterprises. A large number of the 1,500 never got further than the application. It was not necessary for us to turn them down. As soon as they found out what information we were asking for, and what the nature of our investigation was going to be, they suddenly changed their minds and withdrew their applications.

This class of companies, as a general rule, has a prospectus and financial statement that makes a fine showing, one that all legitimate companies would be proud of, if they could make as good a one, but when you begin to compare these statements with their books and the facts, and begin to pull the covers off and see what is underneath, you find the jokers in full evidence.

Some of you may have an idea that you are well acquainted with business matters and business affairs and that it is unnecessary to have a law of this kind for your protection. This is probably true to some extent, but I want to say to you that the best of us get tripped up sometimes. The banker is not immune from buying gold bricks. We have all bought them at some time or other. The only difference is, when we buy them, we put them in the closet and keep still about it, whereas the other people tell about it.

You probably have all realized in making investigations of corporations and promotion schemes that you do not have the authority to require of the concern in question certain information which you would like to have. Neither do you have authority to go and examine the company's books and affairs. Under the Blue Sky Law we have a right to require any information we want from the company under oath, and also have the right to go and examine the company whenever we deem it necessary, with the same police power we have over banks.

It has been said that the people do not need a guardian to supervise their investments, but I want to say to you, and the most of you will agree with me, as business men, that a large per cent of them do need this kind of a protection and it would be of very great benefit to every citizen of the United States if they could have such supervision.

Almost every state in the Union has a banking department to regulate and supervise the banks. You as bankers are subject to the very strictest of supervision. Why should a bank be regulated and supervised any more than the stock-selling corporation? History and statistics show that the loss through banks to the public is but a drop in the bucket compared with the money which is lost through investment in worthless stocks and bonds offered to the people by unscrupulous crooks. In this connection it might be well for me to call your attention to the fact that letters of recommendation cannot always be relied upon. I regret very much to say it, but it is nevertheless true, that a great many bankers and business men give letters regarding certain persons, companies, or corporations for personal or other reasons, about which companies they know very little, and the company or corporation about which they give the letter of recommendation sometimes turns out to be a very bad proposition. I regret they often give favorable statements when they know they are doing wrong in doing so. For example, last fall a certain company came to my office and wanted to transact some business in Kansas. They had letters from a large number of big banks all over the United States, several of them from your state, financial journals, business firms, etc., in fact, I do not know that I ever saw a better line of endorsements. The company's officers have since that time proven that they were unreliable, unworthy of the confidence of the public, and were business crooks, and a receiver has been appointed to take charge of the company's affairs. It might be well for me to warn you at this time against giving letters of this kind unless you are sure of your ground and know exactly what you are

Editorial Comment

IN ILLINOIS

It will be conceded that the Illinois Bankers Association occupies a much firmer position in public confidence at the close of its twenty-second annual convention than ever before in its history. Its attainments in this regard cannot all be credited to any one year, but have been acquired through a series of progressive events happening within the past five years. The younger element in the association became very restive under the old form of organization which delegated most of the visible, and all of the real, powers to a potential faction within its membership. This faction for many years kept a close hold upon the official roster, and times without number boldly passed out prepared committee lists from the wings. Every innovation, however apparently harmless, was opposed on the ground that no changes were desired. The younger men of the association, however, persevered and after a three years' battle succeeded in having adopted in Illinois the group system, after it had proven its efficiency in all of the adjoining states years before. This same aggressive element next undertook a revision of the constitution, which finally was accomplished at last year's session at Springfield, whereby the great body of the convention took over to itself the control which for nearly twenty years had rested largely with the private bankers of the state. That portion of the constitution which gave them "never less than half of all committees" and which gave them the presidency and the chairmanship of the executive council in the years that the state legislature was in session, was abolished. President B. F. Harris, who retired at the Peoria convention, was among the contenders at all times for rule by the majority. With his advent at Cairo as chairman of the executive council he took up the question of bank supervision in the state, and later on practically made it an issue of his administration. Among other things taken up during his tour through the chairs were the movements for better farming, for good roads, for more practical educational methods and a suggestion for the adoption of the "Blue Sky" law in Illinois, a law made famous by Bank Commissioner Doley of Kansas. With the aid of the stalwart young bankers of the state great progress has been made in nearly all of these subjects. Having been denied the authority of the council to appoint a committee to prepare a plan for bank supervision in the state, Mr. Harris polled the entire membership of the association, and the result was overwhelmingly in favor of carrying on the work. Thus it came about that a strong committee, headed by Charles G. Dawes of Chicago, prepared a plan for putting Illinois in the front rank of states where banking is supervised—a plan which was so liberal and broad-minded that opposition to it was discovered only where selfish interests governed.

The association within the year has grown somewhat in membership, but very little in revenues. Among the states which have become distinguished for almost universal membership it ought to be possible to find a plan which could be applied in Illinois. The Illinois association is quite strong enough to secure the services of any of the successful secretaries from adjoining states, if that plan should be thought to be the solution. No bank in Chicago would hesitate a moment if it could have the opportunity of securing the services to itself of the most successful banker, say in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas or Nebraska. Why should the state association hesitate to secure the services of a secretary from any of these states, whose record might show an efficiency upwards of 100 per cent? These records are in existence and are obtainable. The time is past when it should be thought necessary to employ only natives in such capacities. It will be remembered that at one or two annual elections in Illinois there were receptive candidates from adjoining states. Their names did not get into the voting for the reason that the politically inclined on the council thought it the patriotic thing to do to resist all attempts to bring in an official from outside territory.

The resignation of Secretary Crampton tendered to force the issue of an increase in salary, gives the opportunity which is above referred to.

The convention finally voted down supervision owing to the presence of nearly two hundred private bankers, who added to their number many depository banks—enough votes to snow under those bold enough to come out in the open. Many refrained from voting and thus contributed to put the association in an ugly position. It appears to be opposed to supervision when it is not so opposed. Even the private bankers are believed to favor supervision and will likely propose a measure in a short time. President-elect Phillips voiced the conviction of every member of the association when he said, "Mr. Harris has set a mark so high that the way for further improvement is difficult indeed."

FINGER PRINT SIGNATURES

Two Detroit banks—the Peoples State and Peninsular State—are said to be contemplating adopting finger prints as a means of identification of depositors rather than having the latter sign their names. The banks are provided with a fine powder which is spread over the paper and in which the finger impression is made. The plan is to use the first three fingers of one hand. This system ought to prove quite efficacious in preventing fraud, as there are no two persons whose finger-tips are identically the same. There always are certain distinguishing characteristics which render identification easy. Then, again, one's signature is very apt to change in time. People who are sick very frequently send an agent to the bank to withdraw money, and in such cases the signature often is shaky and uncertain as a result of the illness. It has not been decided definitely whether to use the system universally or only in the case of illiterate persons. This plan was explained to the bankers at the Detroit convention. It ought to prove of practical value, especially in the case of people who are unable to write their names.

MONEY TRUST HEARINGS TO BE RESUMED

At the time the Pujo committee adjourned its hearings in New York City it generally was understood and circulated in the press that they would not again resume until the second week in November, which, of course, was taken to mean that the hearings were not to be used as a political asset but would reopen immediately after the election. Word now comes from New York that a deputy sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives, is in that city from Washington, armed with subpoenas which he is serving on the New York bankers. They are given to understand that they are to appear before the investigating committee on the subject of the money trust. This whole matter of the money trust inquiry was carefully handled at the Detroit convention of the American Bankers Association by George M. Reynolds of this city. He told of his own willingness to testify as to any material facts which did not injure the bank's customers, and so far as could be observed, he voiced the opinions of most of the bankers present on that occasion. The attorney for the inquiry, Mr. Untermeyer of New York, has returned from Europe a little earlier than was expected, and now is engaged in a governmental inquiry into a branch of the Standard Oil trust. The company immediately under investigation is the Walker-Pierce faction. President Samuel B. Bayne of the Seaboard National has been the star witness. It developed at the hearing that he was the president of a Texas company for eight years, owned but one share of stock and never attended any of the meetings of the directors, yet for the full eight years he drew a salary. It was President Bayne who is said to have paid Senator Joe Bailey the famous $5,000 fee for suggesting a name for the Texas company. If Mr. Untermeyer goes after the witnesses in the money trust investigation with the same vigor with which he went after President Bayne and kept after him, the public will take great interest in the revelations. It is not to be thought for a moment, however, that anything directly connected with banking has very much similarity with the business methods of the Standard Oil trust or its subsidiary companies. It remains to be seen whether or not the developments will prove of benefit in enabling congress to arrive at better banking and currency legislation, but it ought to be understood that bankers have nothing to conceal except those things, the revelation of which might be prejudicial to the interests of their customers.

OPENING OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The opening of the Panama Canal in 1913 is certain to bear an important influence on the commercial activity of the United States, and, indeed, of the whole world. The period which must elapse before the opening will witness great preparation to participate in the greatest trade movement in the world's history. There are one hundred and fifty millions of people in North America who will contribute in some manner to the commerce of the canal, and in addition there will be trade from all of the countries of the world. It is but fitting that the United States should be the leader in this important trade revival, and to this end an effort ought to be made to induce vessels to seek cargoes at our ports, and the best facilities should be afforded for their loading and unloading. The wonderful period of crop prosperity which the country has enjoyed, and which it no doubt will continue to enjoy as a result of the interest which is being manifested in agriculture, ought very materially to aid the United States to maintain its commercial supremacy.

GOVERNOR WILSON AND THE PURE FOOD LAW

Governor Wilson has strongly declared himself in favor of enforcing the pure food law. As might be expected, Colonel Roosevelt has given himself credit for any improvement there may have been in the matter of food control, notwithstanding the fact that he had very little to do with it and was reluctant to refer to it in his message when the subject came up in congress the fore part of his first administration. He now has allied himself with some of the faddists who advocate radical legislation along this line. What is needed is such a revision of the act as will render its meaning clear and provide means for carrying out its intent. Should Governor Wilson be elected to the presidency and succeed in cleaning up the agricultural department and in having adopted a law sufficiently stringent to protect the interests of the people, he will have rendered a signal service such as has been accomplished by none of his predecessors.

RETAINED, NOT "RETIRED."

Last week's CHICAGO BANKER said, in speaking of the St. Joseph, Mo., bank consolidation whereby the First National took over the Merchants, that "all the officers are retired." It was written "retained" but the proofreader had been to a picnic. Fortunately bankers are too sensible to be deceived by such a bull.

BANKERS' SPECIAL FOR PEORIA

The special train which carried bankers from Chicago and surrounding territory to the Peoria convention, left over the Rock Island from the La Salle Street Station promptly at noon on Tuesday. Warren Cowles, division passenger agent for the Rock Island at Peoria, was in charge of the train. There were 105 bankers on board. The train consisted of two dining cars, three Pullmans, including an observation car, parlor, buffet, library and baggage cars. A table d'hôte luncheon was served. All of Chicago's banks were well represented. Among those from this city were Messrs. Farrell and McKee of Fort Dearborn, Fenton and Hurst, National Bank of the Republic, Corneau of the Central Trust, Coln of the Colonial Trust, Washburn of the Continental, Wakefield and Schoenck of the Corn Exchange, Blum of the First National, Henschen of the State Bank, Hazelwood of the Union Trust, and Clearing House Examiner McDougal. C. N. Stevens of Evanston and C. B. Wright of Crystal Lake also were on the train. Col. J. S. Aisthorpe came up from Cairo to go with the Chicago crowd. Messrs. Thompson and Crawford boarded the special at La Salle and George Woodruff and party at Joliet.

TREASURER D. A. WYCKOFF REPORTS

Treasurer D. A. Wyckoff of Alton reported the state of the association's finances. There was received from Treasurer Lockwood $6,340.80, and $20,500 from the collection of dues, making a total of $26,840.80. Disbursements amounted to $14,805.53, leaving a balance on hand of $12,035.27.

talking about. In making our investigations in Kansas, we do not recognize letters of this kind. When a company submits letters, we write the author of the letter and ask him to report to us confidentially just what he knows about the company, and it often turns out that he knows very little or nothing about the company and sometimes we find that the letter has been forged.

We also have a great deal of trouble with those bankers and others who allow the use of their names as dummy-officer or director of the company, but who do not give the company any attention and know very little or nothing about the company's affairs, simply loaning their names as an officer or otherwise to add weight and prestige to the company and not having a cent invested in the company, their stock having been given to them for the use of their name. For the benefit of those of you who might be doing such a thing, I wish to call your attention to a recent decision by the New York Court of Appeals, which held that any officer or director who permitted his name to be used in connection with the promotion of a certain company and knew nothing of its affairs, and that company should chance to be mismanaged, that he could be held individually and personally responsible for any loss that might occur thereby. I was very much pleased with this decision, as I believe it will do a great deal toward cleaning up this class of companies and putting a stop to this practice.

The legitimate companies of our state rapidly are getting behind the law and complying with its provisions and assisting us in every way possible to enforce the law. The law in its operation not only keeps the illegitimate companies from robbing the investing public, but it keeps the money in the state where it can be secured by the legitimate companies for their use in developing their enterprises, whatever they may be. You can readily see that it is a very good thing for the legitimate company.

The enemies of the Blue Sky Law have criticized our law and say that it is not possible for a bank commissioner to judge all kinds of companies and tell whether or not they are good investments. I agree with the critics that it is not possible for a bank commissioner to judge them all. In Kansas, we do not attempt it. In the first place we do not attempt to say that when a company secures a license from this department it is a first-class investment and a sure thing. That is not the intent and purpose of the law, but the permit is a notice to the public that the proposition has been carefully investigated and that the results of that investigation led us to believe that the company would be, at least, handled honestly and upon a business basis with reasonable prospects of success, and that if the company does make anything, the stockholders will probably get it and not the promoters. With one of these permits, it is no trouble at all for a good, legitimate company to place its stock and finance itself in a very short time.

Further than this, we have the co-operation and assistance of the various state departments, such as the insurance department, as well as consulting engineers and experts at our state university, agricultural college, etc. For instance, when we get an application from an insurance company, we collect all the information possible regarding it, and then turn the matter over to the insurance department for further investigation and recommendations.

A company recently came to the department with what they termed a new electric battery, which they claimed would completely revolutionize the electrical world. They interested a number of our good citizens and demonstrated to one of our large railroads, who advised us that it looked like a marvelous thing to them. We sent the battery to the electrical experts of our state university and within thirty days they advised us that the battery was an absolute fake. Of course, the company was refused permission to do business in Kansas, and the last we heard of them they were in Arkansas selling their stock and were meeting with more or less success along that line.

We have also received a large number of insurance company applications. Among them was one which was selling what they termed an income certificate, which was in every sense of the word a stock certificate only that it did not carry voting power and in case of failure or liquidation shared in the assets only after all other claims were settled. This certificate provided for a six per cent guaranteed dividend to be paid out of the earnings of the company. The company, we found on investigation, had an income of some $40,000 from insurance written which was its only source of income, and its salary list alone amounted to over $60,000 per annum, so you can see where the holders of the income certificates would be. And yet this proposition was endorsed by a large number of good business men and bankers from various parts of the country.

A company recently came into the state and asked permission to sell a million dollars of stock in their company and the only asset their company had was a contract with a certain insurance company to write life insurance for it and this contract was subject to cancellation at any time by the insurance company.

We have received hundreds of inquiries from all over the United States and a very large number from your state, asking about all kinds of stocks and securities of various companies, some of which have been out of existence for a number of years. In fact, our correspondence became so heavy that we were obliged to discontinue making investigations of companies outside of the state, unless they were asked for by Kansas people, or the company was selling or wanted to sell stock in Kansas.

This law has already saved the people of this state more money than it takes to run our entire state government during the time that it has been in operation, and a large credit balance over. In fact, I can point out to you specific companies who were doing business in this state which have since proven themselves to be fakes, and prove to your satisfaction that this amount of money has been saved our people, let alone the hundreds of thousands of dollars that would have been taken out of our state had not the law been in effect. For instance, I have a company in mind, which, at the time this law went into effect, had thirty or forty agents in the state and were averaging from $150,000 to $200,000 per month from our state alone. This company after careful investigation was refused permission to do business in Kansas. A receiver has recently been appointed for the company and I doubt very much if the stockholders will get a single cent of their money back.

When a stock salesman approaches a Kansas investor, one of the first things the investor demands is to see his permit from the banking department. If he does not have the permit, the investor refuses to consider the matter at all. We are not troubled very much by companies trying to do business without a permit. At the time the law went into effect, every corporation and every bank in the state were furnished a copy of the law. We asked each of them promptly to advise us by wire if any person or company attempted to sell stock in their neighborhood who did not have a permit from the banking department. The matter was also published in all the country papers of the state. The department also has a force of bank examiners who make every town in the state and they closely are watching the administration of the law. When we receive advice that some one is selling stock in violation of the law, we immediately wire the county attorney of that county and have the party arrested at once. The law has become so thoroughly advertised in our state that it is almost impossible to sell any stock unless you have a permit from the banking department. The law provides penalties all the way from one hundred to ten thousand dollars fines and from two to ten years in the penitentiary for its violation.

The innocent investor might be compared to the fertile subsoil of the tropical regions. From it may be taken several crops a year, apparently without exhausting any of its infinite productiveness or confidence. And this is no disgrace to the investor. Take, for instance, the farmer, who is one of our best citizens. A large per cent of them know practically nothing about judging an investment and they are not supposed to. They know how to farm and make a success of it. That is their line of business, just the same as your line is banking, but they are not acquainted with the ways of the promoter. They, together with our other citizens, elect their state and county officers, part of whose duties it is to charter, supervise and authorize companies to do business in their state. They have a right to expect that when a company is authorized to do business in their state that it has been investigated and is all right, or it bankers, to see to it that such legislation is enacted and such steps taken as will absolutely protect them against the wiles of the dishonest stock salesman and promoter.

I believe that we in Kansas have taken an advance step in the interests of the people which will revolutionize the entire business world and eventually lead to the regulation and supervision of all corporations, in the same manner as banks are now regulated and supervised. And it is perfectly right that they should be.

I believe that your association at this convention should select a committee for the purpose of drawing up a suitable bill along these lines, and that your association should by resolution recommend the passage of such legislation and do everything within your power to follow the matter up and see that it is enacted into law. I know of nothing that your association can do which will be of more benefit to yourselves and to the citizens of your state than this.

It will require some work and attention to get the law through, as there are a very large number of promoters in your state and elsewhere who will do all they can to keep it from being enacted, but you can see to it that it is enacted, if you give it the proper attention.

would not have been authorized, and I believe that they are absolutely justified in this view of the matter. And I contend that it is a state's duty to provide for the regulation and close supervision of all companies and corporations doing business within its borders.

The promoter is one of the few characters in life who thrives on failures. His record is honeycombed with wreckage and failure and from each failure he emerges with plenty of money and erects a new company on the ruins of the former one, or perhaps in a new field, from which he makes more money than he did from the former enterprise. While the widows, orphans, and the poorer class of people, who form the investing public, and whose money he has taken by the millions, are denying themselves of the necessities of life, the promoter is all the time living like a millionaire and lavishly spending the money which he absolutely has stolen from them.

Our people must be protected along these lines, and it is our duty as American citizens and to our credit and benefit and interest as

Agriculture and the Problems of American Rural Life

PART I

In the early days when George Washington was active in public life, he saw the beginnings of a decline in agriculture. This situation so aroused him that he made an earnest and urgent plea for the preservation of the natural resources. To be sure Mr. Washington had no conception of the great Middle West, as we now know it, nor was it possible for him to have any adequate conception of the magnificent agricultural resources of the country over which he was president. It is equally true that living before the days of improved agricultural machinery, his vision was bounded by the limitations of primitive agriculture. He was personally familiar with New England and saw that the soil was easily impoverished where methods in vogue at that time made no provision for the maintenance of the natural soil fertility. Soon after the opening up of the Northwest Territory, a vast tide of population into the new country led to the neglect of his counsel and to postpone the day when competitive agriculture forced the abandonment of many of the early settlements.

The Land Grant Act

In the late fifties there was much general discussion of the agricultural problems. Here in Illinois, Jonathan B. Turner was one of the pioneers who moved in the interest of what is now embodied in the famous Land Grant Act, under the leadership of Senator Morrill of Vermont. In Michigan and portions of New England there was aroused a public sentiment in favor of improved agriculture and it is interesting to observe that a New England member of congress, later a senator, should identify himself with a measure which should bring its largest rewards to the South and the West. The movement establishing the Agricultural Colleges and later the Experiment Stations was a distinct effort to lay the foundations of agricultural science and to provide for such education in the application of the fundamental science as would preserve and develop our agriculture.

Development of the West

Notwithstanding the fact that this benefi-

The bank calls attention to the fact that it was incorporated in 1891 and is under the jurisdiction and supervision of the state. Deposits are well over a million. C. C. Craig is president; N. O. G. farmers to cheaper lands, and the development of the great West, still further served to postpone the evils arising from a haphazard farming. The rapid development in the Prairie States and the application to farming of improved machinery led to wonderful results while the country was new and highly productive. The rapid increase of the population from 1870 until the present day has made increasing demand upon the products of the farm until in this opening of the first quarter of the twentieth century we are again confronted with the seriousness of the problems that arise out of a threatened diminution in agricultural products as related to the rapidly developing population centered in our cities. The recent census of the United States shows very distinctly that the drift toward the cities has not ceased and there are economic reasons why these conditions will obtain in the future. On the other hand the decline in rural population has been marked by a certain discontent with country life, a certain state of mind among the rural population which do not themselves promise a better agriculture. The city population and the intelligent business interests are coming to realize that unless something can be done to develop the productive power of the impoverished farms and to maintain the fertility of the soil generally, America will be importing food stuffs within a reasonable time and find herself confronted with an increased cost of living and a decreased power of purchase from other nations.

Rural Antagonisms

During all these movements there has been something antagonistic in spirit, at least, between the town and the open country. Something of class prejudice has been developed between the producer of the raw material and the commercial interests as represented both in the manufacturer, the commercial agent, and the financial circles. Wall Street has become a hated word in the ears of the millions. In many cases this is without any intelligence but none the less effective. I remember very well here in Illinois the antagonism that grew out of the belief that the town lived at the expense of the country. It is not my purpose to discuss the cause of this alienation of one portion of the population from another, but to call attention to it for the one purpose only of suggesting that a better understanding between citizens operating in different lines of industry must unite us in a patriotic purpose to conserve and develop all our resources if we are to maintain this great country as a suitable home for a high minded, liberty loving, happy and progressive people.

Agricultural Agencies

For nearly a generation the agricultural colleges have been teaching their students the important and fundamental facts concerning the maintenance of soil fertility. The agricultural press has co-operated with the agricultural colleges to spread intelligence as to better methods of farming, better methods of living on the farm and the means of maintaining agricultural efficiency. The experiment stations have in large degree furnished data by which the ordinary farmer could measure his own experience and from which he could secure information as to the best methods of procedure. The department of agriculture at Washington, D. C., under the support of the federal government, has done a large amount of research and demonstration work for the purpose of improving agriculture and in recent years has interested itself, quite actively, in the betterment of agricultural conditions generally.

Country Life Commission

Three years ago the Country Life Commission, appointed by the president of the United States, made a comprehensive investigation of rural life conditions for the purpose of suggesting to the country at large the nature of the problems involved, with a possibility of opening a way to their solution. Since that time men having large interests at stake dependent upon agricultural prosperity for the development of their business, notably in such cases as James J. Hill of the Great Northern, have found it a matter of wise management to go beyond the mere point of encouraging settlers to locate by encouraging better methods in agriculture. Mr. Hill has put a large sum of money into demonstration experiments along the line of his railroad. We may recognize at once that there were commercial reasons underlying these investments, but we must not assume that he was lacking in patriotic motives, but had in view the social betterment of the population in that relatively new country. In addition to these movements there are other organizations having for their purpose the arousing and developing of public sentiment and an increase in agricultural products. As a result we have come to two conclusions: first, that agriculture must be made profitable, and second, that country life must be made comfortable and attractive. These two conclusions are but another form of the subject which I have been invited to present here this morning.

Unprofitable Agriculture

The assumption that all agriculture is profitable is not warranted by the facts. It is true that many farms in this country and in many portions of the country are in such a state of fertility that the annual returns are very satisfactory from the standpoint of investment. It is also true that in many other sections, and oftentimes on individual farms, the returns are far from satisfactory. Profitable agriculture, therefore, will not be reached until the entire agricultural region shall be brought into a state of profitable investment. This may involve the abandonment of some of our farms, the changing of the cultivation of others, the more intense farming in some areas and better methods in still others. The point which I have in mind and which I wish to emphasize is that agriculture as a national enterprise has not yet been comprehensively studied and put upon a business basis, such as characterizes our manufacturing and financial operations. The farmer is naturally independent. We have always looked upon his life as the typical free American life. This freedom has grown out of his isolation. He is the slowest factor to co-operate frequently and continuously with his neighbors. Nearly all city enterprises and all enterprises of the same general character have steadily moved toward economic co-operation.

Farm Accounting

The bankers of Illinois would not think of declaring their independence of the banking institutions of the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, but what is more to the point, all these banking institutions have recognized certain banking principles and methods as essential to their own integrity, safety and prosperity. From the very nature of the case the farmer seems to have operated independently. As a result his finished product is handed over to commercial interests and the complaint has been that his own returns have been out of proportion to the profits made upon these products after they have left the farm. The farmer feels that the agitation concerning the high cost of living is an indictment of somebody else and that he can not be justly charged with bringing it about. It is perfectly obvious that no statistics are available to prove that American agriculture is universally or even generally profitable. It could be easily demonstrated in small acres and thoroughly disputed on other small areas.

The cost of producing a bushel of oats or a bushel of corn is fairly well known in certain small areas where crops are reasonably staple, but it is only the truth to say that thousands of acres west of the Alleghenies are farmed every year without any intelligent other agencies it will require more than a generation to secure a satisfactory statement as to our farm conditions. Hitherto the banker has been satisfied if the farmer paid his notes, the merchant has been satisfied if he paid his bills; it is evident now that both parties are awakened to the importance of an annual statement of the farm as truly as to their own inventories and exhibits.

The problem remains, however, of bringing to the farmers a consciousness of the importance of farm accounting and of putting farm operations upon a satisfactory financial basis. Emphasis has recently been put upon other phases of farm life but I believe that the bankers will agree with me that a satisfactory financial statement that can be understood would do as much to produce a right attitude of the mind toward the farm as any other one thing that could be done. My personal experience in associating with the farmer is to the effect that very many of them are utterly unable to give an intelligent account of many farm transactions involving the question of profit and loss. So long as this condition remains farming can not meet the demands of either science or commerce.

Physical and Social Conditions

The third element in improving rural condition lies in the provision for physical comfort, for increased efficiency in farm and house labor, for improved sanitary conditions, for the development of such social institutions as will provide for wholesome, rational amusements, social organizations, and an effective rural school and church. I am not in a mood to criticize farmers or other people for doing the best they can under given circumstances. It is obvious that great improvement has been made in the American farm home. In many portions of the country an appreciation of the teachings of modern science and a growing belief in the importance of preventive measures have led people to see that properly ventilated homes and good water are cheaper than doctors and medicines.

Woman's Partnership

The experience of the American farm-wife is often a sad story. Farmers have not understood how many of these improvements could easily be brought within their reach. The departments of home economics in our agricultural colleges have joined hands with the departments of farm management and rural engineering in trying to present to the limited number of college students the possibilities of the farm homestead and to teach that the conservation of the wife's labor and strength is quite as important to the farm as the utilization of improved machinery and better live stock. She is a partner in the business. Her children are her special care, but the household welfare must occupy the most important place. Labor saving devices for women, sanitary methods of living, economic use of food materials, would solve as many farm problems and improve as many social needs as added acres or increased output. Education and applied science have done very much more for the city woman and her home than for the farmer's wife and her home. Public sentiment needs to be aroused as to the importance of the conditions under which the farmer's wife and children live and labor. It must not be expected that these children, knowledge on the part of the farmer as to the cost of producing the crop. If we are to have better agriculture and a permanently profitable agriculture we shall not reach the mark until the science of farm accounting has been brought within the comprehension of the average farmer and until he is willing to install a system of simple farm accounts that will enable him to know whether he is working for nothing and boarding himself or whether he is securing a dividend on his investments. Recently I saw in a church where a day was given to the study of the Rural Life Movement, a card bearing a statement that the average income of the farmers in that region was one hundred and fifty-three dollars annually. I failed to discover whether this was after allowing for interest charges and labor for the farm or whether it was the income to be placed against the value of his own labor. This may impress you as an extreme case, but I am confident that there are thousands of similar instances where farmers do not know the cost of producing crops nor have they estimated the value of the farm in its by-products. The statistics of the United States department of agriculture are oftentimes in this direction either defective or misleading. This method of farming operations has made it possible to impoverish the farms of the country unconsciously and at the same time to leave an unsatisfied state of mind with the farmer who is as truly a trustee in charge of the interests of others in farming as are the men in banking or any other business. Due regard must therefore be had to the preservation of the capital stock, which in the farm is land, live stock and implements. The agricultural colleges and experiment stations are making an effort to improve these conditions and unless their effort is supplemented by catching occasional glimpses of the better equipment of the city home representing less of wealth, will be content to return to a fruitful farm with a well appointed barn and not supplied with a well equipped kitchen. We have spent a large amount of energy on the farmer's problem to the almost total neglect of his wife and daughters. This has not been due on any unwillingness on the part of the farmer although in some cases they may have been unable to do as well as they knew, but in the majority of instances the condition is due to the fact that neither the dwellers in the city nor the citizens of the open country have appreciated the economic and social importance of the well equipped farm home. There has been great improvement in the last decade in many of these particulars, but the fact remains that many American farms today will demonstrate that the housing of the people, the location of the house, and the care of its surroundings, have received less attention and less labor than the provisions for the live stock and the grain.

The efficiency of labor has been a one-sided question. My experience as a farm hand in Central Illinois within thirty miles of where I now speak, as well as in Ohio, together with observation in substantial settlements, is that farmers have been reasonably careful about the efficiency of men and reasonably willing to invest money for improved machinery and live stock in order to increase the revenue of the farm. On the other hand the assumption has been that women's labor and women's equipment for household management were of secondary importance. It is to the everlasting credit of the American woman that she has done as well as she has under all the circumstances. As the years go by one great reason for moving to town on the part of the older people has been that they might enjoy comforts which they supposed were impossible on the farm. Modern life has demonstrated that that supposition is false. The same amount of money invested in the farm home will ordinarily produce as much comfort, as much efficiency, and as much satisfactory sanitation as can be commanded in the ordinary small city. I realize that there are questions of fact that need to be demonstrated and that when the rural community can be brought to see and understand its own possibilities, great improvement will be made for physical comfort and life itself made not only more efficient but more enjoyable.

Rural Amusements

Another false assumption has been that the town is the exclusive source of amusement and desirable social life. If this has been true, "the more is the pity." Modern education is coming to recognize the importance of the play period in younger life and the necessity of recreation and amusement for the older and maturer people. The lack of co-operation on the part of rural communities, together with the assumption that nothing was possible in the country, has been extremely unfortunate. In recent years rural conditions have greatly changed in this regard. Social centers are being developed and provision is being made for a considerable variety of wholesome and attractive amusement. It will probably always remain true that the most gifted and the most artistic performances will be in the largest centers where great crowds and large revenues are possible, but this by no means prevents the rural community from developing its own possibilities. The rural school needs adjustment to rural conditions; so, also, does the rural church. The Grange, the Farmer's Club, the Farmer's Institute and the Rural Ball Field may be adapted to the needs of a community quite as well as in a city organization. In the state of Wisconsin, much public service has been rendered through the activity of the university in providing circulating libraries, in stimulating social and literary organizations and in the provision for a better social life. It is true we shall never solve the country problem by city people but it is also true that our public institutions of learning ought to have the rural point of view. It is their duty to administer as truly to the needs of the country as to the needs of the city. This is not an impossible problem, but a neglected one. It is not too much to ask that the residents of our cities may have at least a correct view of these problems and be willing to co-operate in their solution. The welfare of the city for the past fifty years has depended in no small degree upon the quality of the young citizenship it has drawn from the rural districts. Certainly we can afford to recognize the obligation of the city toward the country and stimulate such activity as will maintain the rural community in its integrity and its ability to meet its own social, educational and religious needs. It is not necessary that we shall be personally interested in the matter of religion for us to understand and appreciate the fact that the rural church is a means of great social uplift and a guardian of the best interests of the community.

The whole country is now awake as to the importance of the rural school. In many localities reforms have set in that look to the education of the rural children in a way suited to rural life, and it is the belief of many educators that this will in no way cripple the efficiency of that portion of them who may eventually find their homes in the city.

UNION NATIONAL OF STREATOR

On July 1, 1912, the Union National Bank, of Streator, took possession of its new bank building, which was designed to afford every modern convenience in use by up-to-date banking institutions.

In taking possession of its new quarters, the bank enlarged its conveniences to accommodate the increase of business commensurate with its new equipment. This bank had its origin in 1870 as the Bank of Streator, and in 1874 was reorganized as a national bank under the name of The Union National Bank, since which time it has grown to its present position. The policy always has been conservative, adding from time to time all the reasonable and safe progressive ideas that go with good banking methods.

For banks with $100,000 capital, the Union National Bank, of Streator, stands first in Illinois, in view of the percentage of their surplus and profit accumulation in respect to their capital. This position on the roll of honor is one which cannot be bought; it must be earned, and reflects credit throughout the entire community.

The contract for the building was let to the Mosler Safe Company, Bank Department, Chicago, E. Jackson Casse, directing engineer, for the total erection and completion of the entire building and attending equipment. Mr. Casse had full charge of all parts of the work and personally superintended the sub-letting of all contracts, sparing no time or expense to fulfill all trust placed in him by the bank. With no restrictions placed upon him, he doubled his efforts to produce a result equal to the best work of this character in the country. This splendid new building has excited favorable comment from all who have seen it. The present quarters of the bank are in keeping with the progressive policies which always have characterized its management. L. H. Plumb is president; S. W. Plumb, vice-president; E. H. Bailey, cashier; W. C. Flick, assistant cashier.

MOLINE TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

Moline Trust and Savings is the oldest chartered savings bank in Rock Island county. It has a capital of $225,000 and surplus of $80,000. Deposits are $2,600,000. H. A. Ainsworth is president; George W. Wood and Edward Coryn are vice-presidents; O. F. Anderson is cashier and O. T. Bohman, assistant cashier. Mr. Anderson has been very active in association and group work. He is the retiring chairman of group one and has been elected on the executive council of that group for the ensuing year.

WYOMING BANK INCREASES CAPITAL

The First State Bank of Powell, Wyoming, has increased its capital from $10,000 to $25,000. In addition to the present officers, J. B. Arnold, president, and T. W. Marshall, cashier, Abbott Williams was elected vice-president and A. C. Sinclair assistant cashier. A number of local men have been added to the list of stockholders.

Illinois, introduced a resolution recommending that the Illinois Bankers Association approve such legislation in the state of Illinois as hereafter would require state supervision of all banks (except national). This resolution was not voted upon at the morning session, but a recess was taken until afternoon, at which time the motion was lost by a vote of 224 to 125.

The afternoon session was devoted to finance and banking. Addresses were made by Harrington Emerson of La Porte, Ind., who talked on business efficiency in relation to finance and industry; Will B. McIntyre of the Peoples National, Rock Island, whose subject was "Bumps," and J. N. Dolley, Kansas' famous bank commissioner, who told the bankers of the operation of the "Blue Sky" law in his state. Mr. Dolley's address will be found printed in full elsewhere in this number.

Wednesday afternoon delegates and visitors were treated to a river excursion on the palatial steamer "G. W. Hill." A buffet luncheon was served at six o'clock and was followed by informal entertainment.

Thursday Session

Thursday morning was an agricultural session. Dr. William O. Thompson, president Ohio State University, Columbus, talked on agriculture and the problems of rural life. Dr. Thompson's address will be printed in THE CHICAGO BANKER in three installments, one of which appears in this issue. Other addresses were by Prof. W. G. Eckhardt, consulting agriculturist, De Kalb county, a summary of whose talk will be found in this number; Charles A. Conant of New York, who delivered the same address that he did at the Detroit convention, and the Hon. Hugh S. Magill of Princeton, a member of the Illinois senate. A resumé of Mr. Magill's talk appears in this issue.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to good roads. Addresses were made by Jesse Taylor, editor "Better Roads," Jamestown, Ohio; S. E. Bradt, De Kalb, Ill., chairman of the good roads committee of the Illinois Bankers Association, and the Hon. Percival G. Rennick, internal revenue collector, Peoria. Judge S. B. Montgomery of Quincy reported as chairman of the executive council, which was followed by reports of the secretary, treasurer and committees.

George Woodruff, president of the First National at Joliet, told of the methods adopted in Europe for financing the farmers.

Thursday morning the ladies were taken for an automobile ride through the city, and were entertained at luncheon at the beautiful Peoria

George E. Keys, assistant cashier, Farmers National Bank, Springfield, Illinois, is one of the active executive officers of this growing banking institution, which is as high a tribute as the bank could possibly pay to Mr. Keys' ability as a banker and financier, and simply shows the measure of esteem in which he is held by the officers and directors of this bank. He is thirty-two years old and is a member of a family that has been prominent in business and social circles in Springfield for several generations, his father, Edward D. Keys, being one of the foremost bankers and financiers in central Illinois, and who was actively connected for several years with the various committees of the American Bankers Association.

being also a charter member of the Illinois Bankers Association. George E. Keys has been appointed by the U. S. circuit court as trustee and receiver for an important bankruptcy case, and from his experience in this kind of work has become proficient in making various satisfactory reports and settlements. He served as a member of the local entertainment committee of the Illinois Bankers Association which met in Springfield in 1911, and bankers well remember how excellently they were treated by him and the courtesies shown them. He is interested in public affairs and is ready to support any measure he considers will be of benefit to the community in which he lives. He is genial of manner and has made hosts of friends, among whom he is very popular. Mr. Keys carries on his work with an energy and care that insures his success and he has every reason to be proud of the position which he now holds.

He believes that the wheat and corn crops of Illinois can be doubled if the information possessed by the experiment stations is carried into practice. During the growing season his time is spent on the farms of De Kalb county. Five days in each week are used in going about from farm to farm and giving advice to their owners. On Saturday he attends to correspondence. Those who have special problems make it a point to come to the office on that day.

Meetings are held at various times, at which are discussed practical methods for improved farming. The speaker cited examples of common difficulties with which farmers are forced to contend, and told of their solution. The association is a clearing house for any problem which may present itself. The unselfish co-operation of the bankers and of the seven hundred farmers who have taken an active part in the De Kalb county work was commended by Mr. Eckhardt.

Hon. Hugh S. Magill, Jr., Addresses Convention

The Hon. Hugh S. Magill of Princeton, a member of the Illinois senate, delivered an interesting and practical talk on the conservation and development of our rural resources. He spoke of the interest which is being manifested by the banking fraternity in agricultural and vocational matters, and of the assistance which has been rendered the movement for soil conservation. Mr. Magill called attention to the fact that our food supply is not keeping pace with the increase in population, and gave statistics to prove his conten-

ELGIN BANK TO HAVE REMODELED QUARTERS

First National of Elgin will remodel its quarters. Arthur Rodman, president of the Bankers Engineering Company, with offices in the Monadnock Block, Chicago, has been engaged by the bank to look after this work. The present granite front will be discarded, and a new one of Bedford stone, twice the width of the old one, will be built. The interior of the building not only will be doubled in width but considerably lengthened. The front of the counter and the wainscoting will be of the most beautiful and expensive marble known,—Italian Pavanazzo. The lobby floor will be covered with gray Tennessee marble, and the decorations and furnishings will be in keeping with the balance of the improvements. One of the most striking features of the new quarters will be the directors' room, which will be done in the richest mahogany paneling, art glass windows and specially designed lighting fixtures, decoration and furniture. When this work is completed the First National will, without doubt, occupy one of the finest bank buildings in the Middle West. D. F. Barclay is president, W. L. Black, vice-president, A. C. Hawkins, cashier, and Neil Bosworth, assistant cashier. Capital stock is $200,000 and deposits are well over a million.

tion. The decrease in supply has been accompanied by a tremendous increase in value. The falling off in the supply was attributed to the large proportionate increase in our urban or consuming population, and a corresponding decrease in the rural or food producing population. In the last ten years our urban population has increased 34.8 per cent, while the rural population has increased but 11.2 per cent. Mr. Magill believes that it is possible to increase the production of our farms; that by the application of practical, scientific principles the fertility of the soil can be preserved and increased; that insects and diseases which destroy or greatly reduce the crops can be eradicated and that our farms can be made to produce on an average twice as much as they now are yielding. This subject is of vital interest, not only to the farmer, but to the entire public, as increased production naturally will be reflected in increased business activity and prosperity. The speaker told of the time and money which are being spent by business concerns in the matter of agricultural and educational campaigns, and of the good work which is being accomplished by our agricultural colleges and experiment stations. The demand for the men turned out by these colleges is far greater than the supply. Farmers' institutes are doing much to awaken interest in agriculture, establish higher ideals and teach more improved and scientific methods. The belief was expressed that the legislature will support any sane and carefully thought out plan for the conservation of our soil fertility, the eradication of diseases and the general promotion of country life progress. The national government has evinced a willingness to assist in the matter. Mr. Magill believes that what we need most is a unification of forces through a definite plan of organization that will reach down to the everyday work of the farmer; that we must get out of the general down to the concrete and specific, for this whole rural problem ultimately must be solved through the individual farmer on his own farm. The speaker emphasized the necessity for organization and co-operation and the combination of scientific knowledge with practical experience and applied directly by the farmers themselves. He advocated the formation of organizations in each county for the purpose of securing expert counsel on soil and crop conditions, for the promotion of better education, good roads and other matters pertaining to country life progress. He believes that these organizations should be encouraged by enabling legislation that will permit the counties to give them certain financial support. This will not force the movement on any county until there is a popular demand for it, and will permit people to take the initiative. Mr. Magill believes that every county farm in the state ought to be an agricultural experiment station on a broad scale, conducted under expert supervision in such a manner as to make it most productive, and as nearly as possible a model farm. To bring about the formation of these county organizations a voluntary central organization should be formed, composed of representatives of such associations as may be interested in promoting the movement, to formulate a systematic plan of action. Such a plan doubtless would provide for sending out one or more state organizers to lay the matter directly before the farmers and to secure the co-operation and support of the bankers, business men, educators, newspapers and local organizations of the county. In this way definite and practical results can be accomplished.

FARMERS NATIONAL OF PEKIN

Many bankers who attended the Illinois convention at Peoria this week found much pleasure in a trolley ride down to Pekin and an inspection of the fine building and vaults of the Farmers National of that city. The remodeling of the former quarters of this progressive bank and of some additional space which was secured, was completed last spring at a cost of $90,000. The Farmers National now occupies a bank building which would reflect creditably to any city much larger than Pekin. Organized in 1875 with a capital stock of $50,000, this institution has enjoyed $100,000 and surplus and undivided profits amount to close to $150,000. Deposits are $1,057,606.01. Among its former officers are Jonathan Merriam, former pension agent at Chicago, who was the first president; A. B. Hoblit, vice-president of the State National at Bloomington, formerly cashier; B. R. Hieronymous, president of the Illinois National at Springfield, also a cashier, and A. H. Purdie and C. H. Turner, now cashiers respectively of the German American National and Herget National of Pekin. The present officers are as follows: J. M. James, president; V. P. Turner and G. A. Steinmetz, vice-presidents; A. A. Sipfle, cashier, and J. M. Speers, assistant cashier. The directors are: John Alfs, John Fitzgerald, J. M. James, Frank F. Riese, Adam Saal, G. A. Steinmetz and V. P. Turner. The Farmers National enjoys the respect and confidence of all of its patrons and a reputation for stability which is the result of thirty-seven years of safe, conservative banking. The untiring devotion to duty, the efficient service, and the business acumen and good judgment of the men who have been at its head have placed this up-to-date bank in the foremost rank of the strong financial institutions of the state.

NATIONAL BANK OF MONMOUTH

National Bank of Monmouth is the oldest and largest bank in Warren county, having been organized in 1870. It also enjoys the distinction of having the largest capital and surplus of any national bank on the C. B. & O. Railway, outside of Chicago, to Omaha, Neb. Capital stock is $200,000, and surplus and profits, all earned, are over $200,000. Deposits are well over a million. W. C. Tubbs is president; F. A. Martin and O. S. French are vice-presidents; D. E. Gayer is cashier and J. A. Tubbs and L. A. Norman are assistant cashiers. Mr. Tubbs, the president, has been in the banking business in Warren county for thirty-eight years, and has been with the National Bank of Monmouth for thirteen years. He has been very prominent in association and group work. The bank has built up a large clientele on farm loan business.

CITIZENS NATIONAL OF DECATUR

Citizens National of Decatur has capital and surplus of over $300,000. J. A. Corbett is president; John Crocker, vice-president; George S. Connard, cashier, and Milton Johnson, Jr., assistant cashier. Deposits are well over a million.

Association, pointed out to the bankers that poor roads not only affect the cost of marketing crops, which is borne by the consumer as well as the producer, but they retard our social, religious and educational progress and development and cause the inhabitants of the farms to flock cityward. He believes that the increase in land values in this state resulting from improved roads would be in excess of three hundred millions. The state of Illinois, while ranking first in the matter of agricultural production is twenty-fourth as regards road improvement.

He said:

"The office of public roads of Washington, D. C., has estimated that from 15 to 20 per cent of our road mileage carries from 85 to 90 per cent of the traffic. Our present country road mileage in this state is approximately 95,000 miles. Twenty per cent would be 19,000 miles.

"Nineteen thousand miles of improved highways would give us improved roads crossing the state from east to west every six miles, also roads crossing the state from north to south every six miles, that is, we would have an improved road running east and west and one north and south through each township.

"Nineteen thousand miles of highways, built as suggested, would reach about 70,000 quarter sections, or over 86,400 farms of 129 acres each, which is the average size of the farms in Illinois. In other words, 86,400 of the 251,872 farmers in this state, over 30 per cent, would have an improved highway running past their doors, while an additional 45 per cent of the farmers would live on a road only one mile distant from this improved highway. These highways crossing each township in both directions would of necessity reach practically every village and hamlet in the state and connect with all of the through highways of adjoining states.

"Of the 19,000 miles, 3,000 miles already are improved with macadam, brick or concrete; thus leaving 16,000 miles of the main highways still unimproved. With the above in view, it would appear that our estimates can fairly be based on improving the 16,000 miles of main roads."

The material to be used in the construction of the roads will be determined by the traffic. Mr. Bradt cited statistics indicating the proportion of automobile to other traffic, showing that it rapidly is increasing. He believes that our main roads should be constructed of a material which will meet the requirements of the changing conditions of traffic, including the motor driven, and which will demand a minimum cost of maintenance; that on our trunk roads only hard-surfaced materials, such as brick or concrete, should be used. It was estimated that with the assistance of prison labor in preparing road material, and the co-operation of the railroads, concrete roads, 14 to 16 feet wide, can be constructed at a cost of $9,000 per mile. The belief was expressed that these roads should be built at the combined expense of the federal government, the state and the county, but that until such time as funds are available from the federal government this work should be financed one-half by the state and one-half by the county.

At the present time four millions per year are being raised in the townships for road work. Mr. Bradt suggests that the state add a like amount to this sum. In this way the one hundred and forty-four millions necessary could be raised in eighteen years, and approximately nine hundred miles of roads could be improved annually. The additional tax necessary to enable the state to raise the four millions annually would be inconsequential. A man owning property worth $1,500 would have to pay but 70 cents per annum, and a farmer owning an average sized farm would have to pay but $3.61. Mr. Bradt said:

INTERIOR VIEW, FARMERS NATIONAL, PEKIN, ILLINOIS

"Possibly eighteen years is too long to wait for these roads. If the citizens of this state prefer to build this 16,000 miles of road in nine years instead of eighteen years, it can be done by issuing $8,000,000 in bonds annually for a period of nine years, each annual issue of bonds to run for a term of nine years. Thus, beginning with the end of the ninth year, an issue of $8,000,000 in bonds would be paid off and the entire amount of indebtedness would be canceled at the close of the eighteenth year. These bonds should be issued one-half by the county and one-half by the state, and there would be outstanding an average of $36,000,000 for a period of eighteen years; and the average interest at 4 per cent per annum would be $1,440,000 and would require an additional assessment of 5 per cent per $100 of assessed valuation during this period to meet the interest. This would increase the average farmer's assessment $1.30 per year over and above the $3.60 which would be required to meet the state assessment of $4,000,000.

"It is evident to all that the maturity of bonds issued for road construction should come well within the life of the road."

"All large enterprises must start slowly, and if the sum of $8,000,000, which has been suggested, were made available by July 1, 1913, it would be an impossibility to organize the work so as to spend it judiciously within the following year. Therefore, let our legislature add a sufficient amount to the automobile tax to make the total amount available from the state, on July 1, 1913, $1,000,000, and on July 1, 1914, $2,000,000. Then apportion the same to the respective counties of the state on some equitable basis with the provision that these counties shall add an equal amount. We should then have on this basis available for the beginning of a state-wide system of highways the sum of $2,000,000 in 1913, and $4,000,000 in 1914, which would be as fast as the road building organization could be developed to utilize the money economically.

"Later, as our system of main highways, built under state supervision, shall increase, let so much of this fund as is necessary be used for maintenance. It is estimated that it will increase at the rate of about 15 per cent per annum and this undoubtedly will keep pace with our road building, and, with properly constructed roads, will furnish an ample maintenance fund for many years to come."

In Favor of State Supervision

As a subsequent development Chicago's private bankers, notwithstanding the action of the convention at Peoria, have declared themselves in favor of state supervision. It is their intention to bring a bill before the next legislature providing for supervision and inspection by the state. The newly formed Chicago-Illinois Private Bankers Association is back of the move, and they claim that they have a following of seventy-five of the 125 private banks in Chicago, and that they can pledge the support of all but two of that number. A statement has been issued in which is expressed the desire to go on record as favoring supervision. It is signed by Albert Haentze, Milwaukee Avenue Savings Bank, president of the association; P. A. Hines, Archer Avenue Savings, vice-president; Benjamin J. Glaser of the Glaser Savings Bank, secretary; M. C. Schiff of Schiff & Co., treasurer; Joseph Stein, banking house of Joseph Stein & Co.; John B. Devoney, International Savings Bank and O. Paisley, Edgewater Bank. The recommendations made by the Dawes report were endorsed, and dissatisfaction expressed at the result of the vote at Peoria.

MAINLY ABOUT BANKS AND BANKERS

invitation signed by J. B. Forgan for the Chicago Clearing House Committee. The ladies especially were delighted and at once reverted to the fine souvenirs distributed at the last Chicago convention in 1908.

THE "boys" representing the Chicago banks, led by J. M. Hurst, were working on a plan to invite the convention. Mr. Fenton favored it and came near including it in his response to the address of welcome.

WHEN Mr. Blum heard of all this, matters took proper shape quickly under his masterful hand and the 1913-Phillips convention will be held in Chicago. The talk of headquarters hotel vibrated between the La Salle and the Congress, with the Sherman a close third.

WHEN the Chicago Tribune interviewed the "big banks" of Chicago it found them "all for supervision." Really the private bankers say they favor it. Supervision wasn't defeated at Peoria—only "voted down."

ON the matter of supervision some of the Chicago bankers said the representatives of their banks at Peoria refrained from voting on the resolution because of a desire on the part of the banks to remain neutral. Those who voted against it, it was said, did so because their banks did not regard the resolution as proper association business.

IN spite of this attitude every banker questioned said he favored state supervision of private banks as a general principle, but the qualification was added that such legislation should have proper regard for the rights of the individual.

SOME of the Chicago banks were represented by the bond departments, which do a fine business with the privates and did not wish to conclude pleasant relations.

THE new committee on administration of the Illinois Bankers Association will have to meet the Crampton "resignation" situation as one of its very first acts. Crampton asked for an increase in salary. It was referred to the committee to report for confirmation its action at the mid-year meeting of the council.

NOW comes the "Petard." Crampton is said to have written the Turner resolution which was adopted by the council as a slap at some of the active committees such as those on agriculture, good roads, etc. Under the resolution no committee can spend money without authority of council. The Turner resolution is binding upon the administration committee, as it is upon any other. Thus the "slap" is returned to its source.

THE administration committee does not have the power to increase salaries without approval of the council. So there you are. CASHIER.

Indiana Conven- tion

The sixteenth annual convention of the Indiana Bankers Association will be held in the auditorium of the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, October 16th and 17th. There will be four sessions. Wednesday afternoon will be devoted to agricultural and good roads subjects. The trust company section will hold its session the second day at 2 o'clock. Some of the most prominent and interesting speakers now before the public will make addresses. A good line of entertainment has been provided by the local bankers. The ladies especially are invited to attend the convention and to participate in Hoosier hospitality.

SAYS FINANCIAL CENTER IS SHIFTING

John A. Lynch, president of the National Bank of the Republic, says that the financial center of the United States is shifting toward the west; that a few years ago the investing class of the country was confined almost entirely to the New England States; that a large proportion of the enterprises were dependent on eastern capital. He considers the change which has taken place during the past few years as nothing short of marvelous.

DOES NOT ANTICIPATE ANY DIFFI- CULTY IN FINANCING CROP MOVEMENT

Ralph Van Vechten, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial National, says: "Money continues in good demand with rates at from $5\frac{1}{2}$ to 6 per cent. While business is increasing in volume, we do not anticipate any difficulty in financing the crop movement, which is well under way in the Southwest. The banks of that section have taken care of this movement without discomfort. In the Northwest there has been some delay in harvesting and threshing, due to the wet weather, and the movement of grain is backward. As a result the banks of that section are in a comfortable position and stand ready to take care of the active movement of grain when it begins. To illustrate this situation I need only mention the fact that a Minneapolis banker recently told me that he had lent several million dollars on call, which had not thus far been required in the crop movement. The improved weather conditions, of course, will now hasten harvesting and threshing operations, but even so, the movement of grain in the Northwest will be slow, due to the shortage of cars. The banks of that section are in a stronger position than ever before, and will handle the movement with little or no assistance from their eastern correspondents."

NEW CHICAGO BANK

Officers and directors of the Central Manufacturing District Bank announce the opening of that institution at 1112 West 35th Street, from nine to five o'clock, on Monday, October 7th.

Two Who Have Joined the Procession

LEXINGTON, ILLINOIS

ARCH B. DAVIS
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

Mr. Hiser, who is a bank cashier, had the fine compliment paid him at Peoria, of being elected treasurer of the Illinois Bankers Association by acclamation. The convention elects direct now. Formerly the council did it and there was much campaigning. He has joined the up-to-date procession.

Mr. Davis is the youngest "record holder" among the state secretaries. From being in debt the Kentucky association now is a bond holder and has 97 per cent of paid-up memberships. Six of the eleven groups show 100 per cent efficiency. He's in the procession also.

CITY SUPERVISION OF PRIVATE BANKS

The Chicago city council, being fortified by an opinion from the corporation counsel, on Monday night passed an order on the legal department of the city to draw up at once an ordinance placing all private banks in the city of Chicago under city supervision. It is intended that they shall be licensed in regular form as are other small business concerns, and that a board of examiners shall be appointed by the city to make frequent inspection of their account books. This is a new departure in the bank supervision field, and if successful may lead to prompt action in other cities working under charter privileges similar to those of Chicago. The Chicago Private Bankers Association, numbering eighty members, has gone on record as favoring supervision, and probably will work with the city in bringing about the preparation and adoption of an ordinance adequate to the situation.

Word comes from down state that the private bankers of Illinois, under the leadership of H. G. Henry of Camp Point, will take active steps to further the reform. Mr. Henry was secretary of the private bankers' committee of the Illinois State Bankers Association last year and this year was made chairman of that committee. He is reported to be a believer in supervision and to have the active co-operation of President John D. Phillips of the Green Valley Bank, who this year is president of the Illinois Bankers Association. Most of the leaders in the movement who voted down the supervision resolution at Peoria went upon record as favoring bank supervision, if brought about in some other manner than by a majority vote of the state association. There now is a splendid opportunity for the Chicago Private Bankers Association to make good its formal declaration in favor of supervision, and for the down-state private bankers who are leaders among their kind to make good the promises so frequently heard on the floor of the convention hall at Peoria.

B. J. Stumm, cashier of the Yorkville (Ill.) National, visited Chicago on Wednesday. Mr. Stumm says that crops in the Fox River Valley are excellent; that bank deposits are stable and there is a fair demand for money.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

F. W. ELLSWORTH, publicity manager of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, has been offered and has accepted the chairmanship of the publicity committee of the American Institute of Banking. He will have associated with him some of the best equipped bank men in the country, whose names will be announced later.

PRESIDENT B. W. MOSER of the Institute has started in a way to justify the claims made by his friends during the campaign. We feel like "going on the bond" of the publicity committee for effectual service.

SUNSET Magazine has a fine tribute to Jacob Furth, chairman of the board of the Seattle National, and city railway magnate of the first order. His rise from emigrant ranks in 1857 is an interesting story. To-day he is the "main man" in Seattle banking, financial and civic matters.

EX-PRESIDENT B. F. HARRIS was in Chicago bright and early Monday morning having a few good-natured interviews with some of the bankers who did not "quite" come across on supervision matters. Every thing was good natured, but Mr. Harris still is a firm believer in supervision, also in the certainty that the next legislature will pass a bill of this description.

CONSIDERABLE talk was heard at Peoria on the part of the private bankers concerning certain alleged reflections cast upon the Illinois private bankers by Mr. Harris in his talks before the several state conventions where he appeared on the program. A careful examination of his printed addresses on these occasions develops the fact that in some states he did not mention supervision at all, and in most cases used only two paragraphs out of his prepared address, which contained in all a total of five paragraphs on the subject. Really Mr. Harris gave no offense in any of his addresses outside of the state. What he had to say was said direct in his home addresses, or sent out over his signature to every private banker in the state.

SHOULD those who are opposed to state supervision care to become informed as to how the press regards the subject, there has been printed a little pamphlet for the Illinois Bankers Association containing extracts from the leading papers in this state. This pamphlet will leave little doubt on this important issue. Copies can be had for the asking.

RUMOR has it that the very last thing Secretary Crampton did at Peoria was to deposit his letter of resignation in President John D. Phillips' box at the Jefferson. At the time of this writing it had not been withdrawn. There are many who fear that application for this withdrawal will be made.

PRESIDENT PHILLIPS was somewhat annoyed, so the story goes, in that the resignation contained a sort of a threat to send out a letter to the 1,200 members of the state association telling them "What is What" in association matters. It is not conceivable that the administration committee of the Illinois Bankers Association is to be coerced by such a threat. Neither is it conceivable that President Phillips should allow a secretary, resigned or otherwise, to send out an official communication containing matter derogatory to present or past officials of the association and to that extent injurious to its interests.

PRESIDENT GEORGE WOODRUFF of the First National at Joliet made another of his big hits at the Peoria convention in his talk on farm financing. To enable those who heard him speak to follow the line of argument more clearly and with good recollection, Mr. Woodruff handed out a card not larger than a U. S. postal card, containing a complete outline of his address. This card contained references to agricultural credits in Europe and divided the topic into subdivisions on mortgage banks and credit banks, which again were subdivided. He treated also of European money rates and told of the need for mortgage banks in America. His address will be found printed elsewhere in this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER, and is worth careful reading and preservation.

DOWN East the banking journals, or "vice-presidents," as they generally call themselves, do not dwell together in such complete harmony as do those of kindred professions (but without titles) in the West.

THE CHICAGO BANKER is in receipt of a nice little letter from Clifford DePuy, editor and publisher of the Northwestern Banker at Des Moines, requesting additional copies of its issue of September 14th. His letter concludes: "Permit us to congratulate you on this fine number, as it is a credit to yourself and banking journalism."

IN some parts of the country publishers of banking newspapers rarely speak to each other, and never well of each other's publications. They compel their friends among the banks to listen to their tales of woe at times when they might well be speaking kindly of their neighbors. There remain those in this line of business who believe that they are attracting favorable attention to their own publications when deriding, misrepresenting and condemning rival papers. Fortunately for the great West, Mr. DePuy does not belong to that category.

TWO more state bankers associations are to embark in the publication of a bulletin or house organ newspaper. They are to have a Pennsylvania Banker in Pennsylvania and a North Dakota Banker in North Dakota. In the latter case Secretary Macfadden is to be editor, and it may be expected that the paper will be a clean and wholesome sheet far above the average.

SECRETARY W. B. HARRISON of the Oklahoma bankers has sent out a circular to his membership asking them to remit for a copy of the proceedings of the second annual conference of the bankers' committees on agricultural education and development. This valuable document is furnished at bare cost of paper and printing, and is the best text-book on farm improvement matters which has come to our attention.

HENRY M. BALDWIN, treasurer of the New York Chapter A. I. B., has sent out a book of announcements for 1912-13, giving the full schedule of the evening courses of study. It shows that the educational department of the Institute is becoming more comprehensive year by year.

THE lectures provided for this season's entertainment and instruction by the New York Chapter cover in all sixteen practical subjects. Monday evenings will be devoted to lectures on English and Tuesday evenings to practical banking; special lectures are provided for Wednesday and on Thursday nights business conditions, investments, credits, commercial law and other subjects will be taken up.

GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY of New York has had printed "The Bank and the Newspaper," which is the subject of the address delivered by Fred W. Ellsworth before the state secretaries section at the Detroit convention. This is one of the clearest state-

Clever Philosophy of Kentucky Bankers President

Dante tells us in his Inferno, that upon coming to the junction of two streams, he was permitted by his Guide to drink of the waters of one stream, and immediately the mistakes and misdeeds of his past life were forgotten; and then he was told by the Guide to drink of the waters of the other stream; when, in panoramic review, he could see all of his successes and good deeds.

When, one year ago, you exalted me to this position as your president, I told you that I knew of no special fitness possessed by me, but that I would surround myself with excellent advisers, and, in that way, attempt to perform in an acceptable way my duties.

Your lovable and unsurpassable secretary, together with your genial and astute attorney, assisted by the members of the various committees, have so watched me and guarded my every act as to render me oblivious, as in the case of Dante, to any misdeeds of the past year. If they were made, they have been forgotten, and this report will only chronicle our good deeds and successes.

In preparing this, I have read with much interest the address of each of my illustrious predecessors, and note with much pleasure the truthful declaration of each, that the close of his administration leaves the association in the most prosperous condition of its history. Therefore, I feel that I am not deserving of adverse criticism when I declare unto you that this, in many respects, has been the most eventful year in the history of our association.

The group system, founded by Mr. Downing and perfected by Messrs. Utterback and Kehoe, has so thoroughly fulfilled the prophecies of these gentlemen, as to justify me in the claim that to-day, in point of membership, this association stands with the leaders among all state bankers' associations in the United States. Ninety-seven per cent of the banks of this state are now members of this association, and when you remember that with us a bank that has not paid its dues for the current year is regarded as a non-member, we confidently believe this percentage easily places us in the lead of all associations.

Our present membership is 593, being a gain of 16 over the splendid showing of last year. That the eighteen banks, which have so persistently refused our many invitations, have succeeded in keeping our membership from being one hundred per cent, has been a source of severe disappointment to me, and my only consolation is that my successor may be able, one year hence, to declare that his administration closes with the largest membership in the history of the association.

Each of the group meetings which I attended was a decided success; but I wish to especially mention the one at Olympia Springs, with a possible word of warning. This was a joint meeting of three groups; the place was ideal, and the program would have been a credit to a state convention; but the attendance not much larger than where only a single group met. This causes me to question the wisdom of any permanent arrangement of this character. There are many attractive features connected with such a meet-

J. K. Waller of Morganfield, at Louisville convention, comments on 97% efficiency of the association in membership and credits the group system and the secretary with results. Approves county organization also. Treasury shows fine business management. Wants a "Blue Sky" law. Praises secretary Fred B. Davis for his high qualities as executive ing, and I am convinced that an occasional joint meeting of groups is wise; but, if carried too far, they may soon reach such dimensions as to rival, and affect the attendance of, our annual state convention.

The success of the group system causes me to aver the wisdom of county associations. I do not advise the parent society to mother such, as she does the group organizations; but I know, from personal experience in my own county, the great good to the individual bank resulting from such an association. It might be well for a committee to be appointed by the incoming president to formulate some plan for the encouragement of each county to form a local association.

J. K. WALLER
Morganfield
President Kentucky Bankers Association

The most serious trouble apparent to me, regarding our membership, is the delay exercised by many banks in renewing their membership each year. Our constitution provides that "all dues shall be paid November 1st of each year, and any member failing to pay his dues for three months shall be considered as having withdrawn from the association."

Our treasurer, in obedience to this law, on November 1st of each year makes draft on each member for dues for the ensuing year. If these drafts were promptly paid, our secretary would be relieved of much labor. For instance, on the first day of next month your treasurer will make draft upon each of the 593 banks now constituting our membership. If they are promptly paid, your officers, the ensuing year, will only have the 18 non-members to look after, and, in my judgment, a solid membership would result in less than sixty days. Having just passed through probably the most strenuous campaign for members in the history of the association, I trust you will pardon me for urging you to aid the incoming administration in this matter by paying dues promptly.

Financial Condition

For the past three years the association has been self-sustaining. At that time a deficit of about one thousand dollars stared us in the face. The report of your efficient treasurer will show, for the year now ending, after paying all obligations of every nature, a surplus from the year's work of $1,400, which, added to the splendid balance as indicated in his last annual report, gives a total surplus of $3,500, showing earnings, over and above all expenses for the three years, of $4,500. I have called your attention to this splendid financial showing with some trepidation. I am fearful some may conclude a reduction in dues wise; but am sure none will so think when I tell you this magnificent showing is in no sense due to the membership fees collected, but rather to your indefatigable secretary, who labors both day and night for the welfare of this association. The contracts, made at his instance by your executive committee with the adding machine, time lock, burglary insurance and fidelity bond companies, have resulted, not only in a saving of thousands of dollars to the members of the association, but also have increased the income of the association more than two thousand dollars per annum; clearly showing that a cancellation of these contracts would place us where we were three years ago, causing us to close each year with a deficit. And we cannot tell when cancellations may come.

Your "special committee on the president's address," at our last annual convention, made four recommendations, each of which has been complied with, as will be shown more elaborately in the report of the executive committee. This report provided: First, "That immediately after adjournment of the convention, the executive committee proceed to incorporate the association under the laws of Kentucky." The convention adjourned on October 25th, and on November 1st of the same year the "Kentucky Bankers Association" was incorporated under the laws of Kentucky. Second, "That the incoming president appoint a committee to revise the present constitution and report to the next annual convention." This committee was appointed, and the results of its labors will be submitted at this convention for your consideration and adoption. Third, "That $1,000 be and it is hereby appropriated for the purpose of establishing a protective bureau or reward fund, and all, or such part of the said fund as the executive committee shall determine, shall be invested in interest bearing security." This has been carefully done.

Fourth, "That the committee heretofore appointed to recommend a remedy for the losses attendant upon the handling of collections be discharged, and the executive committee be and it is hereby appointed a special committee to recommend a remedy and report at the next annual convention." I regret to state that the executive committee has been unable to devise a satisfactory means of relief. This is a problem of much importance, and seems to be one too intricate for solution at the hands of this association. It has received the attention, not only of the executive committee, but also of a special committee, with no satisfactory result. I therefore suggest that it be referred to the secretary and general counsel, with instructions that the situation must be relieved.

State Taxes

In spite of my drink at Dante's river, I must chronicle one serious disappointment: our failure to secure justice at the hands of the state board of assessments and valuations. Accompanied by our counsel, together with a special committee, your officials appeared before this board during the month of June, and urged a further reduction of state valuations on banking capital. As you well know, this board had made a tentative assessment, based upon a valuation of eighty cents upon capital, surplus and undivided profits. We asked for a lower valuation, one of sixty cents.

I have no desire to mince words in expressing my condemnation of this board, to each of whom I mailed an invitation to be present on this occasion, in its refusal to seriously consider the unanswerable arguments so logically presented by Messrs. Helm, Ford, Rice and Marshall. I am sure our case was prejudged, and while a most cordial reception and a most patient hearing was given, I am firmly of the opinion that it simply was a courtesy extended and nothing more. A synopsis of the points upon which our demand was made was incorporated in a letter of June 18th by our counsel, a copy of which was mailed to each of you. I trust you have not mislaid this letter, as I now suggest it should be used as a campaign document with your stockholders. Read it to them and talk it to them, and let's show to this board and its successors that more than thirty thousand stockholders feel this unjust discrimination to be an outrage.

Protective Bureau and Reward Fund

This feature was inaugurated by your executive committee in December, 1910, and seems to have resulted in a protection to our banks that is effective. Its wisdom is evidenced by the fact that soon after its introduction, evidently before it became known to that class of citizens known as professional crooks, an effort was made to defraud one of our members. The offender, through the efforts of this association, now languishes behind prison bars; a warning so vivid and so real to wrongdoers that the present year has passed without a complaint of this character.

Legislation Enacted

During the recent session of the legislature, many bills of interest to this association and prepared by our committee on banking jurisprudence and information, were considered, only one of which became a law. The provisions of the act to establish a "Department of Banking" are so well known to you that comment by me is unnecessary. I will, however, state that this association contended to the last for the bi-partisan feature, and feels regret that it was eliminated. Yet the bill is reasonably satisfactory, and should result in much good. The appointees, although of one political faith, are men of unquestioned character and ability, and the banks of the state should feel safe in their hands.

Legislation Needed

The several bills offered by this association to the recent legislature should be pushed to an enactment. They are of much value to the banking interests of the state, and now, with the elimination of the bankers bill, our entire strength and influence should be placed behind these bills. My attention has been called to a law in Kansas known as the "Blue Sky Law." It was passed through the influence and at the instance of the bankers of that state, and has resulted in driving out of the state conscienceless agents, selling worthless stocks in wildcat companies. This is a form of scoundrelism, pauperizing our citizens, against which there is no law. The purchase of such stocks not only results in loss to those purchasing, but is a distinct hurt to the banks of the state, in that their deposits are greatly depleted.

In claiming for this administration success, I covet none of the glory for myself; it is largely due to each of you, the individual member, who has responded so promptly and so generously to my every appeal for aid. No more loyal membership can be found in any organization, and it affords me much pleasure to thus publicly acknowledge my debt of gratitude. To me, this has been a year fraught with much genuine pleasure, one never to be forgot; and I have felt, that for me, the time of my presidency was opportune. Had I been surrounded by assistants and advisers with ability no greater than mine, this success could not have been attained. But I found the executive committee composed of men of true worth, saturated with love for this association, and presided over by that prince of gentlemen, Major Jno. H. Leathers, my friend of long standing. He promised, early in the year, that success should perch upon our banner, and has worked assiduously to this end.

The committee on banking jurisprudence and information, with Judge Jno. Stites as chairman, by reason of the recent legislature has had a busy time, as will be shown by its report. Its work has been ably done, and to each member thereof I extend my heartfelt thanks. I found the group offices ably manned, as evidenced by the friendly rivalry existing between the various groups, resulting in six groups reporting a solid membership.

I found in the secretary's office a young man of handsome personal appearance, concerning whom so many complimentary remarks have been deservedly made by my predecessors that naught remains for me to say. His record was before me, and I expected much. He has never disappointed me, and I am now firmly of the opinion that this association might dispense with its president, its executive committee, its treasurer, its attorney, and keep only its secretary, and all would be well. For, to him, above all others, is due the splendid success of this administration.

Trust Company Service in New York City

This company, with ample capital, large resources, and an efficient, and well-systematized organization, which dates back to 1864, has the ability and disposition to give good trust company service.

Our various departments, including banking, foreign exchange, bond, trust, transfer, reorganization and collection, are well equipped with modern facilities for transacting business promptly and economically.

For these reasons we feel justified in cordially inviting the New York accounts of banks and trust companies.

George Woodruff on Farm Financing, Peoria Convention

Agricultural credit in Europe is divided into two general subdivisions; first, mortgage credit, and second, personal credit. The institutions belonging to the first subdivision are of two classes, the first of which is best typified by the Credit Foncier de France and the second by the Landschaften of Germany. The institutions belonging to the second subdivision are of three classes, the first of which is best typified by any of the ordinary credit banks, the second by the Raiffeisen and Schulze-Delitzsch banks, and the third by the Credit Agricole of France.

There are, of course, in Europe, numerous agricultural banks having characteristics somewhat different from those of the above mentioned institutions, but in the main the institutions included in the above outline constitute the real basis of agricultural credit organizations in Europe and all other agricultural banks are very largely patterned after them.

The Credit Foncier de France, in addition to certain activities that are not strictly connected with agriculture, loans money on farms for long periods of time on an amortization basis. The chief advantage to the farmer is in the fact that he is allowed to pay off his loan by making small semi-annual payments, will never have to renew the mortgage which will continue to run until the semi-annual payments have cleared the farm of debt, will never be compelled to pay any renewal commissions, will never have to go to the expense of bringing down his proof of title, or having it examined every few years as under our American system, and in addition will be forever relieved of any anxiety lest he fail to meet the mortgage when due and consequently lose the farm.

The Credit Foncier holds these mortgages as collateral for its debenture bonds which it sells to the public and from the proceeds of which it obtains the funds to advance to the farmers. The Credit Foncier, while under the supervision of the government, is nevertheless a privately owned joint stock company and pays regular dividends on its capital stock.

President of the new farmers bank, at Joliet, tells what he learned on his special investigation trip to Europe. A difficult and intricate subject clearly and effectively stated in a brief but valuable paper

The Landschaft banks of Germany loan money to farmers on much the same basis as that employed by the Credit Foncier of France, except that they do not make a practice of paying a farmer cash for his mortgage. They simply exchange their debenture bonds with the farmer for his mortgage and the farmer then sells the bonds himself. The Landschaften are under the supervision of the government and are strictly co-operative organizations involving in many instances the unlimited liability of the members and not being operated for a profit or paying dividends. These are the salient features of the two types of mortgage banks in operation in Europe.

Let us turn now to the agricultural credit banks. The ordinary form of credit bank is operated on much the same general plan as the ordinary commercial bank in America. It loans to farmers for fairly short terms on the same general conditions as in our country. These banks are privately owned joint stock institutions and would doubtless be able to finance the farmer for his needs were it not for the fact that the European banking methods have led to the present existence of but a comparatively small number of banks. These banks are usually large institutions extending over a considerable territory and are not small independent community banks as in the United States.

The Raiffeisen and Schulze-Delitzsch banks are small community institutions organized on the co-operative plan and not operated for profits. The Raiffeisen banks operate more particularly in the country and are purely co-operative, while the Schulze-Delitzsch banks operate more particularly in urban communities and are a somewhat modified form of the purely co-operative type. These banks oftentimes have behind them the unlimited liability of all of their members and they accept deposits, allowing interest thereon, and loan the money to their members for fairly short periods of time. Each one of the co-operatively owned local banks usually belongs to a co-operatively owned central association which exercises a control over the entire organization, acting as a sort of clearing house and central bank.

The Credit Agricole of France consists of a large number of co-operatively owned local banks which are affiliated with regional banks to whom the government advances certain sums of money without interest. The regional banks, which are co-operative in character, lend this free money to the local banks at a low rate and they in turn loan to the farmer. These banks are not operated for the purpose of earning dividends; are in many cases safeguarded by the unlimited liability of their members, and furnish the best European illustration of state aided agricultural credit.

In discussing the possible adaptation to American usage of the various types of European agricultural credit, a mistake has frequently been made by bankers and writers in the United States in their discussions of this subject. This error concerns the rate of interest which is paid by the farmer in Europe and which has led many American farmers to believe that in order to get three per cent money it is only necessary to adopt some European system of land credit. This is a mistaken idea, as the very best rate on agricultural loans that can be hoped for in America for some years to come will range between four and one-half per cent and six per cent, and as a matter of fact such a rate would not be out of line with the customary rates in Europe. This mistaken impression as to European interest rates has been brought about by the publication of three so-called European examples of low rates, the first being the three per cent bonds of the Credit Foncier of France, the second being the three and one-half per cent debentures of the Landschaften of Germany, and the third referring to the three and one-half per cent rate which is charged in some parts of France by the Credit Agricole.

The Credit Foncier three per cent rate is due to the fact that the bonds carry with them a lottery feature by which each bond-holder has a chance to win a prize consisting of a large sum of money, but the cost of these prizes increases the actual cost of the bonds to the Credit Foncier from three per cent up to about four per cent and the money is then loaned to the farmer at four and three-tenths per cent. Therefore, the farmer does not get three per cent money, as is often-times stated.

The Landschaften three and one-half per cent rate costs the farmer considerably more owing to the fact that the Landschaften do not pay the farmer in cash but merely exchange their debentures for his mortgage and he is then compelled to sell the three and one-half per cent debentures below par. The money consequently costs him considerably more than three and one-half per cent.

GEORGE WOODRUFF
Joliet, Illinois

The Credit Agricole really loans money to the farmer at three and one-half per cent, but this is due to a government subsidy and would be looked upon as abnormal from the standpoint of Americans. The government has compelled the Bank of France to furnish it a large sum of money without interest to be used for the advancement of agriculture, and, as outlined in the above brief explanation of the Credit Agricole, the government loans this money to the branches or regional banks free of interest. These regional banks loan to local banks at three per cent and in some parts of France the local banks loan to the farmer at three and one-half per cent. This system is deplored by many leading bankers in France as tending to develop a false idea of the value of credit and is liable to discontinuation some time in the future. Furthermore, some of the individual banks of the Credit Agricole system occasionally exhaust all of the money that has been allotted to them by the government and in order to continue the extension of credit they are compelled to re-discount farmers' notes with the Bank of France, and as they are loaning to the farmer at three and one-half per cent and sometimes re-discounting with the Bank of France at a higher rate, it follows that the more business they do under such conditions the larger amount of money they lose and this is an unreasonable and unsatisfactory foundation for any system of banking. However, the system of the Credit Agricole should be discussed in America not so much from the standpoint of its defects in France as from the standpoint of the advisability of the American government furnishing a subsidy to the farmer.

In view of the above facts, it is realized by those who have studied the subject on the ground in Europe that the advantages to be brought to the American farmer will consist of the ability to get plenty of money at all times on terms of the greatest possible convenience and at fair and reasonable, but not abnormally low, rates.

In America some system of mortgage banks is badly needed in order that the present haphazard, unsatisfactory and wasteful methods may be done away with. The establishment of mortgage banks will make it possible for the investor to purchase a much higher grade mortgage security than he at present buys from his local real estate agent, for the security which he will buy in the future will be a bond readily salable at any time, guaranteed by the mortgage company, and based upon a large number of mortgages.

The establishment of mortgage banks will also make it possible for the farmer to know that he always has an institution ready to advance him money without delay on the long time amortization principle and that he will get as good a rate of interest as anybody else, will never be compelled to pay renewal commissions or fees for the bringing down of his abstract or the many legal charges that are now made in connection with frequent renewals.

The advantage of mortgage banks over our present inconvenient, expensive and antiquated system is already recognized in the United States and the question is being asked as to whether we are to adopt the joint stock type of bank illustrated by the Credit Foncier or the co-operative type illustrated by the Land-schaften. This is a question that every banker and every farmer should carefully study during the coming months, but after a thorough understanding of the various advantages and disadvantages of both systems, together with a careful consideration of the habits and characteristics of the American people, it is probable that the Credit Foncier type will eventually prevail.

It will then be necessary to decide as to the manner in which these banks are to operate and this is a subject for the careful consideration of all bankers and financiers.

It may be possible that mortgage banks will spring up at random under such various existing state laws as may make it possible for them to operate. This will, of course, lead to lack of uniformity and a more or less unsatisfactory condition that in the end will give place to consolidations or some more uniform system.

Then it may be possible that a strong mortgage bank will be organized in each state where the demand is greatest and that each one of these organizations will extend its influence throughout its own state, and then perhaps later on there will be established a large mortgage bank which will have the powers of a holding company and through these powers obtain a controlling interest in each of the state banks, they becoming subsidiaries of the large parent concern. This large parent concern would then perhaps issue all of the debenture bonds and the state banks would lend the money to the farmers. This plan would give uniformity to the system and would doubtless create a very strong organization.

It might also be possible that the American people would prefer to keep away from a centralized organization and would prefer to follow out the plan of our present national banking law by passing a national mortgage bank act which would allow the establishment of national mortgage banks on very much the same lines as are now laid down for the establishment of our national banks. In this way, there would be created in each community one or more mortgage banks, operating on the lines of the Credit Foncier and under the control and examination of the United States government, to whom local real estate owners could go for loans and local investors could apply for investments.

These suggested plans, together with many others which will doubtless be proposed, should interest the American banker and command his best and most careful thought and study.

In America the need for the establishment of agricultural personal credit banks has been occupying the attention of bankers, farmers, and public men for the past few months, and here again the members of the Illinois Bankers Association would do well to expend careful thought and study.

We already have an organization of ordinary joint stock credit banks such as has never been seen before in any country in the world. Instead of the comparatively few more or less centralized banking institutions doing business in the various European countries, we have in America some 27,000 independent, locally owned community banks, and the question naturally suggests itself whether this great number of local community banks existing in America do not take the place of the European systems of small community banks co-operatively owned. While in the United States we do not have, generally speaking, the small co-operative community bank as in Germany, nevertheless our laws are so liberal as to allow any company of farmers or agriculturists, who are so inclined and who can put up a moderate amount of capital stock, to organize a bank that will accept deposits and make loans on just as advantageous terms as are made by the co-operative banks of Europe. It may perhaps suggest itself that our American banks, scattered as they are throughout the small agricultural centers of the country, are more in line with American customs, American usages, and American needs than the co-operative banks of Germany with their unlimited liability feature and their dependence for success upon the co-operative spirit of the Germanic nature.

The co-operative banks of Europe enjoy one advantage which is not enjoyed by the American banks. This consists of a central banking

By C. C. Burford

The 1912 convention of the Illinois Bankers Association, with its 900 delegates and visitors, made a deep impression on all who were fortunate enough to have attended the meeting. While all were not united on the question of bank supervision, yet there was a most thorough uniting of minds on the great questions of soil fertility, crop abundance, good roads, better conditions of rural life and vocational education. Seldom has a state convention enjoyed a better program than was given at Peoria and there was an abundance of points on which to unite outside of the question of bank supervision.

That Illinois bankers under the guidance of President Harris have made a distinct step forward is universally believed by all bankers. It is truly a great work which succeeding President Phillips assumes and the bankers of the state believe that the latter will follow the conservation policies of the former.

Abundance of crops in all parts of the state was conceded by the bankers at Peoria and there was an air of prosperity about the convention which spoke well for the optimistic feeling now obtaining all over the country and which is undismayed by the political affairs of the nation. That the country is in a highly prosperous condition was the universal idea advanced at the convention, and the question now before the bankers of the state is not how to maintain prosperity so much as how to better enjoy life in the smaller cities and towns and in the country. In the solving of the problem of comfort of living the many conservation ideas discussed at the convention will have a large part.

Peoria a Great Convention City

Peoria is rapidly becoming one of the most important convention cities of the Middle West. Between the date of the Illinois bankers' convention and the opening of 1913 there are seventy conventions, large and small, and of all varieties imaginable, to be held in that hustling business city. A large number of conventions for 1913 are already booked and the boosters of Peoria have even slated some for 1914. With an abundance of hotels and cafés and with the best of railroad and inter-urban facilities the city of Peoria can easily become one of the best known convention points in the country.

The National Implement and Vehicle Show, held immediately at the close of the Illinois Bankers Association convention, is an event of nation-wide importance and rivals in many respects a state fair. The amount of money spent in a city like Peoria by convention visitors is no small part of the prosperity of that growing community.

Death of Elgin Banker

D. F. Barclay, president of the First National of Elgin, and prominent in the business life of that city for fifty years, died Tuesday, October 1st. Mr. Barclay came to Elgin as a runaway boy from Scotland and worked at the trade of a tinsmith when he first came to America. Later he became a leader in the manufacture of dairy supplies.

He had served the city of Elgin as a member of the city council, member of the water commission, president of the school board and as mayor. He headed the movement which worked out a system of sewers for the city and was active in planning modern school buildings.

Business Prosperity at Freeport

Banking and commercial conditions in Northern Illinois are reported to be excellent according to advices received from Freeport. The only worry now is that there will not be enough cars to handle the corn crop this fall. Business conditions are summarized there as follows:

"Recent reports from shippers in almost every section of the country give one the idea that the only famine we will have is one of freight cars rather than of produce. The conditions in the harvest fields of our great grain sections this year have demanded more labor than they could get, and that condition has not existed for several seasons. Wages are at the top notch and there is plenty of work. Factories are working full force and many of them over-time. And the farmer still buys automobiles.

"Among local merchants business has been good this summer and each month has shown an improvement over the corresponding month one year ago. Local merchants are optimistic and the autumn displays in show windows include a great variety of high-class goods which will sell well."

William G. Edens at Peoria

That William G. Edens of the Central Trust of Chicago, and personally known to two-thirds of the bankers of the entire United States, has made a good hit with the people who have known him well for many years is evidenced by the following breezy remarks from the Peoria Star, published while the great Illinois Bankers Association was gathered in convention in that city.

"If there be anybody in this world that possesses the love and affection of this community it is Billie Edens. He has devoted his life to the uplift. First he reformed the postoffice, then he took up banking, now he is working in the interest of good roads. Whatever Billie undertakes he carries to a successful issue, and we rejoice to see him burgeon and expand and blossom, so that all his measures bear fruit. It is a great thing for a man thus unselfishly to sacrifice himself to the cause, and while keeping his toes turned toward Zion, keeps one hand on the neck of his fellow man, while he applies his toe vigorously to the seat of the pants of the unbelievers."

First of Peoria a Beauty

Scores of visitors at the Illinois bankers' convention made the round of the banks, and they were impressed by the metropolitan atmosphere of the Peoria financial institutions. All of the banks in that city are well appointed and the "hosts" of the convention city were "delighted" to show visiting bankers about.

The First National and the Savings Bank of Peoria, allied institutions, were especially appreciated by the visitors, as these new institutions are now housed in one of the most beautiful and complete banking rooms in the Central West, or in the entire nation for that matter. The appointments of the room for the comfort of officers, employees, customers and visitors and for the security of the books and cash were noted by the convention visitors. Cashier William E. Stone and the other officers of the bank took plenty of time in showing the out-of-town bankers about and manifested genuine pleasure in so doing.

Kansas Brokers at Peoria Convention

J. L. Pettyjohn, head of the brokerage firm of J. L. Pettyjohn and Company of Olathe, Kansas, was an interested visitor at the Peoria convention. Mr. Pettyjohn, accompanied by his son, was the guest of G. F. Carson, his representative in Peoria. During the convention Mr. Pettyjohn entertained twenty bankers who were among his customers and with whom he had had business relations at a luncheon at the Crève Cœur Club. The Kansas broker has been in business in his home city for many years and has built up a large and lucrative business. A large mortgage business is transacted by his firm. He enjoyed the convention very much. Mr. Pettyjohn is active in democratic circles in Kansas, having been for thirty years a member of the democratic central committee.

Illinois Notes

The State National of Bloomington and the Urbana Banking Company of Urbana have installed electric clocks in front of their banking houses which have chimes indicating the hours, half-hours, quarter hours and three-quarter hours.

Bank burglars made an unsuccessful attempt to blow off the door of the safe in the bank at Hooppole, a small village twenty-eight miles south of Sterling. So much noise was made that the entire village was aroused and the burglars escaped without booty. The front of the bank building was wrecked. Robert R. Ward, vice-president of the Benton State Bank of Benton and a regular attendant at the conventions of the Illinois Bankers Association, visited en route home at the University of Illinois where he was formerly a student and where he was active in athletic matters. Mr. Ward has served the association as vice-president.

Henry H. Harris, president of the First National of Champaign and a former president of the Illinois Bankers Association, was at the Peoria convention and thereby extended his record of attending all of the conventions of the association without missing a gathering. Few bankers in the state are better known or more widely respected than is Mr. Harris.

Bankers interested in the sound doctrine of educating the farm boys and girls for life on the farm will read with pleasure of the series meetings to be held in each of the counties of the nineteenth Illinois congressional district, having for their object an educational campaign for rural children. The meetings, under the charge of the county superintendents of schools, will be held in Macon, Moultrie, Coles, Douglas, Shelby, Piatt, DeWitt and Champaign counties.

Bankers and business men of Decatur are rejoicing over the new locomotive works which the Wabash railroad will erect in that city at a cost of $750,000. With this new addition to the Wabash shops in Decatur the road will employ in that city one thousand men.

The three national banks of Henderson county, on the extreme western side of the state, report deposits of $1,194,188 and the private banks of the county almost as much. As there are no towns of large size in the county the bank showing is very creditable.

L. L. Emmerson, president of the Third National of Mount Vernon, was chosen grand warden of the Illinois Knights Templar at their recent conclave held in Peoria.

organization to which the individual banks can turn in time of need, and the ultimate success of each of the great European co-operative systems has been due to no little extent to the fact that the individual banks were each connected with one of the great co-operative central banks. If in America we can eventually work out a satisfactory form of national reserve organization, the small country bank in the little agricultural community will be able to command for its local agricultural interests, through re-discount with the central reserve associations, equal credit facilities with those of any other industry in any other section of the country, and through the privilege of bank acceptances it would be able to follow the example of the European co-operative banks and would turn the farmers' notes into prime mercantile paper, good in the international discount markets of the world.

The bankers of Illinois, together with the bankers of all other sections of the United States, will do well to study this great question of agricultural credit which concerns so directly the financing of the "back to the soil" movement which in its turn is fundamental and concerns vitally the future prosperity of America.

BUILDING OWNED BY THE BANK

MILWAUKEE

WISCONSIN

The Vanderbilt cup speed events in Milwaukee during the past week have overshadowed everything else of business or social importance and the smell of gasoline and the roaring of open exhausts has crept into the business mechanism of the best regulated banks and offices. Few officers or employees of Milwaukee banks who could secure a half day's escape from duty failed to witness at least one of the events, although the representation of out-of-town bankers was not as large as preliminary reports gave promise. The Milwaukee Bankers Club, through its entertainment committee, headed by President Oliver C. Fuller of the Wisconsin Trust Company, extended all courtesies to the visiting bankers, although no set program of entertainment was followed.

Re-elect Officers

The annual meeting of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road in Milwaukee this week resulted in the re-election of all the officers and only one change in the directorship. Samuel McRoberts of New York was chosen to fill the vacancy on the board left by the death last winter of Major F. S. Bond who served the company as a director for more than a quarter of a century. All the directors were present with the exception of Donald Geddes and John A. Stewart of New York. Those who attended were Roswell Miller, William Rockefeller, P. A. Rockefeller, Walter P. Bliss, Charles W. Harkness, and John D. Ryan, New York; J. Ogden Armour, Stanley Field, and A. J. Earling, Chicago, and L. J. Petit, Milwaukee. A total of 1,785,000 shares of stock were represented out of the entire outstanding 2,326,000, the largest amount ever voted at a meeting of the road. Following the meeting L. J. Petit, president of the Wisconsin National Bank, and also a director of the road, entertained several of the officials at a luncheon at the Gargoyle. The guests included President A. J. Earling, William Rockefeller, George R. Peck, W. H. Dodsworth and David Green.

Bankers Attend Dodge County Fair

The traveling contingent of the Milwaukee Bankers Club was called on again this week to shake the dust of Milwaukee from their feet for the brief interval of a day, visiting the Dodge county fair at Beaver Dam with 100 other members of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association in a special train over the Milwaukee road. The banks were represented as follows: W. L. Cheney, Second Ward Savings; William M. Post, National Exchange; E. H. Williams, Marine National; E. A. Reddeman, Germania National; Walter Kasten, Wisconsin National, and E. J. Hughes, First National. Secretary George D. Bartlett of the W. B. A. chaperoned the party. The special left Milwaukee at 7:30 Wednesday morning, returning at 10 o'clock the same night. Stops were made at Hartford and Mayville.

Milwaukee Notes

The county treasurer has advertised for sealed bids on 220 Milwaukee County Home for Dependent Children bonds, bearing 4½ per cent interest. Bids will be received to October 8, 1912.

Frederick Layton, financier and pioneer Milwaukee business man, was elected first vice-president of the Milwaukee County Pioneers Association at the annual meeting this week. Mr. Layton relinquished the last of his active business interests last year when he resigned from the directorship of the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul road.

Mortimer I. Stevens, editor and publisher of the Wisconsin Banker, and expert advertising authority, is making a collection of advertising literature issued by leading banks of the United States, covering their various departments, to assist him in the preparation of articles on bank publicity.

WASHINGTON BANKERS INTERESTED IN AGRICULTURE AND GOOD ROADS

W. L. Clark, auditor of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, formerly connected with the old Commercial National of Chicago, writes to say that the interest of Washington bankers in agricultural development and education, and the subject of good roads, is very lively and such as likely is to bring good returns to the state.

John A. McElroy has retired from membership in the firm of Farson, Son & Co., New York and Chicago.

Resumé of Private Banking Situation in Illinois

Springfield, Ill., October 5th.—At the very hour Asher Cox was organizing his three hundred bankers at Peoria, last week, into the Country Private Bankers Association of Illinois, the village of Blue Mound was in the throes of a financial catastrophe. The Bank of Blue Mound had closed its doors in the face of depositors holding claims of $190,000. J. A. Brown, one of the proprietors, was reputed to be a "borrower" of $110,000, and Charles F. Crow, the other partner, had "gone West for his health."

The J. W. Brown & Co. bank was a private concern and was owned and managed by J. W. Brown and Chas. F. Crow, the latter having been connected with the bank about four years. Members of the firm will turn over all the real estate and personal property to the creditors of the bank.

The assets of J. W. Brown are as follows: 600 acres of land in Christian county valued at $80,000, mortgaged for $30,000; 680 acres of land in Stoddard county, Mo., valued at $15,000, unincumbered; equity in tract of land in Texas valued at $8,500; 320 acres in Minnesota valued at $10,000, mortgaged for $3,500; residence in Blue Mound, $5,000; vacant lots in Blue Mound, $1,500; bank building, $4,000; personal property in Christian county, $5,000.

Mr. Brown's total assets are estimated at $103,000, a conservative estimate. C. F. Crow's assets are placed at $25,000. In addition to the above schedule, J. A. Brown has put his home in at $5,000.

The failure of this bank is a hard blow to private bank advocates and to Blue Mound and vicinity and affects the business interest more or less of everyone in the community. The most sensible view of the matter is for creditors to await with patience for an agreement which, it is claimed, will make them financially whole again. The "run" lasted a few days only, or, until the cash ran out.

J. A. McClure, who was cashier of the failed Bank of Blue Mound, is trying to organize a $50,000 state bank and has had much success. He says, "The days of the private bank are over in Blue Mound."

George W. Glos, cashier of the Elgin City Banking Company, who returned this morning from the annual convention of the Illinois Bankers Association which is being held at Peoria, was disappointed, according to the Elgin Courier, over the defeat of the movement for state inspection of private banks. He was accompanied home by Ben Getzelman, cashier of the Bank of Algonquin.

"It is impossible to have too many safeguards around a bank, be it national, state or private institution," asserted Bosworth of the First National Bank, to the same paper. "Patrons of both the state and national banks are properly protected by federal and state supervision. It is almost impossible for them to fail under present conditions, and it is seldom that one hears of bank failures nowadays."

The Springfield Journal says of the negative supervision vote at Peoria that: "Besides, the rapidity with which private banks are coming in voluntarily under the law would seem to indicate that very shortly legislation of the kind sought will not be needed. In other words, that the problem will work itself out on the lines which the people desire. At least the bankers have stood off and let it alone. Nevertheless, if the legislature is impressed with the need for such legislation, doubtless it will be had at the next regular session."

On the same subject the Decatur Review said: "There is now a cheering prospect that depositors in the Brown bank will fare pretty well in the end; it may be that the worst that will happen to them is to be put to inconvenience and delay. Nevertheless, the story points to the need of a statute that will provide independent inspection for all banks. It is not recalled that any good reason has been advanced why we should not have this."

The Herald of the same city said: "Arguments against such supervision seldom have much weight. There are private bankers who are the souls of integrity, who, if misfortune comes, are relieved of the slightest suspicion of wrong-doing, as is the Blue Mound firm. There are others unfortunately of a different stamp whose 'blue sky' and 'wildcat' methods have been made familiar to the public. A check on these financiers should be an aid to the honest banker. The business of both should be supervised."

Down at Galesburg the Mail said: "Now that the Illinois bankers themselves have defeated the proposal to ask the state legislature to enact laws looking to the supervision of private banks, it remains for the state legislature to take the initiative if such supervision is to be enacted in a law. The state of Kansas now has supervision of private banks which it is said even the private bankers themselves would not now dispense with. The law there has worked well in driving the bogus bankers and the swindlers out of that state. Such a law in this state would tend to protect an innocent lot of investors in Fulton county recently swindled by the Boy Banker Butler of Chicago."

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, Oct. 3d.—An excellent demand for credits, from both city and country, is reported by local bankers. September proved the most satisfactory month in years, viewed from the point of profits and loss. Banks were able to use every cent of their available funds, and rates were satisfactory for all classes of loans. The volume of borrowers permitted of selection, making business safe as well as profitable. Offerings of commercial paper have been liberal, with the East figuring heavily in the offering. St. Louis firms, regular customers, have been taken good care of, and in all cases given preference, with a slight shading toward the minor end of the interest range. The South has been a heavy borrower, especially Texas, and the past week has developed a marked awakening in Arkansas. While the cotton crop in the latter state was somewhat late, the movement this year is unusually early. Advices from Arkansas are to the effect that the cotton there will be moved and marketed this year sooner than the average, owing to the position of planters, facilities for financing, and the prevailing prices both in this country and Europe. Currency shipments have been in heavy volume, and are near the meridian of the movement at this time. Several of the larger banks, making a specialty of crop financing, state that their shipments this season will well surpass those of a year ago. The general crop situation in the Southwest continues most hopeful. Prospects for corn are magnificent in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Even in the districts affected by the spring floods, corn is doing splendidly, and the output will far exceed expectations. These prospects are stimulating country merchants into greater activity than has been noted in a decade. This is shown by sales to date with leading wholesale and jobbing concerns in the Washington Avenue district. Since the middle of August the city has been thronged with buyers from the territory tributary to St. Louis, and their bills have indicated a disposition to accumulation, the hand to mouth policy of the past four years having been completely discarded. Clearings are holding up in excellent shape, though the total for September fell about $1,000,000 under the same month in 1911. Discount rates are firm in the range between 5½ and 6 per cent.

Huttig on Banking Reforms

Charles H. Huttig, president of the Third National and of the American Bankers Association, announces that the association is planning to urge upon congress the necessity of legislation in the form of amendments to the federal banking laws. These changes, he says, are needed at once and can be made independently of the general currency reform plan, as recommended by the National Monetary Commission. "For instance," said Mr. Huttig, "there is no good reason why nationals should not make loans on real estate, especially if such loans are limited to a reasonable portion of the bank's capital and surplus. Framers of the original law doubtless believed real estate loans would not liquidate themselves as readily as loans on consumable wealth. Experience of bankers in periods of stringent money indicates that good first mortgages on real estate are negotiable and salable to investors at such times and have the element of convertibility so much desired. Land is the basis of all wealth. Another provision of the commissioner's plan which could be acted upon independently is that which provides for the decrease in the amount of cash reserves on the time deposits that have long maturing dates. Carrying of large reserves against deposits of this class is a useless storage of cash in banks' vaults.

Need to Stir Representatives

Representatives in congress must be impressed with the actual demand and need for this legislation. The policy of the American Bankers Association for the next year will be to take up actively the work of currency reform and keep at it until the desired laws are enacted. Needless to say, the most important thing is to secure more elasticity and flexibility in the volume of our money and credits. This matter has long been agitated but no congressional results have thus far been obtained. The average citizen does not appreciate that our present monetary system is one of the greatest causes of trouble in times of greatest prosperity. In times of great commercial activity and high prices, credits, represented by bank deposits and loans, and which rest on the volume of money in the country for their support, become too much expanded in their relation to their foundation-money. The conservative banker limits his courage in loaning of bank funds, and this very conservatism in times of credit expansion may act as one of the principal factors in bringing about trouble. If we had a good monetary system that would enable solvent banks to at all times convert their assets into cash or available credits, you would not have money panics. Any good system will, of course, provide for automatic contraction as well as expansion of bank credits. Laws that will put the banker in a position to meet the commercial and crop movement demands of the country will be one that will benefit every man, woman and child directly or indirectly and will not necessarily increase the profits of the banker, but will put him in a position to at all times serve his customers and community to the extent that prudent banking will permit."

Enormous Texas Production

Colonel W. W. Dexter of Houston, Texas, editor of the Texas Bankers Journal, who was in St. Louis this week, estimates that Texas this year will have products worth $900,000,000, exclusive of railroad earnings. He says that the corn yield will be 200,000,000 bushels, and the value of all agricultural products will approximate $600,000,000. The value of the oil, lumber, coal and iron production in 1912 will be $300,000,000. According to Colonel Dexter the Lone Star state is facing one of the most prosperous seasons in its history. Farmers, he says, have money, which they are spending, and will spend, both for commodities and in improvement and betterment of their farms. Practically all crops of the state have been successful, and while cotton is still to be heard from finally, there is little doubt that the yield of that staple will be well up to recent estimates.

Plan to Encourage Saving

B. W. Moser of the St. Louis Union Trust Company, who is president of the American Institute of Banking, says that the institute is about to enter upon a campaign to encourage the "saving habit" among wage earners and employees of small salaries throughout the United States. Mr. Moser has been in correspondence with other officers of the organization on the proposed plan. "In almost every country the native inhabitants have what may be called a national saving habit," said Mr. Moser. "In the United States, however, we are lacking in this particular. Americans have been reared in a country of plenty, and hence the necessity of economy and saving is not impressed as is the case of less favored countries abroad. We are producing wealth so fast in

Bank Stocks Strong

Shares in St. Louis banks and trust companies during the past month or six weeks have developed marked strength under an excellent investment inquiry. With the exception of National Bank of Commerce, the entire list shows firmness, and in numerous instances, fair gains have been made. Among the strong stocks are Lafayette Bank, Third National, Mechanics-American National, St. Louis Union Trust, Bankers Trust and Title Guaranty Trust.

Missouri-Lincoln Reorganization

Entirely disregarding the suit filed in the circuit court to have a receiver appointed for the Missouri-Lincoln Trust Company and its assets liquidated, the stockholders of that institution are going ahead with the reorganization plans. At the recent meeting the stockholders, by a vote of 3,105 to 201, decided to increase the capital stock from $500,000 to $1,000,000. The additional $500,000 will be offered to the present stockholders at par. It is not likely that any change in the present directory will be made before the annual meeting in January. The suit for a receivership was filed by two stockholders owning 250 shares of stock.

New Trust Company Project

W. E. Howett, president of the Howett Manufacturing Company, announces that preliminary plans have been completed for a new trust company, to be located somewhere in the real estate zone, and which will cater especially to the real estate fraternity. Mr. Howett does not disclose particulars, however, and says he is not ready to tell what the capital will be nor the names of the organizers or prospective officers.

Mercantile in Land Deal

The Mercantile Trust Company is just completing purchases of land for the right of way for the transmission line of the Mississippi River Power Company in St. Louis county. Some weeks ago the company announced that the purchase had been made for the right of way from the Missouri river through Florissant to the St. Charles Rock Road. Since that time considerably more of the necessary property has been acquired.

American Credit Indemnity

A special meeting of the directory of the American Credit Indemnity Company was held this week to consider an offer of $200 per share for the capital stock by a New York indemnity concern. No definite action was taken, but a committee was appointed to further negotiate with the New York concern. Officers of the American Credit say its affairs are in excellent shape, and acceptance of the eastern offer is by no means certain.

CO-OPERATIVE FARM CREDIT DANGERS

Washington, October 2d, 1912.—A warning to the American people that the great benefits of co-operative credit may be turned into a national calamity if speculation is not guarded against by wisely considered legislation and strict government supervision has been sent by Ambassador Myron T. Herrick to the state department, in connection with the report which he is making as a basis for President Taft's effort to establish co-operative credit in the United States for the benefit of the American farmer.

"I realize," writes Ambassador Herrick, "that the study which we have made of the co-operative and mortgage systems of Europe has demonstrated beyond question that these organizations, with or without state aid, but all inspected and carefully guarded by the state, have resulted in financing, in the most satisfactory way, the agricultural interests of all Europe. It has demonstrated as well that these systems may be adopted in the United States and that we may even, with the experiments of Europe to guide us, vastly improve upon the European systems and do for the American farmer what has been done for the European farmer—create a ready market for agricultural securities at low rates of interest and with unburdensome amortization and thus afford a natural increase and, in some cases, double the production of his soil."

Business men of Idaho are starting plans for financing a north and south railroad. Former Governor Frank R. Gooding of Idaho is active in the move, and it is expected southern Idaho people will be called upon to purchase $250,000 in bonds to assist in the work.

Editorial Comment

CHICAGO'S PRIVATE BANKERS FAVOR SUPERVISION

The action of Chicago's private bankers in announcing their intention to support the movement for state supervision and inspection of private banks reflects great credit upon them. In a statement which has been issued and signed by the officials of the Chicago-Illinois Private Bankers Association, as well as other prominent Chicagoans engaged in this branch of the profession, attention is called to the fact that most of the agitation against private banks has been aimed at Chicago institutions, and the desire expressed to go on record as favoring the move for supervision and inspection.

There is not one single, valid reason for opposing such a measure. Any banker who honestly conducts his business has absolutely nothing to fear. On the other hand, the unscrupulous individual who robs the ignorant classes of their hard-earned savings, hiding behind the illusory word "bank," painted in conspicuous letters on his doors and windows, is the one who fights such legislations most assiduously. He realizes that if his business is under the inspection of the state he will be obliged to discontinue some of his practices which are not able to stand the light of investigation.

In view of the fact that the Abbott resolution did not propose or mention the way in which supervision should be exercised, but simply recommended that the association endorse and lend its aid to legislation putting all forms of banking in the state (except national) under state supervision and inspection, the outcome of the vote at Peoria is most surprising. Our courts repeatedly have held that a banker is engaged in a public calling,—the interests of the public are affected by all of his acts. All of the incorporated banks are subject either to state or national supervision. These banks are backed up by men of financial prominence and integrity, and have vast resources upon which to rely. On the other hand, many private bankers have little or no financial standing. There are no stockholders upon whom to impose liability in case of failure. When insolvency does occur a long line of poorly clad, ignorant persons is waiting outside of the "bank," hoping against hope that they will be able to recover at least a portion of practically all they had in the world, while the "banker" probably is in some distant city, having gone there through a "lapse of memory." This pitiful condition recurs quite frequently, and the great state of Illinois, by refusing to put on its statute books laws which will restrict the use of the word "bank," and compel everyone engaged in the business of banking to come under the inspection and control of the state, makes such possible. If incorporated banks are subject to supervision, it is difficult to see why individuals engaged in the same business should not be, also. There is no doubt in the world that the state has the power; the only thing that remains is for it to exercise it.

The Chicago private bankers are to be commended for their stand in the matter, and it greatly is to be hoped that other private bankers will join in and that their efforts will result in passage by the legislature of an adequate law, and remove from Illinois the stigma of being one of the four lonely states in the Union where unsupervised banking is permitted to exist. It is high time that Illinois did something to justify her reputation of being one of the progressive, up-to-date states.

It is not contended by anyone that there are not honest and reputable private bankers. Many of them are the most respected and honored citizens of their respective communities, to whom people go for advice and assistance. The proposed legislation is not aimed at them, but at those adventurers who hold themselves out as a bank, and under the guise of legitimacy deliberately rob the people of their money. The former class has nothing to fear as a result of supervision—the latter everything. All good bankers ought to be interested and lend their co-operation toward ridding the profession of that class of irresponsible people whose acts have a tendency to bring the business of banking into disrepute.

Agencies outside of banking are at work and say that if it appears too difficult to amend the banking act by the referendum route it will be attempted by way of the criminal statutes, making unsupervised banking a misdemeanor with heavy penalties attached. Hope was held out by leading private bankers at the Peoria convention that, among themselves, they will originate a movement which will be satisfactory to all.

ILLINOIS BANKERS GO ON RECORD (From Chicago Daily News.)

Illinois bankers made an unpleasant spectacle of their state organization when, in their convention at Peoria, by a vote of 224 to 125, they went on record as opposed to legislation bringing private banks under public supervision and control. It was especially shameful that representatives of many of the great

Chicago banking institutions, themselves under public supervision and fully cognizant of its value to all concerned, refrained from voting for the policy of state regulation. Presumably they did this out of fear of giving offense to the private bankers with whom they have business dealings.

The attitude of the Illinois Bankers Association of course cannot serve to prevent proper action by the state legislature. Its only effect is to put the bankers before the public in an unfavorable light. By calling attention to the subject, and by indicating that the movement for proper supervision must receive its principal support outside of the banking fraternity, the proceedings at Peoria doubtless have done much to compel the general assembly at its next session to establish state supervision for private banks.

Individual bankers who have stood courageously and intelligently for proper legislation of this sort, like B. F. Harris of Champaign, president of the Illinois Bankers Association, and Charles G. Dawes of Chicago, are entitled to a great deal of credit for their enlightened efforts on behalf of the public and of sound daylight banking.

Nearly every American state has provided by law that no one shall engage in the banking business without supervision being exercised over his operations by the public authorities. Illinois is disgraced by its failure to take action to enforce public supervision of all banks. The next legislature must be required to deal with the subject effectively.

SUPERVISION INEVITABLE (Peoria Herald-Transcript)

The refusal of the private bankers in the state association to endorse the Dawes resolution favoring state supervision of private banks will not particularly hurt the cause of revised banking laws, but it may react somewhat on the bankers themselves. To demand that the state have supervision over private banks is not to imply that all private bankers are unreliable; there are undoubtedly scores of private banks in Illinois which are as sound as any state or national bank, and there is no assumption that their proprietors are inferior in morality or capacity to their fellows of the state and national banks.

But supervision is not aimed at the sound bank and the reliable banker; it is aimed to forestall the unsound bank and the unreliable banker.

Meat inspection was not brought about on the assumption that all packers were dishonest and that all meat was bad; it was aimed to protect the honest packer and good meat. The pure food laws were enacted with the same idea in mind, and there is hardly a banker in the country who will question the beneficence of either of these measures.

bankers, however, supervision of all banks is bound to come in the very near future. And the good private bank will reap the biggest share of benefit from such a law.

WISE PRIVATE BANKERS

(From Chicago Daily Tribune.)

The Chicago private bankers who followed up the refusal of the Illinois Bankers Association to indorse the policy of state inspection by issuing a statement declaring themselves in favor of regulation showed wisdom. They know that the continued challenging of the private bank's right to exist will end in driving the bank under control or out of business—one or the other.

Every time a rascally institution closes its doors in the faces of its depositors the honest private banks are hurt. They cannot insist upon the maintenance of conditions which make swindling and robbery possible and then continue to use public confidence as an asset. The confidence will be withdrawn and the asset lost.

The Chicago private bankers who announced their willingness to lend a hand toward bringing all banks under inspection were wise.

REVIVING INTEREST IN THE FOWLER BANKING BILL

The Hon. Charles N. Fowler of Elizabeth, N. J., a long time member of congress and for several years chairman of the banking and currency committee of the house, has been spending a week or more in Chicago. On Tuesday he was tendered an informal luncheon by President James B. Forgan of the First National, at which were present George M. Reynolds of the Continental and Commercial, Sol. Wexler of the Whitney Central National of New Orleans and a number of other prominent bankers. The purpose of the discussion was to reconsider in a way the possibilities of reviving the Fowler national banking act, which in reality is an extension and application of the present clearing house system of bank inspection and government. The bill is pretty well known to those who have studied the matter, and Mr. Fowler fortifies it with a little printed digest touching upon the principal points. He has interviewed all of the officers of the National Citizens League to see whether or not the league is committed to the so-called Aldrich measure or whether it will advocate such a measure as would give relief and meet with the approval of congress. It is his intention to devote considerable time during the next two years to a public discussion of the matter. This he is willing to do as an individual or as a representative of the League, if the way is open for that connection. Bankers generally are agreed that Mr. Fowler probably is the best posted man on banking and currency topics in the country to-day, in connection with which he is a platform orator of great ability. Above all things he desires criticism of his plan, and will be exceedingly pleased if bankers to whose attention it may come will correspond with him at his home address, Elizabeth, N. J.

Kentucky Convention

Kentucky bankers held a large and enthusiastic convention this week in the city of Louisville on Wednesday and Thursday. The program was replete with interesting features, both social and intellectual. Headquarters were at the Henry Watterson Hotel on Walnut Street near Fourth. The business sessions were held in the convention hall on the tenth floor, and the registration room was located close by. Headquarters were open at seven o'clock on Tuesday and delegates received badges and credentials immediately upon registering. The first day's session was called to order promptly at 10:30 by President J. K. Waller of Morganfield. After invocation by the Rev. David C. Wright, R. Thurston Ballard, vice-president of the Louisville National Banking Company, made the address of welcome, which was responded to by the Hon. B. M. Arnett, cashier of the Farmers Exchange Bank, Nicholasville. After the annual address of the president, reports were heard from the secretary, treasurer, chairman of the executive council and chairman of the committee on banking jurisprudence and information. The Hon. P. B. Miller, director and attorney, Bank of Union County, Morganfield, told of the relation of the banker to money, morals and happiness. At noon members and guests were entertained by the members of the Louisville Clearing House Association at a luncheon served in the main dining-room of the Henry Watterson Hotel.

In the afternoon C. R. McKay, manager of the transit department of the First National of Chicago, made an address, the subject of which was "Items in Transit," and R. N. Cook, cashier of the Farmers Bank and Trust Company, Bardstown, told of the law of good neighborship among the bankers and the people. At 3:45, the steamer "Columbia," which had been chartered by the Louisville bankers, left the dock at First and Water streets. Gregg's Imperial Band was engaged for the occasion and there was music, dancing and singing. A fish supper was served on the boat. The return was made at 7:30, after which the delegates and visitors were further entertained at a theatre party.

Thursday there were addresses by the Hon. E. S. Clark, president Citizens Bank, Falmouth, whose subject was "Are Savings Departments Profitable to Interior Banks?" and J. E. Buckingham, cashier of the Paintsville National Bank, who told of the trials of the interior. Following these talks there were reports from the resolutions, auditing, nominating and other committees, after which the convention adjourned.

Secretary Arch B. Davis is to be congratulated on the splendid program provided for the occasion, and on the efficient way in which everything was carried out. The local bankers cannot be given too much praise for the fine program of entertainment which they provided for their guests.

NOVEL IDEA IN BANK ADVERTISING

Russell Sign System, Bowling Green, Ky., has a novel and effective means of bringing publicity to a bank. The system consists of a series of sixty attractive window cards, each bearing a brief but forceful message about the bank. These cards are printed in two colors on the best quality bristol board, and are held in place and displayed by a patented all-steel lithograph holder. These "Window Talks" will work for the bank every day for a year for $10. By this method a large number of people can be reached each day and banks are enabled to point out to the public the many merits of their respective institutions and thereby to induce the opening of an account.

The Hon. P. B. Miller at Kentucky Convention

Mr. Miller prefaced his remarks by telling of the condition of affairs which formerly existed in his state whereby private banks were enabled to operate without being subject to any kind of supervision or inspection, a state of affairs which proved so unsatisfactory to the people that remedial legislation subsequently was passed. The speaker also told of the Kansas "Blue Sky" law and pointed out the necessity for such legislation. He said that statistics show that losses through bank failures are a trifle when compared with the money which is lost through investment in worthless stocks and bonds. Mr. Miller also said:

"However much we may differ in our pursuits in life, in politics, religion or other public or private questions, we are agreed upon one point, that each is in pursuit of happiness. The instinct for happiness is as deeply embedded in man's nature as the instinct of life itself. The pursuit of money, with happiness as the goal, is altogether too prevalent and the most delusive. It is not my purpose to inveigh against the possession of money as a means to an end and what I shall say against it shall be directed against its gain at the expense of manhood, which results always in the greatest unhappiness. In an ideal republic happiness involves not only freedom and intelligence but abundance also. Strictly speaking, money is neither good nor evil. It is a force like electricity or wind or water, made good or evil by its use, and in itself without moral quality. It is as foolish to inveigh against fire because it burns careless people, or against steam because it scalds ignorant people, as to inveigh against money because it is misused by bad, sordid men. As with the same tongue one may praise God or curse man, so gold may bless mankind and the pos-essor, or he may be its slave, its caretaker, its serf. With money we may build a highway of happiness for society which may lead the footsteps of all into intelligence and integrity and to peace and happiness.

"In the distribution of talents the poet has been given the genius to inspire the people; the scholar wisdom to inform the people; the patriot courage to emancipate the people, while to others the talent of money making has been given. Unfortunately the hearts of many men who have amassed money have taken much of the hardness and brittleness of the metal of which it is composed and they blight the poor and the weak. They learn to love money for its own sake and are as cold and calculating as the spider with hungry eyes and manifold webs running out for trapping the unwary. The strange thing about money is that most men affect to hold it lightly, but we know they secretly want to possess it. It is the universal weakness. You have seen bright, intellectual men coin every thought into gain and turn every friendship into poverty. The science of medicine has discovered a preventive or cure for every form of fever except the fever of gold, which once fully developed no man can cure.

"It cannot be successfully denied that it hardens and corrupts many times where it softens the heart or elevates the morals once, and that it has brought much wretchedness and unhappiness into the world and will do so as long as the world lasts.

"The idea I would convey is found in the recent story of the death of sixty fishermen, natives of a New England coast village, and who sailed to New Foundland and were there lost with their meager fortunes. Hearing the news, a very wealthy banker, who fifty years before was a boy in that fishing village, decided to take a subscription paper around to friends of his childhood who had become rich men, to secure relief for the families. He called upon one who after his death was found to be a multi-millionaire, a man known for his parsimony. Together the banker and merchant went over the names of the fishermen whom they had known in boyhood; who were lost in the great storm; whose families were in need. Touched by the sacred memories of the past, the merchant at first said he would give a thousand dollars. The mail next morning brought a letter saying he would have to reduce it five hundred dollars and would enclose a check in a day or two. Later he wrote that he had met several losses and would have to cut it to two hundred and fifty dollars. A week later the check had not come and the old banker called upon his friend, who after toiling over his check book half an hour, turned in his chair to the banker and said, 'I cannot do it. I cannot do it. It hurts me to give.' Finally he pulled out his purse and gave the banker two dollars. The banker went away pitying the millionaire, impotent to rule his money, far more than he pitied the fishermen's cottages on the coast of Maine.

"Neither Caesar nor Napoleon in their wildest dreams ever conceived a country so vast and magnificent as ours. Our wealth ought to inspire our hearts and elevate our morals. We are too ready to forgive the sins of the rich and to forget how they got it. Too few men in our great cities give any heed to primitive morality, with its fine distinctions of right and wrong, and thus follows the failure of our municipal methods and processes to give efficient and good government to our great cities.

"All of us are familiar with the crime, shame and scandal of New York, Chicago and San Francisco. There is no need to repeat the current history to such an assemblage as this. What is the trouble? Has the money devil got us and gone? Some one truly has said, 'Tell us the nation's sin and we will show you the nation's danger.'

"The tariff question, the race question, the question of the conservation of our coal, our iron and our forests are great questions before us, but the paramount question is the true ideal and character of the American people. 'Put money into thy purse,' seems to have become a national motto. The genius of the country is more attracted to money getting than to civic righteousness or honest patriotism. We have too many talented men whose ambition is to make a fortune and buy a seat in the state legislature, or congress, or the senate, and we sit supinely by and permit it.

"With our money standards so high and our moral standards so low, it takes more than two years and more than $200,000 to turn one out. It is even charged that in the election of the chief executive of the United States that money has played and will continue to play this shameless part, and here we have the saddest spectacle in American history and must listen to the cry of 'stop thief.'

"Many of the great fortunes are due to special privileges given by city council, or state legislature or national congress to men composing a corporation. The millionaire not only owns his private railway or steamships, or coal or iron fields, but seeks to own, and I fear does partially own, his private city council and legislature, and his private judge and governor. The speaker of the house in one of our states once said, 'If the president of the ——— Railway has no more laws to pass, the legislature will stand adjourned.'

"What a condition in a democracy like ours, with its historic memories of deeds of valor and civic and religious liberties; in a democracy that has trained the people to believe in equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none and that every citizen has equal rights before the laws! Under such conditions what opportunity has the youth with ambition, health and ability against the baron or the magnate with his control of land, coal, oil and iron, and with his pull and influence? But let us hope that these conditions are temporary; that wise legislation, increased intelligence, and a sense of service and responsibility on the part of the rich, coupled with a sane and intelligent demand on the part of the people, will correct some of these evils and cause a return of equality of rights and privileges, and then will come a return of happiness to our people.

"The voice of the people,—the plain people upon the farms, in the mines and shops, the toilers who take nature's wealth from her forests and her fields, from her rocks and her rivers, and have wrought and brought the wonders of mankind,—this voice sooner or later will be heard. We cannot afford to oppress them or to destroy their comforts and their hopes.

"If our banks and other temples of commerce of our cities be destroyed, it is they who will build them greater and grander than they were and support them thereafter. If you and others dealing in or controlling the money desire to save your credit in the opinion of the people, you must look to their in-

"Every banker is and of a right ought to be a leader and a man of the highest influence in his community. Often the less fortunate and less prominent select him as an ideal. You have problems outside of the counter more important to solve than those within. The function of banking, instead of being a selfish agency for discounting the hard-earned fruits of industry, should endeavor to co-operate with the farmer, the manufacturer, the artisan, the mechanic and the laborer. You should get in closer connection with the general body of the people and put your resources at the disposal of every plain man to the fullest extent his credit is good, and without demanding handsome securities, and thus you will gain their confidence and dissipate their prejudices and build up your communities. Among these plain people who live close to the soil and lead sane, normal lives, ever will be found the greatest degree of public virtue, honor and morals. The moral hazard is better here than elsewhere.

"During the money panic of 1907 the news came from the office of J. Pierpont Morgan that $25,000,000 cash immediately would be placed in the money market, and the press proclaimed that Mr. Morgan had saved the country. The American people, including the bankers outside of the inner circle in New York, believed this until it recently appeared from the testimony given at the hearing on

Omaha

Kansas City bankers are making arrangements for the next conference of the agricultural committee from the banking associations of thirty states, combining with one from the American Bankers Association, which will be held in Kansas City at an early date. The meeting will bring together representative financiers from the western states. Edwin Chamberlain, vice-president of the San Antonio Loan and Trust Company, who has just finished an exhaustive investigation of agricultural conditions in Europe, will attend. Another important visitor will be Joseph Chapman of Minneapolis, chairman of the committee on agricultural development and vocational training of the American Bankers Association.

Bankers Club Holds Meeting

The first fall meeting of the Kansas City Bankers Club was held at the Hotel Baltimore in that city October 3d. A committee appointed by P. W. Goebel, president of the Kansas City Clearing House Association, made the arrangements and the meeting departed somewhat from the regular order. The Kansas City chapter of the American Institute of Banking was invited in a body and responded enthusiastically. The dinner began at 7 p. m., and following this came reports from the delegates who attended the convention of the American Institute of Banking at Salt Lake City, August 22-24, and those who attended the American Bankers Association convention in Detroit. About two hundred bankers and bank employees attended the dinner and heard the reports. The Kansas City Bankers Club has planned a busy winter season.

Kansas City Developing Northward

That portion of Kansas City which lies north of the Missouri river is now enjoying unusual activity owing to the opening of an interurban system which will connect that district with the main city and with various other cities of north Missouri, including St. Joseph and Excelsior Springs. Numerous business blocks are being erected and several factories started. To accommodate the growing business of that section a new bank has been organized there to be known as the National Bank of North Kansas City, and it will start with a capital of $25,000. The bank is being financed by the Armour-Swift-Burlington interests, which are developing the district.

New York Bankers Entertained at St. Joseph

Seward Prosser, president of the Liberty National of New York and representative of the Morgan interests, and A. R. Jones of the bonding department of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, made a tour of inspection of several cities in the Central West recently. The financiers traveled in a private car and stopped at St. Joseph, Mo., before going to Kansas City. At St. Joseph they were entertained by the local bankers, including J. G. Schneider of the German-American National; I. A. Vant and Floyd Hovey of the Stockyards National, and R. T. Forbes, president of the First National. With the exception of Mr. Hovey, the St. Joseph bankers accompanied the easterners to Kansas City. In the party also were C. S. Glead, chairman of the board of directors of the Missouri and Kansas Telephone Company, and H. M. Sloan, of Chicago, assistant to President Mudge of the Rock Island. Mr. Prosser and Mr. Jones visited practically all of the Rock Island territory in the West.

Pittsburgh Bankers in Kansas City

One hundred business and professional men of Pittsburgh, Pa., made a trip through the Central West last week stopping at the principal cities and getting acquainted with local conditions. In Kansas City the party was entertained by the Commercial Club with a drive over the boulevard system and a dinner at which two hundred men were seated. Pittsburghers have always been rather jealous of Kansas City in the matter of bank clearings on account of the western city's persistency in taking sixth place ahead of Pittsburgh. Speaking of this condition, Robert C. Coard, of the Mellon National of Pittsburgh, said: "We have always thought of Kansas City as a sort of jumping-off place, and we couldn't see what license you had to beat us in bank clearings. Now that we have come and seen your city, alive with business and filled with properous looking homes, we can see that Kansas City is really some city."

Increase in Clearings

During the month of September the business handled by the Kansas City Clearing House Association showed a big increase over the corresponding month a year ago. The business of last month amounted to $221,160,062 as compared with $211,910,316 for the same period of 1911, showing an increase of more than $9,000,000 for the month. The total business of the clearing house for twelve months ending September 30, was $2,630,703,922. During the twelve months ending September 30, 1911, the business totaled $2,591,011,655, which shows an increase during the last twelve months of $39,692,267. The large increase of September, 1912, over the corresponding month a year ago is due to handling the big crops of the present season.

Group 4 at Kansas City

The first of the Missouri bankers' group meetings to be held this fall will be convened in Kansas City October 15th. P. W. Goebel, president of the Kansas City Clearing House Association, has named the following committee to make arrangements for the entertainment of the visiting bankers: J. R. Dominick, president of the Traders National; W. L. Buechle, vice-president of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce; J. L. Johnston, cashier of the National Reserve Bank; Geo. P. Reichel, assistant cashier of the First National; Virgil K. Tuggle, assistant cashier of the New England National, and Jerome Thralls, manager of the Kansas City Clearing House. A dinner will be one of the chief features of the entertainment.

Report on Oklahoma State Banking Board

After a year of hard work the examination of the books and accounts of the Oklahoma state banking board has been finished and a copy has been given to Governor Cruce. The report covers the operations of the board from the time of its inception to September 30, 1911. It will be remembered that this examination was vigorously opposed and it was ordered only after the late state inspector, Charles A. Taylor, brought mandamus proceedings in order to be allowed to inspect the books and accounts. In a general way the report is without severe criticism of the board except that fault is found with the careless manner in which the work of the board was done. The accounts are incomplete and some of the important books of the failed banks are missing. There is no itemized account of the manner in which assets of failed banks were realized upon. There were fourteen failed banks and there was paid out of the state guarantee fund, including what the fund earned, a total of $2,772,068 in cash. Up to September 30th, the state banks of Oklahoma paid into the fund a total of $1,279,393. For the period covered the net loss to the guarantee fund after all settlements had been paid was $88,102.

Oklahoma Holds Record

Those who are unacquainted with the new state of Oklahoma will be bewildered at the financial situation in that commonwealth as shown by recent statistics compiled in Oklahoma City. Oklahoma, with a population of 1,756,200, averaged during 1911 an aggregate of bank deposits amounting to $92,224,499. This makes a per capita deposit of $58 to every man, woman and child in the state and with something left over. In her per capita deposits Oklahoma is now seventh in the union and greater than that of any of the southern states. In piling up bank deposits Oklahoma has made greater progress within the past ten years than any other state has made in the past 25 years. In 1900 Oklahoma's were not quite $8,000,000 and in 1910 they had grown to more than $92,224,000, an increase of over 900 per cent. That is a record that makes the Oklahoma banker proud, for it has not been approached so far as known in the history of American state building.

Dallas Chapter Has New Home

Doubtless one of the most flourishing chapters of the American Institute of Banking is that at Dallas, Tex. When the season closed last spring a committee on permanent quarters was appointed and this committee spent the summer to such good purpose that now the Dallas chapter has a beautiful home occupying the entire third floor of the Murphy & Bolanz Building on Commerce Street. There is a reading room, a game room, a billiard room, a reception hall, an assembly and lecture room and a serving room for lunches and entertainments. There is also a shower bath and other up-to-date club features. Since last winter twenty members have been added, making the entire membership 110. At a recent open meeting most of the bank presidents of Dallas were guests of the chapter and they all expressed themselves as delighted at the progress that has been made by the chapter, and all the banks of the city promised support and encouragement. A lecture course on banking topics has been arranged for the coming winter and the chapter also expects to enjoy a number of social entertainments. M. Boyd Keith, of the Commonwealth National, is chairman of the programme committee. Officers of the chapter are: Stewart D. Beckley, president; O. B. Kendricks, vice-president; C. T. Dean, secretary, and Robert Williams, treasurer.

AFTER NEW SIX-CYLINDER

President Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National was in Chicago on Tuesday, placing an order for a new six-cylinder car. He has been traveling over the state of Iowa of late and believes that the entire state is experiencing a prosperity boom such as has not been equaled in years. He noticed that the farmers all are feeling fine over the large crop and good prices and that business generally is expanding normally in keeping with conditions. There is an actual demand for money in Iowa at the present time at good rates, which is making bankers feel comfortable.

A BOUQUET FOR B. F. HARRIS

Just as the Peoria convention of the Illinois Bankers Association was drawing to a close a committee composed of Williamson, Trayler and other well-known bankers handed in a complimentary resolution recognizing the great services of the retiring president, B. F. Harris of Champaign. It was passed amid vociferous applause and reads:

"Resolved, that while we recall and esteem the excellent work done for this association by those officers who have guided its destinies in former years, we especially congratulate the closing administration upon accomplishments which have challenged the attention and won the applause of the entire citizenship of our country. The courage, zeal, and ability displayed by President B. F. Harris marks him as a man peculiarly fitted for leadership in this day of progressive thought and national tendency. The state and nation have need for the talent and services of men of his character and convictions and their participation in the public activities of our country will hasten the solution of many of the perplexing problems of the hour."

CHILDS & CO. INVESTMENT OFFERING

C. F. Childs & Co., 29 South La Salle Street, Chicago, has issued a very attractive circular describing the new one-million dollar issue of the Avery Company of Peoria, Ill. Most of the bankers who attended the recent state convention held in that city were guests of the Avery Company on a visit to its splendid plant. The array of buildings was as fine as can be found in any manufacturing district, and the organization appeared to be of a strictly modern type. Many inquiries were made by bankers as to when the new stock would be on the market. These shares will be tax-free in Illinois, and are in the shape of 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock. The preference is as to dividends, and in the event of dissolution, as to assets over the common stock. The par value of the shares is $100, dividends payable quarterly. There is to be an annual sinking fund of 2 per cent for the purchase of stock up to 115 a share, the shares being redeemable at this figure. The Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings of Chicago is registrar and the Fort Dearborn Trust and Savings of this city is transfer agent. The Avery Company is one of the oldest and most successful, as well as the largest manufacturers in the whole world of agricultural implements. The output consists of gas and oil farm tractors, self-lift engine gang plows, gasoline farm and city motor trucks, threshing machines, steam shovels, cranes and steam traction engines. The capitalization includes one million preferred and two and a quarter millions common. The total net assets above all debts are around three and one-half millions. The liquid net assets above all debts are more than a million and a half. Over a period of four years the average net earnings have been $171,800. After January 1, 1912, up until the time of the last statement the earnings have been $256,800, or approximately seven times the preferred stock dividend requirements. Childs & Co. issue a circular giving full details of the safeguards and restrictions thrown around these shares, and assure us that application will be made to list the stock on the Chicago exchange, where they anticipate an active market. The shares are offered to the public at par and interest, and subscriptions will be received either by the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings, the Fort Dearborn Trust and Savings or direct through C. F. Childs & Co.

COUNTRY BANKS BUYING COMMERCIAL PAPER

Prominent Chicago bankers say that country banks are buying a fair amount of commercial paper, which would indicate a prosperous and comfortable condition. They say that the monetary situation is very encouraging, and that they do not anticipate any stringency.

D. R. FORGAN ON MONEY OUTLOOK

President D. R. Forgan of the National City Bank of Chicago, in speaking of October conditions, says:

"Within the last fortnight there has been a sustained rise in money rates and the business interests of the whole country are fast adjusting themselves to the change. The advance has not been unexpected, for with the record movement of grain from the primary markets and the very pronounced business revival, a much broader inquiry for accommodation with higher interest rates could not well be avoided. Mercantile borrowers are pretty generally paying 6 per cent for what money they need as against an average rate of about 4½ per cent at this time one year ago, when business men had little occasion to borrow money, owing to the stagnation in general trade. The higher rates which now prevail simply reflect the increased industrial activity.

PEOPLES TRUST TO HAVE NEW QUARTERS

Plans now are being formulated whereby the Peoples Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago will have enlarged quarters. This action has been rendered necessary owing to the rapid growth of the bank.

FRANCIS J. KILKENNY ON IRELAND'S PROSPERITY

Francis J. Kilkenny, confidential secretary to L. O. Murray, comptroller of the currency, recently has written an article on how prosperity is coming to Ireland, which appeared in the Chicago Record-Herald of September 22d. Mr. Kilkenny is president of the Irish Home Going Association. The article deals with the improved and prosperous conditions which now are prevailing in Erin. The banks, of which there are nine, with 695 branches, are in a prosperous condition. The Bank of Ireland has a capital of $13,500,000, and the joint stock banks a combined capital of over $22,000,000. The resources of these banks amount to $425,000,000, which is equal to the banking resources of the state of Indiana. In 1911 the deposits in the joint stock banks amounted to $327,090,000, an increase of $14,965,000. The article is ably and interestingly written.

MAUSOLEUM

The above is one of our classic four column front mausoleums. We have erected many hundreds of mausoleums, ranging in price from $2,000 to $100,000. The private mausoleum is the least heartrending method of caring for the deceased.

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

The state bank department will ask the Minnesota legislature next winter to establish a department of credit to safeguard depositors. The plan of Superintendent Kelsey S. Chase is to open a card system report on securities from all state banks. Every borrower will be indexed with his known assets and liabilities and if his borrowings become heavy, banks will get a tip to restrict his credit. Under the present law a man entitled to $5,000 credit will borrow that amount from half a dozen banks and start something in the dangerous condition line. An assistant will be asked for each of the twenty bank examiners. The assistant can do the routine work while the examiner snoops the securities. Greater restraint on overdrafts will be asked.

"With present equipment it is impossible," said Mr. Chase, "to make an investigation that will assure depositors the banks are in good condition. I am against the policy of bank insurance. I believe absolute protection can be given the depositors, however, should the department be given an adequate force thoroughly to inspect them and a system of state credit be established so a man's borrowing could be kept to that which he is capable of meeting."

"Such a system of credits would also be a safeguard against 'kiting' of checks and other practices which jeopardize the foundation of a bank. This department could be created with a reasonable appropriation if the additional necessary help is given for inspection."

Addressed Minneapolis Chapter

President G. E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota, and W. F. McLane, cashier of the Hennepin County Savings Bank, were speakers at the first fall meeting of the Minneapolis Chapter. In part Dr. Vincent said: "The banking business, conducted as it now is, on a scientific basis, is a study of life and is no different than the investigations of the university. We are all trying to interpret life intelligently."

"These are the days of efficiency. Most of the resources of the country have been taken up by corporations, by individuals, or by the government. The times have been changed in a lifetime. These are the days of narrow margins and scientific business. These are fine days to live in."

"Efficiency is solving problems. It is to bring one's resources to bear upon unexpected emergencies. Many of us are automatic. Good breeding is automatism. But some persons are too automatic."

"The day of opportunity in America has not gone. We are facing days that are going to test our ability. The students in college are at this disadvantage. They are dealing too much with the theories of life and not with the concrete things. But this we will change in time. The practical men are sometimes prone to pay too little attention to theories."

State Money Called In

State money has been called in with October 24th as the limit. This money is held in state banks. The idea of calling in the funds is to meet the October school apportionment, when there is to be distributed nearly $1,400,000, or the largest amount ever to date. The state has a lot of money scattered in the rural institution strong boxes and elsewhere in Minnesota; altogether $1,332,000. Heavy shortage in the revenue fund has caused an early call-in, but the state treasurer, Walter Smith, says the banks won't be crippled.

Growth of Banking in Minnesota

Charts showing progress of the banking business in the state have been prepared by Kelsey S. Chase, state superintendent, covering from 1878 to 1912. One shows the high water mark for loans and discounts is $112,000,000 in 1912. In 1911 they were $103,000,000. State bank deposits in 1878, when the department was authorized, were $2,000,000, and in 1912, $124,000,000. Capital in 1878 was $1,000,000 and surplus $40,000. Now the capital is $16,000,000 for the state banks, and surplus $4,000,000. Banking house fixture value has increased from $50,000 to $4,300,000.

Louis W. Hill Elected to Northwestern National Directorate

Louis W. Hill has been elected director in the Northwestern National to succeed the late M. B. Koon. This is the first instance of a St. Paul man serving on the directorate of a Minneapolis bank in recent years. James J. Hill, father of Mr. Hill, is active in the Minneapolis Trust Company. Mr. Hill has been in the directorate of the St. Paul First and Merchants Nationals and the Duluth First National. Mr. Hill is chairman of the Great Northern road, and W. H. Dunwoody, president of the Northwestern National, is director in the road.

Northwest Banking Notes

Profits of the September state fair have enabled the board to take up the indebtedness with twin city banks of $50,000. The loans were to cover losses from bad weather in 1911. Warrants for $27,000 remaining may be taken up from the same fund.

E. H. Rollins & Sons, Chicago, will take the St. Paul public library $50,000 bonds. Opinion from the corporation attorney has shown the bond men that the state legislature was not limited in its special session to issues named in the call and could authorize the bond issue in question. A confirmatory ordinance has been asked from the city council.

The First National of Mankato, Minn., has had plans made of a proposed office and bank building at the offices of Ellerbe & Round, St. Paul architects.

In the October number of "Thrift," the State Institution for Savings announces that it is now the fourth largest exclusive savings bank in Minnesota with assets of more than $1,000,000.

EXAMINATIONS TO BE MADE MORE EFFECTIVE

A move has been set on foot by Comptroller of the Currency L. O. Murray in an effort to make bank examinations as effective as they can be made under the present law. In all examinations made on and after October 1st, examiners are required to convene the boards of directors in country banks and to make an examination of the assets in their presence and with their help and co-operation. One of the great difficulties to be encountered in this connection is the fact that in many instances bank directors are not local men, which renders it difficult to get them together, especially on short notice. The comptroller has asked his examiners to see that at least a majority of the board is present whenever requested, and that if the board be so constituted as not to permit this, that it be reorganized so as to make a majority of the directors readily available. Another point to which the examiners will be asked to pay especial attention is the unreasonable concentration of bank funds in private enterprises in which the officers or directors of the bank are interested. The comptroller will insist that the books of these concerns be open to the examiners so that he may be enabled to determine whether or not the loans are properly secured.

ADVOCATES OF GOOD ROADS ADOPT PLATFORM

At the convention of good roads enthusiasts, held under the auspices of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association in Peoria on Friday of last week, the report of the committee on policy outlining a platform to be followed in securing better roads for the state, unanimously was adopted. Among the things recommended are state and county co-operation; a non-political state highway commission; effective means for maintenance of the roads after construction; use of the state automobile tax as a partial aid in financing the project; employment of convicts under the honor system; payment of road taxes in cash; compulsory dragging of all dirt roads and provisions for the safety of road users. Improvement was advocated for main roads in such counties as may elect to come under the proposed law, principally at the expense of the state and the county, such roads to be improved subject to the approval of the state highway commission and thereafter to be turned over to the state for perpetual care and maintenance; also for the supervision, maintenance and control of the remaining roads under the supervision and control of county and township authorities.

The report of the committee resulted in much favorable discussion and comment at the hands of representatives of the many organizations throughout the state which are interested in this matter. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that the time for argument is passed—it is conceded by everyone that good roads greatly increase the prosperity and general welfare of any state or community. The thing to do now is to do something towards obtaining them, and not argue as to the benefits to be derived therefrom. There is no doubt but what our present road laws are grossly inadequate and antiquated.—laws which were adopted forty years ago to protect Indian trails and section lines. Mrs. H. M. Dunlap of Savoy expressed it as her opinion that if the United States can spend a huge sum of money to dig a ditch in a foreign country, it can afford to spend something for better roads, which will benefit the people at home more directly.

J. D. Phillips, president of the Illinois Bankers Association, told of the efforts of the bankers in this direction, and of the splendid and effective work which has been accomplished by S. E. Bradt of De Kalb as chairman of the association's committee on good roads, and as a result of this, his decision to reappoint him to that position.

William G. Edens of Chicago, president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, presided over the sessions in an able and dignified manner. Mr. Edens is a zealous and active worker on behalf of this movement, and has done much to create public sentiment and to arouse enthusiasm in regard to "Pulling Illinois out of the mud." It is believed that the movement has been given quite an impetus as a result of the convention at Peoria.

Illinois, while one of the leading agricultural states of this country, probably has the worst highways of any state in the Union. It is high time that some organized effort be made to remedy this deplorable situation and thus to promote the industrial, social and economic welfare of its citizens. It is believed that the work of this association and of other organizations interested in the matter will play a prominent part in the accomplishment of this much desired reform.

CHICAGO CHAPTER, A. I. B.

The chapter's fellowship meeting held at Assembly Hall, Northwestern University building, Lake and Dearborn streets, last Tuesday evening, September 24th, was a success in every way. The boys were all very enthusiastic over the prospects for the coming year, which promises to be the most successful in the history of the chapter.

Malcolm McDowell, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, Chicago, also a member of the executive committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, was the speaker of the evening. His talk was very interesting and instructive, and he pointed out to the clerks the many opportunities and advantages of the opportunities so close at hand, impressing upon them that the young men of to-day are more fortunate than their antecedents, inasmuch as they have so many advantages at hand which their parents did not have. Mr. McDowell particularly called their attention to the exceptionally good courses which the chapter has to offer this year and pointed out to them wherein they would be benefited if they would only take advantage of them.

The entertainment provided for the evening, which consisted of a few vaudeville sketches and music, was very entertaining and carried out in a very satisfactory and pleasing manner. Cigars and a buffet luncheon was served during the evening.

The class in rhetoric and composition will hold its first meeting Friday evening, October 4th, and the commercial and banking law class on Tuesday evening, October 8th. Both classes already promise to be very well attended, especially the class in rhetoric and composition, as many of the older clerks express their intention of taking up this course, which is very practical and beneficial to all those who will only apply themselves.

The executive committee, Chicago Chapter, has recommended John W. Rubecamp, president of Chicago Chapter, and Harry S. Smale, president of the chapter last year, to the executive council for election to the fellowship class.

Charles W. Bartlett, who has resigned as state bank examiner for the Kansas City district in Missouri, has gone on an extended visit to the Pacific coast. R. W. Hawkins, formerly assistant cashier of the Central National of St. Louis, has been appointed Mr. Bartlett's successor.

A new state bank has been established at Talmage, Neb., with a cash capital of $20,000.

Agriculture and the Problems of American Rural Life

PART II

The fundamental question of the size of the harvest—the yield per acre—lies at the foundation of our national prosperity. We have been living in a somewhat reckless way. The Country Life Commission gave expression in a public way to what every agricultural college in the country has been preaching for years, namely, that the preservation of our soil fertility and the development of the annual yield, are important factors in a prosperous agriculture and staple condition of the country. The note of alarm has been sounded repeatedly; nevertheless, I call attention to the fact again that the farming community is not yet thoroughly aroused on these questions. In many portions of the country improved agriculture has borne its fruit and there are to-day thousands of prosperous farms and happy farmers. There are large areas of which this is not true. A recent study of conditions in Ohio, where I happen to live, shows that since 1867, for forty years, thirty-four counties show a decline in the annual yield of the staple crops. The decrease in corn varied from three-tenths of a bushel to seven and eight-tenths bushels, per acre. The other fifty-four counties show an increase varying from one-tenth of a bushel to ten bushels per acre. Meantime during these forty years the population of the state has far outrun the farming conditions. In the same general way I made a study of the exporting of wheat during the same period for the entire country and notwithstanding the development of new wheat fields, the percentage of the crops exported reached its lowest point in 1905, namely, a little less than eight per cent.

In 1907 it had risen to nearly twenty per cent. The highest point, however, was reached in 1894, when it was forty-one per cent, or a little more. The federal government reports from 1867 to 1907 show an average export of 26 68-100 per cent of the wheat crop. For the last decade in this period the average was 27 18-100 per cent, and for the decade preceding, 31 44-100 per cent. When we take into consideration that the new wheat land will not be developed except at the cost of the other crops, it is manifest, not only that the percentage of the wheat crop being exported has steadily declined for a generation, but that within a very short period we shall be consuming our entire crop and a little later importing bread stuffs.

When that time arrives prices must advance beyond their present scale and the only relief possible is to increase the output from year to year. What is true of the wheat crop is substantially true of the corn crop. In the great corn belt we find the basis of our feed for meat producing animals as well as for dairy products. The range of prices, therefore, for beef, pork, and dairy products will bear a definite ratio to the productiveness of our soil. At present we are exporting meat products but the indications are clear that this must decline. It is entirely evident that the exports must pay for the imports. The more one considers this phase of the productiveness of our soil as related to an increased demand for these food products the more certain it is that the range of prices cannot be lowered except the increase of population be limited or the food supply greatly increased. The objection that is sometimes urged by farmers against an increase of crops because prices might be lowered is soon disposed of when we recognize the increased demand from year to year for these products. Moreover, the prevalent desire for official governmental inspection of meats, dairy products and the processes of producing these products, has made the investment greater and, therefore, increased the cost of production. This inspection is a public necessity for a variety of reasons that I need not discuss in this paper, but it is a factor entering into the cost of production so seriously that many farmers are disposed to abandon their small dairy business just as many of them have abandoned the old family orchard. It now looks as if the apples of the future will be produced almost exclusively in commercial orchards and that the dairy products of the future will be produced almost exclusively by the commercial dairies. These questions or production go to the root of the matter and must be brought home to the consciousness of every farmer in the land. The Ohio Experiment Station has announced that if the farmers of Ohio will follow the directions based upon the experiments at the station, the yield of Ohio farms could be doubled within five years. There is not the slightest prospect that the farmers as a whole will react to this suggestion of the experiment station. Wallace's Farmer has recently stated that the production of the fields of the West could be increased fifty per cent in five years if the farmers could secure the proper help in the field and in the home. In other words, this problem of increased crop production is not so simple as it may appear on the few selected farms, with enterprising men, who may be utilizing all the available help both in labor and intelligence. Their crops might be greatly increased but this would cover so small a percentage of the entire area of productive land as to make a very small change in the present conditions, however important that change might be. Reports show that the land in the European countries is much more productive than in earlier years and much more productive than land of the same natural fertility in the United States. The labor problem there is somewhat different, although land values in the corn belt of Hungary are perhaps fifty per cent higher than in the United States, ranging from two hundred dollars to three hundred dollars per acre and even higher. The same general principle holds good for other staple crops such as wheat, oats, rye, potatoes and the forage crops.

Recently commercial organizations have interested themselves in enterprises and projects having in view an increased yield and the arousing of an interest on the part of the growing boys in agricultural productions. Nothing but praise can be offered for such enterprises, but the important issue now is to secure a reaction on these impoverished farms in this country by the every day farmer who is naturally conservative and slow to change his methods. The ordinary farmer is about the last man to hear the call in the interest of increased crops. We are accustomed to hearing so much about bumper crops that we have been deceived as to their real significance. We need a bumper crop every year in the interest of the public welfare. This is not only an agricultural, but a patriotic, problem as well.

Good Roads

I mention, though somewhat briefly, another factor entering into the improvement both of agriculture and of rural life, namely, the problem of good roads. As far back as the days of the Roman Empire, when all roads led to Rome, the importance of good roads was understood. They constituted a means of communication, transportation, and commerce. In these modern days practically every form of transportation has been improved more rapidly and to a greater extent, than the most primitive one of the public roadways. Here again, the every-day farmer is rather slow to believe in the economic value of first class roads in the rural communities. The question of rural progress is not at all bound up in the production of crops. The marketing of these crops, the sale of the products, and the transportation of these products, are all factors entering into the efficiency of living. This is not, as ordinarily conceived, purely a local problem. The farmer is apt to view it from that point of view. As a matter of fact good roads have to do with the public welfare and the local farm is only one of the factors in the situation. Good roads therefore mean state supervision and state construction. They mean that all people in the commonwealth are interested in all the people and that good roads make a contribution not to the welfare of any one class but to the welfare of all classes by furnishing easy, safe, and economic transportation. They mean more efficient schools, more efficient churches, more wholesome social life, increased value in the land itself and a more economic transportation. Public sentiment has not yet reached a state of assurance on these problems. Too many people view the good roads question simply as a means of spending money or of marketing the crops. Recently in Ohio a constitutional convention proposed an amendment permitting the issuing of bonds to the amount of fifty thousand dollars for the development of highways. That amendment was defeated. The vote is instructive. It shows that where good roads prevail a majority of people were in favor of their extension. In communities where good roads were almost entirely unknown that section was against it. The fact remains that the portions of the country having improved roads show the best rural conditions, the best land values, the most progressive farming and altogether the most prosperous people. In the face of these facts the rural population was able to defeat the proposal which would have brought from the city dweller a large contribution to supplement the rural community in improving its highways. No doubt a little controversy between the automobile owners and the owners of farm wagons as to the kind of road that would be needed and the fear that a more expensive road than would be really needed should be constructed, contributed to the defeat. However, these conditions prevail through the Central West. Until some agreement can be reached we shall continue to neglect this important factor in the improvement of both agricultural and rural life. Public sentiment must be crystalized. A large amount of education of public sentiment will be necessary for these progressive measures.

Farm Measures

I mention another factor which I have been proclaiming for more than twenty years, namely, the importance of developing a system of credit for farm lands. The modern banking system seems to be built upon the necessity of quick assets, of convertible assets and on the necessity of keeping our banks in a condition to meet any emergency demands. This is probably wise from the standpoint of sound banking. My plea, however, is that the banking system ought to be supplemented by a system of credit which will provide for the needs of the farm. There is no more staple asset than the real estate of the country, provided it is not inflated in value. There is not much inflation in farm lands. The inflated real estate is practically confined to the speculative areas in and about the centers of population. The farm lands, as the federal census will show, have steadily increased in value for fifty years. This increase in value while making security stable at the same time makes it difficult for the young farmer without capital to secure a farm. A generation ago there were unoccupied or cheap lands to which the young farmer might go with a reasonable hope of providing himself a homestead even under the system of loans that has prevailed. There is need now of developing some such system as has been developed in Ireland, Germany, and in France, having agricultural credit societies able to make long time loans at low rates of interest, and thus enable the industrious young farmer to take hold of the business of buying land and eventually paying for it. This is vital to the public welfare.

Absentee Ownership

The present tendency as every one knows is to absentee ownership. In some cases this works well, but in many cases it has resulted in encouraging men to live off the rental of land while giving to the tenant the opportunity for a bare living and no prospect of ownership. It is un-American to develop and maintain a system of land tenure that looks to landlordism and a permanent rental class but little better than the peasantry of Europe. The history of the land values will, I think, demonstrate that farm lands could well bear as low a rate of interest as municipal bonds. The important defect in the present system is that it fails to encourage the purchase of farms by men of small means. The early days of American farming were characterized by the fact that young men could buy farms on credit with a reasonable hope of paying for them. In many instances, I have found young men graduating from colleges of agriculture, having been brought up on farms and thoroughly familiar with farming operations, discouraged at the prospect of getting hold of a farm that they could manage and operate upon scientific methods. Our credit system, therefore, seems not to have been in harmony with our theory of an educated farmer. It is a gratifying fact that these questions of farm credits are being agitated in financial circles and that public sentiment is steadily approaching the belief that a safe and adequate credit system lies near the heart of the problem of a better agriculture.

Spokane

Spokane, Wash., October 1st.—Large sums of money are being shipped from Spokane banks to the surrounding grain districts to help the country banks meet the demands of harvesting. The Spokane banks are in splendid shape to handle the situation, as was evidenced by the unusually sound condition reported on the September 4th call of the comptroller of the currency. Large amounts of cash surplus are available for the purpose. To date the need of the country banks has been for money to carry on the harvesting and threshing, as the army of professional threshers and harvest hands must be paid in cash. The general crop movement is not expected by Spokane bankers until October and they foresee no difficulty in meeting the demand then. Railroad men do not anticipate a car shortage in the Spokane country when the crop movement begins in earnest. They believe the movement will be gradual, enabling them to supply cars as needed.

Enormous Irrigation Project

The million dollar irrigation project near Brewster, Wash., 125 miles northwest of Spokane, is expected to be started next spring. Marvin Chase, chief engineer, finds the cost of the system will be less than $70 per acre for the 1,500 acres of orchard land to be brought under the ditch. The company handling the project reports that arrangements are being made to finance the system.

Banking Notes

Ownership of the Woodland (Wash.) State Bank has passed from L. G. McConnell and associates to L. M. Plamondon, J. M. Ayres, R. A. Henry, J. A. Murphy, Harry Dunham, F. L. Stewart and C. A. Taylor. The new owners plan to increase capital as the growth of the community may justify.

A deserted bank building at Kahlotus, Wash., recently attracted the attention of robbers, who broke in during the night. The safe baffled their efforts, but they opened some safety deposit vaults, which were empty. The intruders vented their chagrin by breaking up the furniture.

Your Pacific Northwest Items HOW ARE THEY ROUTED?

BELIEVING that a needless loss of time incident to injudicious routing of western items might be avoided if facts were better known, this bank has compiled the above map which shows how geographical position and railroad construction combine to give Spokane undisputed commercial supremacy in the Inland Empire. ☞ Direct correspondence with practically every point in this territory enables this bank to ensure its clients quick returns and good service. ☞ It makes a special appeal to banks desiring a prompt clearance of their western items.

The Leavitt and Johnson National at Waterloo has acquired adjoining property to its institution so that it now has a frontage of 165 feet on Commercial Street. The recent purchase was made with the idea of improving the site, upon which the institution plans to build a handsome structure. The consideration at the recent purchase was reported as $25,000.

Des Moines, October 2d.—Des Moines bankers who attended the convention of the American Bankers Association have returned to Iowa convinced that it was the greatest meeting the association ever held. Iowa bankers naturally enough are proud that two of their number should be honored. Arthur Reynolds, who was made vice-president, and I. M. Carpenter of Monticello, who succeeds him on the executive council, are able and well known financiers. There seems to be no reason to doubt that Mr. Reynolds will next year be chosen president. John Elliott of the Commercial Savings was one of the last of the party to return to Des Moines, although Secretary Hall came home via New York where he attended to business matters. The bankers think that Detroit is entitled to credit for the excellent brand of entertainment put up. Some of the special features provided were especially pleasing.

In an interview upon his return, Arthur Reynolds stated that the bankers believe that there is too much political unrest in the country to-day to make it advisable for them to continue to advocate the Aldrich currency plan to the exclusion of other plans. He thinks that the bankers followed the wise course when they decided to work hand in hand with whichever party wins out at the forthcoming election.

"This was a tactful move in my opinion," said Mr. Reynolds. "It demonstrates that the bankers of the country are alive to the embarrassments of conditions at present and that they are anxious to lend their assistance in the passage of laws of a character that will place the finances of the nation on a stable and satisfactory basis. It did not seem advisable to continue to work for the Aldrich plan in view of the political campaign that is now in progress and which is conceded to be exceedingly difficult for the political prophet to solve."

Tax Commission Recommendations

Definite announcement has been made by the Iowa tax commission relative to the recommendations which that body will make to the legislature. The report will be completed about October first but it is already given out that these recommendations are certain:

First—A state tax commission to be named by the governor and to act independently of the executive council and other organizations.

Second—Making the full valuation of Iowa property the basis for taxation instead of the one-fourth valuation that exists at present.

Third—Establishment of the office of county assessor.

Fourth—The present law taxing moneys and credits at a flat rate to continue as at present.

The law relating to the taxation of banks will probably be put up to the new tax commission in case the recommendations are adopted and the permanent commission is named. This will be one of the problems which that body will be expected to work out. There is dissatisfaction among bankers over the fact that they are not assessed on the same basis as other people, but it seemed to be impossible for the temporary commission to make a recommendation that was entirely satisfactory. The commission has, however, compiled comparisons showing what other states have done which it is expected will prove of utmost value when once the concrete law-making is started.

Counterfeiters Arrested

It is believed that the government has unearthed some sensational attempts at counterfeiting in the arrest of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Kelley by U. S. officers. The pair were arrested at Vinton and it was in Benton county presumably that they had been working in the making of spurious coins. Kelley was arrested on the charge that he had been passing counterfeit money and a quantity of bogus half dollars were found in his pockets. Later his wife was picked up. It is said that Vinton bankers have recently encountered many spurious half-dollars, quarters and coins of smaller denomination.

Bank Robber in Custody

The Iowa Bankers Association detectives have landed one of the men who some days ago robbed the State Bank at Lake Park, escaping with $3,000, it is thought. Joe Hartman is under arrest at Spirit Lake, and four pals might also have been with him had they not put up such a plausible story that the sheriff let them go upon their promise to report to him later. Needless to say the men never did report, but Hartman and one of his pals was again arrested. One of them broke and ran to a cornfield and made his getaway, leaving Hartman as the only one of the entire group in custody. After the robbery, the men mounted a gasoline motor car, rode as far as St. James, Minn., then turned the car around and started it back at full speed for Spirit Lake. The car jumped the track and fortunately did not collide with any trains. It developed that one of the gang had been boarding at the Lake Park hotel for a week prior to the robbery. The blanket used to deaden the sound of the explosion was stolen from the hotel in question. Blood stains around the bank indicate that one of the men was injured in the explosion. A few nights prior to the Lake Park robbery, the First National at Grand River was entered and $1,000 taken. There were six men in the party and it is thought they are the same who robbed the Lake Park institution.

New Bank at Keokuk

Officers have been announced for the new Security State at Keokuk and it is definitely decided that the bank will soon be on its way with a capital stock of $100,000 and surplus of $25,000. The president will be W. B. Seeley of Mount Pleasant; vice-presidents, J. B. Weil and A. Weber of Keokuk; cashier, W. E. A. French of Keokuk. Directors, John Rouvane, Geo. S. Tucker, Jacob Schouten of Keokuk; D. Turney of Fairfield; B. F. Ketchum of Farmington; J. E. Peterson of New London. W. B. Seeley is president of the Citizens Mutual of Donnellson and of the First National of Farmington. Mr. Ketchum is vice-president of the latter named institution. J. E. Peterson is president of the Iowa State of New London and Mr. Turney is director in the Iowa State Savings of Fairfield.

Advantages of Finger Print Method

Unusual interest has been taken by bankers in the statements made in Des Moines by Warden McClaughry of the Anamosa reformatory relative to the efficacy of the finger print method of identification. This method is being advocated by many bankers as one way of putting an end to forgers. Mr. McClaughry declares that the mode is positive and complete. He suggests that every penitentiary in the state and every insane hospital proceed at once to secure thumb prints of the inmates so that they may be preserved and used later on in identification work.

Foresee Record Crops

Samuel F. Foft, well known banker at Waukegan, has been taking a "straw vote" on the crops of central Iowa. Farmers who come into his bank are asked to give their crop yields. Fifty-two farmers were questioned and the result showed that oats in that vicinity turned out this year an average of 63.7 bushels per acre; winter wheat 38.7 and rye 32.2. Mr. Foft believes this average is maintained throughout the central section of Iowa and he points to the figures as evidence that the state is going to set some new records this year.

Iowa Banks in Splendid Condition

It is probable that the next bank statement issued by the state department following the call of September 11th will show the Iowa banks in splendid condition and ready to handle the crop moving period. Des Moines bankers report tremendous increases in the deposits as compared to a year ago. The Davenport banks report deposits of $28,678,018.80, an increase during the past year of $2,416,606.99. Other cities make similar showings.

For Auditor

Bankers are interested in the political situation in Iowa especially as it relates to the auditor's office. It was thought up to a few months ago that Auditor John L. Bleakly would have little difficulty in securing another term. But things have changed. There is now a bull moose candidate in the field in the person of C. F. Meier of Elkader. There is also a democratic candidate and Auditor Bleakly finds himself in danger of a split field. Mr. Bleakly has been an efficient official and his management of the bank department has given satisfaction to the financiers of the state. The bull moosers have a complete third ticket in the field and there is much apprehension among republican candidates as to just what the outcome will be.

Iowa Banking Notes

Bankers at Webster City are not in the habit of receiving drafts for $80,000 for deposit, and when Mrs. C. C. Morton, wife of a piano tuner, entered one of the institutions with a draft for that amount, she almost caused a panic. But it was placed to her credit. Mrs. Morton is one of the heirs to a $3,000,000 estate left in Virginia and the draft was received by her through the mails a few days before she placed it in one of the banks.

The Exchange Savings is the name of a new institution at Dickens, Clay county. The capital stock is $20,000. The president is H. N. Smith; vice-president, W. M. Kenderdine; cashier, E. P. Flint; assistant cashier, C. F. Walsh.

A committee of attorneys of Jasper county have recommended that disbarment proceedings be commenced against P. E. Johansen, an attorney at Mason City, but formerly president of the First National at Colfax. It is charged that as representative of an estate, Johansen engineered a lawsuit that was not strictly straight.

The Peoples Savings at Crawfordsville has filed articles with a capital stock of $20,000. W. J. Lease is president; J. E. Davis is vice-president and J. R. Jones is cashier.

The Cleghorn State has renewed its articles for a term of twenty years.

The banks are starting their annual prize-giving contests for the biggest ear of corn or the most corn grown on any single acre. The crops this year are so good that it is anticipated that the judges in the various towns will have trouble in awarding the premiums.

The marriage of Philip M. Casady, son of Simon Casady, well known Des Moines banker, to Miss Nina Barnes Miller of Minneapolis has been announced.

The Union Savings at Davenport declared a quarterly dividend of $2.50 per share and transferred $15,000 to the surplus account.

A trust deed for $10,000,000 to the Harris Trust and Savings of Chicago has been filed in the district court at Cedar Rapids. It covers a proposed bond issue by the Smith-Dows corporation of Cedar Rapids.

J. C. Jensen has been chosen on the board of directors of the Commercial National at Council Bluffs, succeeding the late J. F. Wilcox.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Crawford have returned from an extended trip to Europe. Mr. Crawford is president of the Valley National Bank.

B. E. Sebern, cashier of the Farmers Savings at Manson, has recovered sufficiently from a stroke of paralysis to be removed from the hospital at Rockwell to his home at Manson.

The Iowa State at Mason City has voted to increase its capital stock from $50,000 to $75,000.

Five indictments have been returned against E. A. Boggs, formerly of Waterloo, and he has been arrested by the sheriff of Grundy county charged with embezzlement and obtaining money under false pretences. It is averred that Boggs flimflammed the bank at Morrison out of $62,000 without giving good security. At a hearing held in Waterloo recently, Boggs admitted that he had spent in the preceding twelve months $190,000 on a monument company and testified that the money was borrowed from various banks, mainly without giving security. Boggs had been prominent in the service of the interurban company and had established a line of credit which enabled him to work his schemes. He was arrested at Kansas City after detectives had searched for him for a week.

Sioux City

By JOHN J. BIDDISON.

Of most importance to bankers of this vicinity this week is the death on the night of September 30th of J. E. Henriques, secretary of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company, whose passing away at the age of 65 years from a stroke of apoplexy has been a source of keen regret to his friends. Mr. Henriques had been in the banking business since young manhood, starting in Chicago. He there achieved distinction for saving the books of the institution where he was employed. He was known over Iowa as a Shriner and a Democrat. He was once a candidate for state treasurer on the Democratic ticket. He had been a resident of Sioux City for 14 years and prior to that lived in Marshalltown and Cedar Rapids. His body will be cremated at St. Paul.

Banking Notes

Carl Norrbom, for several years past a teller in the Woodbury County Savings Bank, has resigned and taken up his duties as cashier of the American Savings Bank, filling the place made vacant by the resignation of Albert Wedgewood.

The Witten (S. D.) German-American Savings Bank has closed its doors, being unable to continue operations with the scant business it was doing. It had been known for some time to be weak. The last report showed but $5,000 deposits, an indebtedness of $4,000 on borrowed money and only $310 in cash.

F. W. Converse, president of the Iowa Savings Bank, of Estherville, Ia., has disposed of the greater part of his holdings in that institution to Mack J. Groves and will move his family to Los Angeles to reside. Mr. Converse has managed the Iowa Savings Bank since 1905, and during that time it has doubled its deposits.

The Farmers Savings Bank has been organized at Cushing, Ia., with the following officers and directors: Glen M. Gracey, president; Geo. A. Dewell, vice-president; Ralph Evans, cashier; Ed. Ferry, Hans Grell, Ferd Hummel, A. E. Rekenenthaler, Wm. Laing, and Geo. Volkert, directors.

B. E. Sebern, cashier of the Farmers Savings Bank of Rockwell City, Ia., has sufficiently recovered from his paralytic stroke of last August to be taken to his home in Manson. His condition is still precarious, however.

Among the Visiting Bankers

The following bankers were in the city during the past week: W. E. Briggs, cashier Stock Yards National, South St. Paul, Minn.; C. R. Richards, cashier of the Ocheyedan (Iowa) Savings Bank; Harry Wentzy, president, Security Savings, Rapid City, S. D.; Herman Fortin, cashier, Farmers Bank, Salix, Iowa; C. R. McDowell, cashier, First National, Doon, Iowa; H. G. Morrison, cashier, First National, Peterson, Iowa; P. B. Dirks, cashier, Citizens State, Oacoma, S. D.; A. J. Grainger, assistant cashier, Farmers Bank, Salix, Iowa; A. G. Ohlson, cashier, Vivian (S. D.) State Bank.

W. H. Pratt, Jr., president of the Brule National, Chamberlain, S. D., was in Sioux City Monday on his way to Clinton, Iowa, having received a telegram that his mother was very sick.

Central Credit Bureau as an aid to Examiners

Too many precautions can not be taken by banking departments to protect and safeguard the interests of the depositors and banks. Unscrupulous borrowers, speculators and bank promoters are ever devising schemes to defraud. Our experiences in the past have shown that many of the bank failures in this state might have been prevented had a proper system of co-operation existed between national and state examiners. A system which would show the shifting of undesirable loans, the control of institutions carried on borrowed money, the loan lines of over-extended borrowers, and one which would permit of a free and constant interchange of this information between the national and state banking departments.

At a conference of examiners held at the custom house on July 7, 1911, a plan was suggested which has met with the approval of many examiners. Since that time George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., superintendent of banks of the state of New York, has established a "Credit Bureau" in his department, and it has occurred to me that your readers might be interested in its work as an aid in making examinations more thorough and effective.

Credit Bureau

The Credit Bureau is maintained in the branch office of the department at No. 60 Broadway, New York. We have a complete card record of every borrower of five thousand dollars and over in state institutions. We have a record of the directors of every institution and facilities for ascertaining their outside business and corporate affiliations. We have a record of holding companies; a record of inactive securities and a record of every share of bank stock that is hypothecated in any institution under our supervision. This information is obtained from many sources, the principal one being the examiners' reports. We have a complete record of failures, bankruptcies and of large judgments; a memorandum of borrowers who are in financial difficulties, and other information which may in any way affect the standing of our banks or the credit of bank borrowers. This data is carefully compiled so as to be of assistance to examiners in their examinations.

Loan Lines

At each examination information regarding loans of five thousand dollars or over is taken from the records of the institution by our examiners, and is immediately forwarded to the Credit Bureau for compilation. The forms used call for the following:

1. Name of borrower.
2. Business.

This becomes rather important for the purpose of ascertaining the business in which the borrowers are engaged. Sometimes through this medium we learn of instances where clerks and others are used as dummy borrowers. You do not have to look far back to find instances, where a longshoreman borrowed fifty thousand dollars on an unsecured note, a bookkeeper one hundred thousand dollars, clerks sums ranging from thirty thousand to one hundred thousand dollars, all for the benefit of officials or of interests friendly to them. A number of these interesting notes are now uncollected exhibits in the hands of the receivers of closed banks. In examining so-called bills receivable, the dissimilarity in business of the makers and borrowers is often a warning to the examiner to be careful of accommodation paper. At any rate the examiner will

Joseph A. Broderick, head of the credit bureau of the New York state banking department explains its methods and points out the benefits. Information is safe guarded. Neat aid to making loans have a fair idea as to whether the business of the borrower is such as to entitle him to the credit granted.

3. Address.
4. Loans without collateral.

In this column are listed all loans which are not secured by collateral. Purchased paper is listed, but in this case the examiner places the two letters "P. P." to indicate this class of paper.

5. Loans with collateral.

In this column are listed all loans secured by collateral, excepting loans secured by active stock exchange collateral.

6. Kind.

Loans secured by real estate collateral are designated by the letters "R. E." If by bank stock the letters "B. S." are used. All other loans, excepting those secured by stock exchange collateral, are marked "O. C.," meaning "other collateral." In the case of bank stock the examiner lists every loan secured by bank stock (regardless of the smallness of the loan), the name of the borrower, the number of shares hypothecated, the name of the person in whose name the stock has been issued.

7. Endorsements and Guarantees.

Under this heading the liabilities of borrowers as endorsers and guarantors are duly noted. The so-called bills receivable are listed and the examiner designates them by the letters "B. R."

8. Approximate Deposit Balance.

This column is more for the use of the examiner than for the Credit Bureau. It is of great assistance in judging paper. For instance, the examiner after having listed the loans under the respective columns calls for the deposit ledger of the institution for the purpose of getting an idea of the class of deposit carried by the borrower. If the account is an active one and a fair balance is carried, it shows a healthy condition of the account. If the balance is small and inactive, it is a warning to the examiner that it might be a good plan to look up the standing of the borrower. If no balance is carried the loan is either an old note which will bear investigation before being passed at face value, or purchased paper. The deposit ledger tells so many tales. Since adopting this blank we know of a number of instances wherein it was found that loans were really being maintained without any record on the books, favored parties having the privilege of maintaining continuous overdrafts by being permitted to draw against uncollected funds. Kiting transactions have been discovered and while the officers have been able in many instances to explain the circumstances, still, under our present form of examination, these explanations have to be made before the board of directors. In fact, all loan lines are discussed by the examiner with the board of directors before the completion of the examination.

The Credit Bureau as an Aid to Examiners

furnished with a list of matters of importance which should receive special attention at the institution he is examining. For instance, borrowers who have failed or gone into bankruptcy since the previous examination of the bank; judgments against borrowers; old loans that are apparently being kept alive by adding interest at each renewal; so-called bills receivable that are remaining stationary; investment securities of questionable value; doubtful collateral; holding companies; the officers' and directors' outside business affiliations. The examiner in charge of the Credit Bureau is frequently consulted during the course of an examination as to the financial standing of directors, credit of borrowers, their bank loan liabilities in other institutions, the valuation of securities and other matters arising during the course of the examination.

Special Work

The real work in this bureau comes in the comparison of loan lines. Sometimes a loan taken by itself might appear to be all right, but when it is considered in connection with the circumstances in other institutions, a different condition arises. If a borrower is found to be increasing his line, or opening a number of bank accounts, inquiry will be made as to his credit standing. If it develops that he is in an over-extended position, the national bank and clearing house examiners are consulted and records compared. A thorough investigation will follow. If necessary a call will be made at the office of the banks interested and definite information obtained as to the borrower's loan liability on a stated day. Over-extension if discovered in time may be corrected. Not long ago, upon investigation, it was learned that a certain concern maintained borrowing accounts in twenty-seven banking institutions. Many of the loans were granted on the basis of a false financial statement. A number of national banks forced a reduction of the loans. An attempt was made to borrow the necessary funds from up-state banks, but this plan was promptly discouraged by our bureau. Just a few weeks ago a prominent business man in an up-state city was found to be in an over-extended position. Though borrower in both national and state banks, no one bank had a correct financial statement on file. Co-operation between examiners in this district would have disclosed this weakness months ago.

Purchased Paper

Commercial paper has come to be recognized as an excellent secondary reserve. The increased demand has brought evils. Irresponsible brokers are attempting to sell second class and questionable paper, particularly to small country institutions. The bureau investigates the standing of brokers and advises the examiners of the lines to watch. Paper is sometimes sold by two brokers, one unknown to the other. An instance is known where a broker discontinued selling paper for a corporation because of an unsatisfactory condition of affairs. The company wrote to the different banks holding its paper agreeing to sell notes direct and to divide the broker's commission. Later this concern failed and the banks sustained considerable loss. Small banks are advised that by purchasing through reputable brokers, authenticity of signature, a reasonable guarantee of credit standing and fair guard against over-extension of borrower, is assured. The examiner in charge of the Credit Bureau frequently consults note brokers in regard to the credit standing of customers and the outstanding commercial paper liability.

Directors' Relations with Their Institutions

Some directors, who appear on record as large stockholders, are found to be hypothecating practically their entire stock holdings. Some even go so far as to borrow upon the shares which, under the law, they are required to hold free and clear from incumbrance. But the department very promptly declares such directors disqualified. Their stock holdings give them an influential voice in the management; but a sense of fair play does not prevent some from discounting their unsecured notes at the bank with which they are connected and their collateralizing loans at other banks. Nor does it prevent them from sanctioning unreasonable loans to corporations which they control and to individuals with whom they are associated. This is the class of directors we are watching. Directors must play fair with depositors and stockholders. Borrowers must play fair with banks. Banks must play fair with the banking department.

Safeguarding Credit Information

The credit of borrowers in state institutions will never in any way be injured by any indiscreet criticism by bank examiners. The credit standing of a customer is never questioned, unless the weakness is a matter of public knowledge or record, or unless it is absolutely necessary to protect the interests of our institution. Our bureau is an important innovation in banking supervision, which has come to stay. Its records of borrowers' bank loans, of securities, of officers' and directors' outside affiliations, of dummy borrowers, of borrowers who have been defaulted in the past, of bank stock hypothecated, of so-called holding companies, and of all other information in its files, have been obtained from confidential sources and its use is scrupulously safeguarded. This bureau is an aid to examiners in determining the value of notes and securities. It is a check on borrowers who obtain loans based upon false statements; who exchange notes; who discount accommodation notes as bills receivable; who borrow at several banks without knowledge to the others. It tends to curb the activities of unscrupulous promoters who purchase the control of banking institutions on borrowed money, in order that they may obtain additional facilities for conducting their speculations.

OUT-OF-TOWN VISITORS

Among the out-of-town bankers in Chicago this week were Col. J. S. Aisthorpe, president of the First Bank and Trust Company, Cairo, Ill., chairman of the executive council, Illinois Bankers Association; B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National, Champaign, Ill.; Arthur Reynolds, president of the Des Moines National. A. D. Campbell, assistant cashier, Hanover National, New York, stopped in Chicago on his way home from the Peoria convention. Mr. Campbell was very enthusiastic as to general conditions and said that he expects 1913 to be a very prosperous year. J. T. M. Johnston, president of the National Reserve Bank, Kansas City, says that crops in that section of the country never were better, and that their marketing will be reflected in increased activity in all lines of business. He says that sentiment in the territory tributary to Kansas City is all in favor of Governor Wilson. C. G. Lang, assistant cashier of the Kahoka (Mo.) Savings Bank, chairman of Group 1 of the Missouri association, spent several days in Chicago. Groups 1 and 6 will hold a joint meeting at Hannibal on October 17th. Mr. Lang says that a large and enthusiastic gathering is expected.

New Burroughs Bulletin On New Bank Systems

Our new Systems Bulletin for Commercial and Savings Banks, just off the press, describes some last-minute methods used by large and small banks to reduce their operating costs.

For instance it tells how one bank effected a great saving in time and labor by using the latest style Burroughs to do much of the work that heretofore had been done mentally, because the ordinary adding machines couldn't touch it.

The Bulletin gives many of the time and labor saving features of the Burroughs Duplex as applied by large and small banks everywhere.

We will send a copy of the Bulletin, free, of course, to any bank or banker who asks for it. Just ask for Systems Bulletin No. 497.

OFFICIALS OF DEFUNCT BANK INDICTED

On Saturday last a special grand jury at Boise, Idaho, returned fifteen indictments against three former officials of the defunct Boise State Bank. Those indicted are J. W. Keefe, assistant cashier; Eugene B. Payne, cashier, and J. W. Mehargue, a director. They are charged with making false reports of the bank's condition to the state examiner. All have been released on bonds. The bank was closed about a year ago.

RETURNS FROM PEORIA

W. G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, has returned from Peoria, where he attended the convention of the Illinois state highway commissioners, that of the Illinois Bankers Association, and the meeting of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association. Mr. Edens expressed the hope that the resolutions adopted at the good roads meeting at Peoria and the work of the good roads committee of the bankers' association will be felt when the legislature convenes next winter, and be effective in securing favorable consideration on the part of the members of the legislature for good roads legislation. A number of Illinois bankers are quite active in the affairs of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, including S. E. Bradt of De Kalb, Senator O. W. Johnson of Ottawa, H. G. Herget of Pekin, Charles George of Albany, L. L. Emmerson of Mount Vernon, O. P. Bourland of Pontiac, Thomas Sudduth of Springfield, C. C. Craig of Galesburg and O. W. Hoit of Geneseo.

ROAD CONGRESS MEETS AT ATLANTIC CITY

The American Road Congress held its convention this week in Atlantic City. Much enthusiasm and interest were displayed by those in attendance. The subject of highway building was taken up and discussed very thoroughly. The American Bar Association was represented by two delegates from New York and one from Massachusetts. This association is to have charge of the legislative section of the congress, the purpose of which is to promote good roads legislation. There also was a conference of the leading educational institutions of the country held under the auspices of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education. It is said that there is an inadequate supply of engineers to carry on the work of road building, and this is one of the difficulties with which the congress is confronted. The object of this conference was to see if the colleges and universities of the country could not supply the required number of engineers to carry on this work. Logan Waller Page, director of the United States office of public roads, presided over the congress.

PLAN TO FINANCE COTTON GROWERS OF TEXAS

As a result of the announcement by the San Antonio National that it would lend $500,000 to farmers at the rate of 6 per cent to assist them in the marketing of the cotton crop, and the further announcement by other Texas banks of their intention to do likewise, and prompted by a desire to aid the farmers in this respect, J. Hirsch of the Corpus Christi National, chairman of the Texas bankers committee on agriculture, has sent out to members of the association a letter in which is expressed the hope that the members can see their way clear to give some assistance to this worthy cause. The plan adopted by the San Antonio National is to lend not exceeding $35 per bale, basis middling, the loan to be secured by cotton in warehouse. Loans are to be made only to those actually growing the cotton. Officers of the Farmers Union have worked out a complete plan which appears to safeguard the interests of the bank, embodying a form of note, warehouse receipt, and bond, the latter being a bond of the warehouseman, joined by substantial local bondsmen, setting forth the fact that the cotton pledged is the property of the person receiving the loan and reciting that there are no liens or encumbrances against it. The request is made that if the bank addressed decides to render aid in the matter it publicly advertise that fact. It is believed that the note, warehouse receipt, and bond will enable the banks to finance these loans with eastern or foreign connections, should it become burdensome upon the local institutions to carry the load; also that a general movement to assist the farmer will result in obtaining and maintaining fair prices for cotton, and that a great service will be rendered the public in facilitating the marketing of Texas' staple crop.

DIRECTORS CO-OPERATE WITH EXAMINERS

At the recent convention of national and state examiners held in New York, Horace S. Andrews of that state told of an order issued some time ago by the banking department of New York requiring the examiners to call a meeting of the board of directors or trustees of all banks and trust companies which they might examine, for the purpose of conferring with them regarding its affairs. One of the principal difficulties encountered is getting all of the directors together, as the notice often is short and the examiner cannot tell just when he will be able to present his findings to the board. At these meetings are read all loans held by the institution which are not secured by actually quoted stock exchange collateral. In larger institutions all loans over five thousand dollars and in smaller institutions all loans over two thousand dollars are read. The schedule which is used at these meetings, and which forms a part of the report, is forwarded to the superintendent and calls for the directors to go on record, first, as to worthless loans; second, loans of questionable value; and third, slow loans. There also is discussed any pertinent matter of sufficient importance to merit attention. Much good has been accomplished as a result of this rule in the way of changes in accounting systems, and numerous loans which the examiner has felt to be undesirable, but which would not readily be admitted to be so by an officer, have been frankly conceded by the board as being improper, immediately to be charged off or classed as slow assets. This system has met with universal commendation. Mr. Andrews stated that he believed directors should be such in reality and not merely in name. Recently he has made a practice of examining minute books in order to ascertain the attendance of directors at board meetings. Some of the records which he saw were most surprising. In one case he found that a director had not attended a meeting in over two years, in several cases there was no attendance for a year and in numerous instances the attendance was only two or three meetings out of twelve. He declared himself in favor of a law automatically dropping a director who does not attend at least 50 per cent of the yearly meetings of the board, or who is absent from a certain number of consecutive meetings.

SPECIAL LETTER ON CORN PRICES

Messrs. Ware and Leland, corn and provision brokers of this city, have issued a special corn letter in which they say that the recent cold spell no doubt has caught a lot of corn before its maturity. They believe, however, that the damage will not be noticed much until the weather warms up. These brokers hold that corn at less than a cent a pound is not too dear, and that purchases of either May or December futures will prove very attractive investments.

KANSAS BANK DEPOSITS REACH HIGH MARK

Kansas bank deposits now are higher than ever before in the history of that state. They have increased $7,000,000 in the last ninety days.

ments of the relationship which exists between banks and newspaper publications to be found in the English language.

CHICAGO is to have another class newspaper and it promises to be of the very highest type. John M. Glenn, secretary of the Illinois Manufacturers Association, is sponsor for the company which will print the Manufacturers News, of which the subscription price is to be $3. Mr. Glenn has promised to send a sample copy to those who will request it.

SECRETARY ARCH B. DAVIS of the Kentucky Bankers Association made a fine report at the Louisville convention. He shows a membership of 97 per cent of all the banks in the state, and all dues are paid up. Mr. Davis and his friends believe that this is quite as good a showing as can be made by any state, owing to the habit they have in some states of carrying their delinquents until they get ready to pay up and be good fellows.

ONLY three years ago the Kentucky association had not much to brag of in the way of surplus. In fact, the association was $1,000 or more in debt, and had been so for several years. Then they discovered Mr. Davis.

NOW the association is a bloated bondholder, having not less than $3,000 invested in first-class railway securities. The net turned over for the past year was something in excess of $1,400.

SO vigorous a campaign did Mr. Davis conduct on the subject of rates for bank burglary insurance that banks of Kentucky are not now paying much over 25 per cent of what formerly was paid. Davis has the knack of making his members feel that they ought to be loyal to the association, and that no better way of showing it could be discovered than by turning over this class of their business.

THE building up of the Kentucky association has been accomplished in a large part by the organization of the group system. Rivalry early began to show itself as between the groups, until to-day six out of the eleven groups have every bank a member. Last year only two groups could show a clean sheet.

DURING the Illinois convention at Peoria the directors of the First National of that place added $50,000 to surplus, making capital and surplus of that institution $850,000. The First is considered one of the solid institutions of Peoria.

"PLEASE accept congratulations on your enterprise in getting out the fine edition of the 'BANKER' so promptly upon the adjournment of the recent Peoria convention. It surely was a 'daisy.'—W. S. Rearick.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY'S publications announced for October 5th include a charming Jessie Willcox Smith edition of Clement C. Moore's well-known poem, "Twas the Night Before Christmas;" a new novel, "Forfeit," by Clara Lathrop Strong; a boy's book, "Licky and His Gang," by Grace Sartwell Mason; "Egyptian Days," by Philip S. Marden; "The Gateway of Scotland," by A. G. Bradley; "Gallant Little Wales," by Jeannette Marks; "The Best Stories to Tell to Children," by Sara Cone Bryant, whose preceding volumes on this subject have been so helpful and popular.

IT is less than three weeks since the appearance in this country of Grant Richard's "Caviare," and the publishers, Houghton Mifflin Co., announce that a third edition is already in print. "Caviare" was published somewhat earlier in England and is well established as one of the most popular of the fall books.

IF Roosevelt felt he was sure to lose the fight, would he compromise and quit if offered the job of opening the Panama Canal with all the "lime light" he could desire—all to himself?

COL. FARNSWORTH is in Detroit on important business this week. He has his forces hard at work on the 1912 proceedings book.

"WE want to congratulate you upon the excellence of your pre-convention number as well as your report of the Peoria convention."—William Hazzard.

THE State Institution for Savings at Minneapolis is putting out a neat little paper called "Thrift." It touches upon banking, saving, and includes departments for the housewife as well. Tells how to make crab apple jelly, quince butter, etc. Pretty clever!

LOWELL (IND.) NATIONAL tells the farmer his harvest isn't safely put away until the money is in the bank.

CHAS. ALDEN SELTZER, who wrote "The Two-Gun Man," the best cowboy story in ten years, has a new book out, the "Coming of the Law," which is said to be cattle country fiction of a high order. Outing Publishing Company.

MELVIN W. ELLIS of Charles City, Ia., who went over to Detroit on the big "Special," has completed his month's vacation "down East" and is back on the job with the Security Trust.

NEVER before have we witnessed constantly increasing business activity through the ordinarily dull weeks of summer and never before has business continued to expand during a presidential campaign. This condition, coupled with the fact that nearly every crop, whether grain, fruit or vegetable, is setting a new record this year, brings us into the closing months of 1912 surrounded by substantial prosperity.—Security National, Minneapolis.

THE trusts contributed 75 per cent of Roosevelt's campaign funds in 1904. Did Morgan give his $150,000 to a real enemy of Wall Street, or is J. P. Foolish with money?

THE resignation bluff didn't work, so we are told, for President J. D. Phillips is said to have promptly accepted it. On the other hand the fuss-button resignee retired to the woods or to a sanitarium and sent out a c. q. d. recall of the resignation.

COL. AISTHORPE was in Chicago this week in a fine humor to call bluffs. He doesn't believe that any action toward releasing the resignation can be taken except by the administrative committee or by the council. He thinks Crampton is out since October 1st, when he made his resignation effective.

THERE is a good lesson in one or two recent vacancies at as many Chicago bank counters. They were new business getters and doing well.

WHEN the Detroit convention was coming on apace they were not to be pacified that the A. B. A. officials and program speakers were to be cared for before other applicants could be assigned at the headquarters hotel.

ONE of them wrote an open letter to the banking papers and they published it (except THE CHICAGO BANKER), threatening to march upon the hotel committee and the Pontchartrain with a musket.

THEY were sore at this publication for not using their abusive talk and threats. It is said that these open letters caused an inquiry to be made which decided their employers that when on the road the bank and its work were only secondary considerations.

THE records showed more letters sent and more care displayed over their hotel reservations than over plans for work at the conventions. Other matters were neglected till their aristocratic notions as to hotels had been satisfied.

MUCH of their talk was about the food, and "rooms with bath," at past and coming conventions. It was but a short distance to the parting of the ways.

THERE is a moral in all this, with the additional further warning not to live entirely up to your income (nor beyond), for when the shut-off man comes along it's hard on an innocent family which has a right to better things.

S. E. WARD is the new cashier of the Commerce, New York. He began at Mansfield, Ohio. Former cashier, Nielson Olcott, now is a dignified vice-president. Has quite a record behind him already.

THE Farmers Bank at Bogard, Mo., operating as a private bank since 1903, has been granted a state charter with an authorized capital of $25,000. O. H. Fleming has been elected president; P. W. Pitts, vice-president; and J. E. Johnson, cashier.

THE bankers of Idaho have a new issue. Suit has been brought against the American Bonding Company of New York on the state bank examiner's bond of $50,000.

NEGLECT to examine the failed bank at Hailey for more than a year is the charge. This opens up a wide field and it may stick.

STATE EXAMINER F. E. BAXTER, of Ohio, has asked Attorney-General Hogan for a ruling on that section of Proposal No. 34, adopted by the people of the state in the special election September 3d, which provides for the inspection of private banks before they are entitled to use the word "banker," "bank" or "banking." He wishes to know whether the proposal is self-operating or whether legislation will be needed to put it into effect.

THE question is of some importance to the department. If no enabling legislation is required the provision will be in full force and effect January 1, 1913, when the majority of the amendments become effective. To pass the necessary legislation would probably require several months, and, with a probable additional delay provided by the initiative and referendum, it might be nearly a year before the work can be undertaken.

CHARLES H. HUTTIG is back at his desk in the big Third National, St. Louis, and a published interview on financial and banking conditions demonstrates his firm conviction that prosperity is general and likely to be permanent.

"PROPOSED Bank to Double Capital," is a promising and hopeful title line in the Financier.

DID you ever see such prompt and willing witnesses, of similar size, as those who appear to testify to their 1904 Roosevelt campaign subscriptions?

AFTER all, that $150,000 campaign subscription which J. Pierpont made to the T. R. fund was but ten days' interest on the $69,000,000 profit to the house of Morgan & Co. on the Tennessee Coal & Iron gobble, which the Strenuous One allowed to be put over contrary to law.

are that the date will be the 20th or 21st. Many western investment companies and the bond departments of a great many of the banks are interested and expect to participate. George B. Caldwell, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of this city, is president of the association and was very active in its organization. A special train from Chicago over the New York Central Lines is being arranged for by W. N. Record, 210-20 Postal Telegraph Building, this city. Reservations can be made through him by correspondence.

RALPH N. BALLOU ON GENERAL SITUATION

Ralph N. Ballou, cashier of the National Produce Bank of Chicago, says that business is good and that the present rates for money are from 5½ to 6 per cent. Deposits are holding up well and a general feeling of optimism is prevalent. Mr. Ballou says that politics will not have any effect upon business conditions.

PAYING OFF DES MOINES RAILWAY BONDS

Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings is paying off the $25,000 Des Moines City Railway underlying obligation of the first mortgage gold bonds, dated October 1, 1889, of the Des Moines Street Railroad Company at par and interest.

PRAISES CREDIT SYSTEM

David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, at a farewell banquet tendered the 400 foreign delegates to the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce, declared that the credit system by which commerce is carried on is the world's strongest assurance of universal peace.

NEW BOND ISSUE BY HARRIS TRUST

Harris Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago is bringing out in this market $2,100,000 first mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds of the Texas Power and Light Company. The company serving a population of over 125,000 does the entire commercial electric light and power business in twelve of the most important towns and cities in the most thickly settled section of Texas, including Waco, Sherman, Paris, Temple, Palestine, Tyler, Cleburne, Gainesville, Brownwood, Waxahachie, Hillsboro and Bonham, and also the gas business in four of these cities. The bonds are due June 1, 1937, and are being offered at 97 and accrued interest.

BANKERS CLUB TO MEET

The Bankers Club of Chicago will hold a meeting on Saturday evening, October 19th, at the Blackstone. Dinner will be served at 6:30. Frank O. Wetmore, vice-president of the First National, is president; William A. Heath, president of the Live Stock Exchange National, is vice-president, and W. D. C. Street is secretary and treasurer, who, together with F. L. Hankey and Nelson N. Lampert, constitute the executive committee. B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National at Champaign, ex-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, will address the members.

Edmund D. Hulbert

Edmund D. Hulbert, vice-president of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company of Chicago, returned this week from a three months' trip to Europe. He says that while London is strong financially, heavy responsibilities are being shouldered at the present time. France, as always, is comfortable and in a position to comfort others. Conditions in Germany are better than they were six months ago. Naturally, some apprehension is felt in Europe as to the possible effect of the Balkan trouble on finance, but it is difficult to predict at present just what this will be. The attitude of England toward the United States would be more friendly but for the Panama Canal controversy. This, however, will not affect the investment by Englishmen in American securities, which are in good demand. Mr. Hulbert looks for firmer money in England next month. Quite a number of American loans are coming due there, which will have some effect upon financial conditions here. Rates are likely to be firm all over the world for some time to come. There has been a crop failure abroad this year—almost a complete failure in England and a partial failure in France and Germany. As a result of this it probably will be necessary to import oats in France before the next crop. Mr. Hulbert says that the general feeling of cheerfulness and optimism which prevails in the United States does not exist in Europe.

It is reported that the Colonial Trust and Savings Bank of this city contemplates an increase of its capital stock from $600,000 to $1,000,000. It is said that the matter probably will be acted upon by the board of directors shortly.

ON the subject of private bank supervision by the city of Chicago, Corporation Counsel Sexton has sent an opinion to the judiciary committee, stating that the city has power to regulate and exercise control over private banking business within the city. The law department was instructed to draft an ordinance.

HAMILTON, Ont., has sent out a fine booklet by the "Industries" department. The claim is made and pretty well justified that Hamilton "is the manufacturing center of Canada."

BANKING facilities of Hamilton are of the very highest order. There are 28 banks and branches doing business and growing up with the city, and are liberal in the extension of credit, where credit is deserved.

NELSON H. GREENE reports a wireless message from "the premier bull fighter" of Mexico who says he is enroute to Illinois "to make war on a certain bull-moose who is making trouble for Governor Deneen and President Taft."

GREENE doesn't know whether the Mexican will go after B. F. Harris or Medill McCormick, or lay in wait for Frank Funk.

"WOULD you, Gov. Wilson, have signed the four tariff measures vetoed by President Taft a few weeks ago, if you had been president?" This query is put to the Democratic candidate by Secretary Nagel. It is to be repeated by the Republican spellbinders who trail Wilson on his present western circuit.

C. N. FOWLER says "they tried that question and answer scheme on Woodrow when he ran for governor. And do you know," said C. N., "that it contributed largely to his election?"

THE trouble was then that the governor's answers were entirely his own and not those expected. They pleased the people.

We are still believers in a big bull market later on, and would govern our market operations accordingly."

A PROTEST has been filed with the secretary of state by the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank and the Northern Trust Co. against the use of the name of the "Illinois Northern Trust and Savings Bank" by the company recently incorporated under that name to do business within the city limits of this city, in view of the confusion and conflict that will arise from the similarity of names.

THE LIVE STOCK Exchange National BANK OF CHICAGO

President William R. Hamby to Texas Bankers Association

General William R. Hamby, who was president of the Texas Bankers Association at the time of the convention in May, but who was too ill to make an address or to be present, was paid a most unusual compliment by the delegates. A resolution was passed extending their sympathy to him and requesting that upon his recovery his annual address be prepared and published for the good of the association. General Hamby has complied with this request, and it goes out to the Texas bankers in the shape of an open communication published through THE CHICAGO BANKER and other financial papers. General Hamby made quite a record as president of the Texas association and has included many recommendations in his prepared paper which follows.—Ed.

Expressing profound regret that sickness denied me the pleasure of attending the San Antonio meeting last May, I wish to acknowledge my debt of gratitude for the messages of love and sympathy in my affliction, and my grateful appreciation of the honors conferred upon me, and in compliance with the gracious action of the association that I prepare a written report in lieu of my annual address, the following suggestions are herewith submitted:

Our country is at peace with the world; the people of our state, prosperous and happy; and with prospects for the coming harvest as good as have been known for many years, certainly no meeting of the association was ever held under more auspicious conditions.

Texas is a grand state; it is an empire in extent and a continent in resources, and while our growth has been marvelous, yet the development of our agricultural and industrial riches is yet in its infancy. You have exercised a potential influence in the results so far achieved; your hearts are in this great work; your hands are at the plow, and your shoulders to every wheel of progress. Your intelligent co-operation, your energy and your patriotism will be rewarded by making our state the richest and our people the happiest on earth.

Importance of Official Examinations

The Texas Bankers Association is a kind of social democracy—a mutual benefit organization; there is no privilege or benefit that is not accorded to all without distinction. No matter whether it is a city bank with $1,000,000 capital, or a country bank with $10,000 capital, equal benefits and equal privileges are enjoyed. It should be the ambition of every member to make his bank an honor to the association, and the pride of his shareholders and depositors. It should be the aim of every banker to dignify and elevate the standard of banking; the higher the standard of integrity the higher will be the standard of banking; the higher the standard of banking the higher will be the standard of citizenship. We should welcome every security and every regulation that strengthens the bank, that eliminates the speculator and that protects and safeguards the depositor and the shareholder.

I hope the day is not far distant when the association will have its own auditors who will work along the lines of and in connection with our state and national bank examiners.

Importance of official examinations urged. Praises Miss M. L. Riddle, editor of the "Record," and secretary J. W. Hoopes. Education and agriculture legitimate subjects for helpful attention. Wants U. S. sub-treasury and a "Blue Sky" law for Texas. Mutual insurance advocated Banks are public institutions, and every banker holds a place of honor and trust. The conservative banker should welcome the strictest regulation and control; the reckless banker should be forced to accept them or be driven from the field. Incompetency, recklessness, and speculation have been the fruitful sources of every financial disaster. With proper safeguards of regulation and examination these troubles will be removed, and while they will not eliminate the possibility of future panics, they will minimize the danger. We should make the standard of banking so high that membership in Texas Bankers Association will be an honor that can be attained only by those who invite rigid examinations and welcome every safeguard of conservative banking.

Last Convention Useful and Instructive

While the executive council gave much thought and attention in arranging the program and securing orators for the San Antonio convention, the association was richly rewarded by the fruits of their labors. The address of Mr. Tilton of Alabama on Crimes Against Cotton; of Mr. Pondrom on Overdrafts; of Mr. Ferguson on Currency Legislation; Mr. Adams on Compress Receipts and Bills of Lading; of Judge Kone on Agriculture; of Judge Glass on Railroad Stock and Bond Law and of Mr. Burns on "Those Who Endeavor to Live by Their Wits," were all interesting and logical, and the San Antonio meeting will go down in history as one of the most useful and instructive ever held by the Texas Bankers Association.

Report of Officers

I wish to express my thanks and to acknowledge my appreciation of the faithful and efficient work of Secretary Hoopes, Treasurer Rodgers and Detective Boyd, and of the cordial and intelligent co-operation of the executive council in their work for the growth and prosperity of the association.

Especial attention is directed to the interesting report of Secretary Hoopes; it is so comprehensive, and his suggestions so intelligent and instructive that further discussion of the matters mentioned by him is unnecessary.

Notwithstanding the deficiency in the cost of the publication of the Texas Bankers Record, and the increased expenses of the detective department, the report of Treasurer Rodgers shows the association to be in a healthy financial condition.

The report of Detective Boyd shows he has been active and vigilant. The department is of great importance to every member of the association and should be broadened and strengthened in every possible manner. The certainty of the arrest and conviction of the criminal is the surest guarantee of protection.

Texas Bankers Record

When the association decided at the Dallas convention in May, 1911, to establish the Texas Bankers Record it was not contemplated it should ever become a money maker, but only an official bulletin through which to reach its members, and through which members could reach each other, but under the capable management of Secretary Hoopes it is now practically self-sustaining. The editorial department, under the intelligent direction of Miss M. L. Riddle, and its mechanical execution, will compare favorably with any of the banking journals in the United States, and far surpasses many of them. The Record is a credit to the association and should receive the hearty support of every member.

Texas Woman's Bankers Association

Texas has always been the pioneer in civilizing and christianizing the savage, and the recent establishment of the Texas Woman's Bankers Association is only another mile stone in the march of progress. It will be a valuable auxiliary to the parent association and will multiply the interest in our annual conventions. While business matters are discussed, experiences given, and practical ideas exchanged at our meetings, yet the greatest benefits and the chiefest pleasures are the social features enabling us to meet face to face and to know each other personally. The organization of the Texas Woman's Bankers Association comes to us like a benediction to help us broaden and cultivate this field of opportunity. We give the ladies a cordial welcome and shall watch with signal interest the evolution of their usefulness.

Importance of Education

This is an age of progress, and progressiveness is demanded of banks and in banking methods, as much, if not more so than in any other field of usefulness. Something else is demand of bankers besides figuring interest and examining collateral. If we should preserve our representative form of government and maintain the free institutions of our country, we must pay more attention to the education of our children. We must encourage and foster our schools and see that the heart and the conscience of the child is educated as well as the brain. If the integrity of our republican form of government is ever assailed it will be from domestic intrigue, venality and corruption, and not from foreign foes. Education will do more to correct errors, improve unwholesome conditions, and allay the spirit of unrest and agitation that is now approaching like a rising tide than all other influences combined. Encourage and foster our schools and make them the palladium of American institutions.

Agricultural Education

A distinguished economist recently said: "Those who study the laws of supply and demand in this country unite in the opinion that the teaching of agriculture in our common schools must supplant the teaching of Greek and Latin."

The bankers of Texas should be the leaders in every thought and action, in every good work that has for its object the growth and prosperity of our state. Nothing will more rapidly develop the resources, or increase the wealth of Texas, than education along the lines of improved agriculture. Our state spends many thousands of dollars, while the national government spends many millions of dollars every year, in teaching scientific agriculture and in encouraging progressive farming. If each farm in Texas could be made to produce only one more bale of cotton than it now produces, it would add more than $5,000,000 annually to the wealth of our people, and if by practical agricultural education, and by the application of improved methods of farming, each farmer could add one more bushel of corn, one more bushel of oats, one more bushel of wheat, one more bushel of onions and one more bushel of potatoes to the acre over what he is now producing, it would mean better homes, better barns and more prosperous citizens, and would soon double the deposits in the banks of Texas.

The teaching of agriculture should be a part of the curriculum in our common schools and in our high schools, as well as in the agricultural and mechanical college. The course of study should teach the benefits and advantages of agriculture instead of leading the mind of the child away from country life. The bankers of Texas cannot render the state a greater service than to join the great movement that has been inaugurated for the teaching of scientific agriculture, and for the encouragement of improved and progressive farm work. Intelligent farming can be made more profitable to the farmer, and will yield better results to the banker than any other vocation in life.

One of the greatest auxiliaries to successful farming is good roads. They are essential to the comfort and prosperity of every community. No matter how fertile the land, the better the roads the more valuable becomes the farm. Bankers should work in harmony with county commissioners for the building and maintaining of good roads. There should be at least one first-class highway from every county seat to each neighboring county town. Thousands of dollars are wasted annually in almost every county in patch work that could be saved by competent road engineering, and by having the work done by contract. It is difficult and expensive to maintain the ordinary country road, hence the importance of building them substantially, and when a good road has been built it is economy to keep it a good road.

Legislative Suggestions

The banker is interested in every class of legislation to a greater extent than almost any other citizen, but some measures deserve more consideration than others. At every session of the legislature ill-advised bills are introduced, which if enacted into laws would be pernicious and result in serious injury to the industrial and commercial interests of the people of Texas. A great responsibility rests upon our legislative committee, but no matter how able and vigilant they may be they should receive the active and zealous support of each member of the association whenever his cooperation is desired.

Among the important measures that should receive your thoughtful attention are "Negotiable Compress and Warehouse Receipts," and "Railroad Bills of Lading." Every year more than one hundred million dollars of the agricultural products of this state is interested in having proper laws enacted that shall fix the responsibility and safeguard the issuance of compress and warehouse receipts and railroad bills of lading. The recent decision of the supreme court emphasizes the importance of prompt legislative action.

The uniform negotiable instrument law is now in force in more than two-thirds of all the states. This is a matter of great interest, not only to the banker, but to all business men of the state. It is desirable and important to the commercial progress of every community and we should all actively aid in the enactment of such a law.

Another matter of importance for the protection of our citizens is the enactment of a law that shall regulate and control the selling of stock in fake companies and the exploiting of "get rich quick" and other "gold brick" enterprises. The recent report of the postoffice department shows that the people of the United States are annually robbed of more than one hundred millions of dollars through the sale of worthless securities and other "wildcat" propositions. Texas has paid its toll to swindlers whose schemes are as intangible as a nightmare, and it is earnestly hoped the next legislature will pass a law that will protect our people from further depredations of that character.

I believe it can be said without the fear of successful contradiction that bank stocks pay a higher rate of taxation than any other class of property. Laws for the assessment of personal property, including all classes of corporate stock, are so vague and indefinite that city boards of equalization and commissioners' courts are each a law unto themselves, but they usually made common cause against the banks. There is no good reason why bank stocks should be assessed upon a different basis, or be required to pay a higher rate of taxation than insurance stocks, telephone stocks or any other class of personal property. Every citizen, no less so than the banker, is inter-

United States Subtreasury for Texas

The geographical location, the agricultural products, and the industrial and financial importance of Texas entitles us to the establishment of a branch of the United States treasury in our state. By unity of action and earnestness of purpose I believe we can secure this great prize, which would be of benefit to every line of commerce, and a great convenience to every banker. Let us make the effort and start the work without delay and when successful it will be time enough to discuss the place of location. What Texas needs is the subtreasury; the location will take care of itself.

Mutual Insurance at Minimum Cost

Referring to the question of adding a Mutual Insurance Department to the Texas Bankers Association as outlined in the Record for November, 1911: After further investigation of the subject and having discussed it with men who are familiar with the fundamental principles of insurance, and who are in a position to give unbiased information as to the practicability of this form of insurance, I am thoroughly convinced that if the membership is confined to the members of the association and their employees, whose policies would lapse in the event of their severing their connection with the association, that the plan is not only feasible and practical, but that it can be handled at a minimum cost to the insured.

The cost of life insurance as now handled, is much above the price our association would be called upon, on an assessment plan, to pay. And while a few members of the association have taken the position that the assessments for the first few years might be very small, but that the same would be increased as the members grew older, I believe that an adequate rate can be established low enough, yet high enough, to practically guarantee that the assessments would not be increased either in numbers or amounts.

The four elements that go into legal reserve insurance are the reserves by which the company guarantee either paid-up insurance, cash values, or extended insurance, at the same time put them on a basis that the premiums are higher in the first and younger age of the policies than that necessary to fulfill those guarantees, and lower than the advanced stages, but of a sufficient amount to equalize the higher and lower rates so that the companies can have what is known as level premium rates, and at the same time fulfill their guarantees.

The life insurance company's savings, which go toward reducing the expense ratio of the companies, come from three sources: Savings in the actual over the expected mortality; second, making a higher rate of interest than the legal requirements on their reserves; and third, lapses on policies which have been carried a few years, on which their surrendered values are not as much as the collected amounts. Taking these in their order, it is a well-known fact that in our vocation the mortality is necessarily low. The lapse ratio should be low, and we would be collecting money only for the purpose of meeting the assessments in the case of death.

The expense item should be one of minor importance, as after the system is once successfully launched it will be largely a question of detail work.

There are two bases upon which this matter can be successfully handled: First, a lower premium for the younger ages and higher for the older, or by a level premium for both younger and older, graduating the proportionate amount of death values. Either of these plans can be worked out successfully, and once the association starts on the proper basis, there is no question but what it can be successfully handled, and at least within an expense item of small amount, making assessments and the expense item for management of the association come within a margin of one per cent.

The question of health certificates or examinations can be handled properly and satisfactorily at a small expense, and a proper form can be gotten out by the medical director that will give the desired information as to whether or not the risk should or should not be accepted, at a minimum cost.

There are many worthy and deserving officers and employees of Texas banks who die in the harness, leaving helpless and dependent families, because they do not believe they are able to pay the premiums that legal reserve life insurance necessarily costs, and my only motive in suggesting the adding of a mutual insurance department to our association is to meet this demand. Many banks in the larger cities have established pension funds for their employees and if this system should be adopted by the Texas Bankers Association there, no doubt, are many banks that would be glad to pay the dues and assessments of their employees, as it would not materially increase the expense account.

My interest in this question is purely altruistic as my age would preclude me from participating in its benefits and the suggestions are made with the hope of helping those who might not otherwise be beneficiaries of any other plan of insurance.

Currency Legislation

Before closing, it may not be inappropriate to say a few words on a subject so vitally important to the industrial and commercial peace and prosperity of all the people of our country. We are all agreed that our currency and banking laws are defective and that some remedial financial legislation is demanded, but like all God-fearing people we are somewhat divided on the plan of salvation. With us it is a question of measures, not of results, and it is with keen regret that I cannot look upon the subject from the viewpoint of many of my good friends for whose opinions I have so much respect, but as the best results on all public measures can be obtained only by the attrition of ideas, it is earnestly hoped the discussion of the currency question will give to our country a banking system that is absolutely sound and scientifically elastic; one that will maintain unimpaired the integrity and the independence of the individual bank. QUESTIONS FOR ELECTORS TO DECIDE

On November 5th the voters of Illinois will be asked to decide three questions of public policy, the first of which relates to the appointment of a legislative committee to investigate the most practicable means of shortening our election ballot; the second is in regard to a revision of the primary election act, it being desired to eliminate certain objectionable features of the present law; and the third question relates to an amendment to the state constitution providing for the classification of property for the purposes of taxation, with taxes uniform as to each class within the jurisdiction levying the same.

The present election ballots, with the large number of offices to be voted for, have a tendency to confuse the voter and to cause him to become careless. It is doubtful, however, if any practicable method of shortening the ballot can be devised. There is no doubt but what there are undesirable features connected with the present primary law, one of which prohibits the changing of party affiliations oftener than once every two years and compels the voter to vote for all the candidates of one party. The present revenue laws at least could be greatly simplified by their revision. These propositions are the result of activities of the Civic Federation, and it is believed that voters will make no mistake in voting affirmatively on all three questions.

NEW SOUTH SIDE BANK OPENS

Central Manufacturing District Bank opened for business on Monday morning of this week. The officers are as follows: President, Edward E. Payne, formerly cashier of the Stockyards Savings Bank, and who is a son of Judge John Barton Payne; vice-president, H. E. Poronto; cashier, M. A. Graettinger, formerly cashier of the Merchants and Manufacturers Bank, Milwaukee, secretary of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, a state bank examiner for Wisconsin, and more recently representing the Live Stock Exchange National in the Badger state. The directors are John A. Spoor, Abraham Harris, Arthur Spiegel, Sigmund Silberman, John Magnus, David E. Shanahan, P. L. Knoedler, Arthur Meeker, Albert Pick, Edward E. Payne and William A. Heath. Mr. Heath is president of the Live Stock Exchange National and Mr. Shanahan is an active real estate operator in that neighborhood and well known in the Illinois legislature, having been chairman of the committee on appropriations for a number of years.

The building to be occupied by the new institution has but recently been completed at a cost of $75,000; it is located at 1112 West 35th Street, near Center Avenue. The appointments include handsome marble and mahogany, and in every way present an up-to-date appearance. There are modern steel vaults for the bank and safe deposit vaults for its customers. Messrs. Payne, Poronto, Graettinger, Shanahan and others of the official organization were on hand promptly at nine o'clock when the bank opened, and remained there the entire day. The Central Manufacturing District Club, which is located over the banking room, gave a luncheon in the club rooms, which are modern, well-appointed and up-to-date in every respect, and in whose opening the leading men of the central manufacturing districts have taken an active interest. A great profusion of flowers found their way to the desks of all of the officers of the bank. The new institution is opened to care for an extremely large population and manufacturing interests that are included in that locality. It is capitalized at $250,000. There will be a savings department, and both the commercial and savings departments will be under state supervision and subject to clearing house and state examinations from time to time.

Deposits received by the new bank during the first day totaled about $200,000, one-half of which represents the savings of the factory employees in the district served by the bank.

MISSOURI GROUP MEETINGS

Group meetings of the Missouri Bankers Association for 1912 will be held as follows: Groups 1 and 6 will hold a joint meeting at Hannibal on October 17th; Group 2, Brookfield, October 18th; Group 3, St. Joseph, October 16th; Group 4, Kansas City, October 15th; Group 5, Lexington, October 23d; Group 8, Jefferson City, October 22d; Group 9, El Dorado Springs, October 24th; Group 10, Neosho, October 30th; Group 11, Springfield, October 29th, and Group 12 at Charleston, November 8th. The time and place of the meeting of Group 7 have not been decided upon as yet.

CONDITION OF NEW YORK STATE BANKS

A falling off of $17,783,827 in the deposits of state banks from June 14th to September 9th is shown in a statement issued to-day by Superintendent Van Tuyl of the state banking department. One hundred and ninety banks reported in June and 191 in September. During this period the resources decreased from $631,783,542 to $614,631,940 and the deposits from $542,470,634 to $524,686,807.

JAMES J. HILL PURCHASES ST. PAUL BANK

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 10th.—James J. Hill has completed the purchase of the Second National of this city. He gave his personal check for $1,240,000 for the capital and surplus. The price paid, it is officially stated, was $310 a share. W. B. Dean was requested to remain as acting president.

COURT HOLDS FOREIGN CORPORATION LIABLE

Municipal Judge Moran held this week that a foreign corporation doing business in Illinois, and which has not complied with the statute and obtained a license, cannot set up as a defense that it is immune from suits by creditors because under the law debtors cannot be sued by it; that the corporation is estopped by reason of its non-compliance with the statute. The decision was brought about as the result of a suit instituted by C. F. Ross against the New South Farm and Home Company for the recovery of $7,000 alleged to be due as commission for having obtained a loan of $100,000 from the Assets Realization Company.

NEW ILLINOIS BANKS

New Illinois banks have been organized at Allendale, Winnebago and Pesotum. That at Allendale was necessitated by the present oil boom, and will be capitalized at $25,000. Plans for a new building have been completed. The Winnebago State Bank is capitalized at $25,000. Clarence P. Coolidge is president and W. L. Norton, cashier. P. J. Gates is president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, Pesotum, and J. Everett is cashier.

AVERY ISSUE PRACTICALLY SUBSCRIBED FOR

C. F. Childs & Co. of this city, who brought out the million-dollar issue of Avery Company, 7 per cent stock, announced early this week that the entire issue practically was subscribed for. The Avery Company of Peoria is one of the leading manufacturers of farm machinery in the United States.

PRIVATE BANK SUSPENDS

A private bank of Gladstone, Mich., known as D. Hammel & Son, has made a voluntary assignment, naming I. N. Bushong, manager of the Northwestern Coopersage Lumber Company of that place, as assignee.

KENTUCKY BANKERS ELECT OFFICERS

The Kentucky Bankers Association, in convention last week, elected the following officers of the association for the coming year: President, John E. Buckingham, cashier Paintsville National, Paintsville; secretary, Arch B. Davis, and treasurer, Henry D. Ormsby, cashier National Bank of Kentucky, Louisville. Hamlet C. Sharp, cashier State National Bank, Maysville; M. M. Waller, president Bank of Union County, Morganfield, and W. C. Montgomery, secretary Citizens Trust Company, Elizabethtown, were elected to the executive committee for terms of three years, to succeed Samuel Cassiday and John Stiles, of Louisville, and J. W. Porter, of Lexington.

The resolutions committee, headed by Chas. H. Ellis, presented the following resolutions, which were adopted: Approving the recommendation of President Waller for the formation of county associations of bankers; approval of the "Blue Sky Law" and urging the adoption of similar legislation in Kentucky; asking equitable assessment by the state, and asking congress to adopt some sane system of currency reform.

REPORTS GOOD CROPS FOR IOWA

Benjamin J. Howrey, president Waterloo (Ia.) Loan and Trust Company, called on Chicago banking acquaintances on Thursday. He reports business conditions as being very satisfactory in that portion of Iowa, and says that crops are very good. The Waterloo Loan and Trust Company is affiliated with the First National of that city. The combined deposits of the two institutions are in excess of two millions, while the total resources are $200,000 above three millions.

AFTER FARMERS' SAVINGS DEPOSITS

The National Bank of Poteau, in Oklahoma, has addressed much effective literature recently to farmers on the matter of savings. Many farmers hoard their harvest receipts and this practice the bank wishes to break up. W. A. Campbell, cashier, has sent all near by farmers a neat coin purse bearing this inscription:

"If you have money, we want it.
 If you want money, we have it."

"FOOT-LOOSE AND FREE"

The Outing Publishing Company has published a humorous vacation story of travel, by Alexander Chalmers, in a neat volume. It ran as an illustrated serial in the Outing Magazine and is delightfully original. Would make an instructive and interesting gift book for a boy.

CAPITAL ONE MILLION DOLLARS

By C. C. Burford

Visitors at the recent convention of the Illinois Bankers Association in Peoria who were impressed with the size of the city's business interests and of the solid character of her banking institutions, will be pleased to receive copies of a new illustrated book with the title "The Great Middle West—Peoria the Central City." The book is issued by the publicity committee of the Peoria Association of Commerce, and includes pictures of every phase of the business and social life of the community. The book was published primarily for distribution at the National Implement and Vehicle Show recently held in Peoria. Illinois bankers who wish a copy should address Cashier William E. Stone of the First National of Peoria.

The First of Peoria, whose magnificent new building caught the eye of convention visitors, has just added $50,000 to the surplus fund, left $16,000 to undivided profits, and paid the regular dividends. The total capital and surplus of the bank is now $850,000. The deposits are nearly four millions.

National of Decatur's New Home

Readers of THE CHICAGO BANKER who remember seeing the picture of the new home of the National Bank of Decatur in the convention number of the journal, will be pleased to learn something of the general location and plan of the building. The building will be erected on the site of the old private bank of L. Burrows & Company, the latter bank recently absorbed by the National of Decatur and removed to the present location of the National Bank. This plan will make but one move for the constructing bank. The location of the new bank will be on the east side of North Water Street, about midway between the palatial homes of the Citizens and of the Millikin. This location will place the three national banks of Decatur in close proximity, "three in a row," and will make a pleasing picture to the eye of the stranger who is seeing the sights of busy Decatur.

The National Bank of Decatur will erect a building of the monumental plan in contrast to the high office buildings of the Citizens to the north and of the Millikin to the south. The Mosler Safe Company of Chicago has been awarded the contract, at a cost of $145,000. The building will be ready for occupancy

August 1, 1913. Number 1 Imperial Blue Bedford stone will be used in the construction with a special finish of gray polished granite across the front, and with bronze pillars about the doors. Special imported marble will be used for interior finish, and will also cover the vaults. The interior of the bank provides large and commodious rooms for the use of ladies, directors, officers and customers, while the cages of the tellers and bookkeepers will include all of the late ideas in bank construction.

The vaults will be in the east end of the building, with circular door, quadruple time locks, and the best protective devices. There will be 816 deposit boxes for the use of customers, while ample room and security will be given to the cash, books and files of the bank. The bank will be a fitting addition to the already beautiful and commodious banking houses in Decatur. J. A. Meriweather, cashier, and J. R. Allen, assistant cashier of the bank, attended the Peoria convention and are well known to convention goers. B. R. McReynolds is the president, John Ullrich is vice-president and W. A. Phares is also an assistant cashier.

New Bank at Muncie

A new bank will soon be established in the village of Muncie, on the Illinois Traction system, about midway between Danville and Urbana. Although surrounded by banks in many neighboring villages, and with one bank only two miles away, it is believed that the new bank will get a goodly share of the business of the farmers about. This is the first bank for Muncie.

Big Peoria Exposition Great Success

Illinois bankers who recently visited Peoria at the time of the convention of the Illinois Bankers Association heard much about the coming National Implement and Vehicle Show to be held in that city. They will be interested to learn that the exposition was a great success and that 75,000 people passed through the gates during the nine days of the show. The success of the show for 1912 was greater than that of 1911, even going beyond the expectations of the management. Peoria bankers and business men are very enthusiastic over the success of the exposition and, as the city is in the heart of the agricultural district of the Middle West, there is no reason why the marvelous agricultural "time-saving and labor-saving" devices should not be exhibited to many thousands of farmers, land owners, and bankers in such a way that the soil conservation idea of to-day will be materially advanced.

Peoples Bank a Large Advertiser

The Peoples Bank of Bloomington carries on a scheme of newspaper advertising which will be of interest to the many Illinois banks that are now thoroughly aroused over the topic of bank publicity. The Peoples Bank carries large display ads in the Bloomington newspapers and these are written in such a way that each advertisement conveys to the mind of the reader some definite and impressive knowledge of the banking business, and of the value of having a bank account. These ads are changed frequently and are far from being the "stock" ads of many banks, giving merely the names of the officers and directors, its capital and surplus and street location, all of which the average newspaper reader already knows.

The Peoples Bank, located in one of the finest banking rooms in the Middle West, in a towering office building previously described in THE CHICAGO BANKER, is making rapid growth and is becoming a large clearing point for many central Illinois banks. F. D. Marquis is the president and W. L. Moore is the cashier.

Farm School at State Fair

Bankers visiting at the State Fair in Springfield were interested in the work of the boys' farm school which is being carried on at the fair under the direction of faculty members of the college of agriculture of the University of Illinois. Practical instruction in agriculture, and better yet, the best of encouragement for boys to remain on the farm, and many helpful ideas to promote more comfortable rural life, were the predominating ideas of the school. Another good stroke of work for bettering farm conditions has been struck. Many of these strokes are being observed throughout Illinois and the Middle West, and the bankers of the state have included in their business creeds the most advanced ideas of soil conservation.

Illinois Notes

A new state bank is soon to be established in Blue Mound, near Decatur, with capital of $50,000.

The Wabash Railroad Company was working with the idea of conservation of natural resources when it issued special posters on seed corn and had them tacked up in every station along the road. Conservation of agricultural resources, as favored by various bankers' associations, is rapidly becoming the order of the day.

The First National of White Hall, near Alton, has a map of the state printed on its drafts showing its location with respect to Chicago, St. Louis, Peoria, Springfield, Quincy, Bloomington and other clearing points. Such an idea will be of assistance in transit departments over the country.

Woodford county real estate values are soaring, as three farms in that county recently changed hands at high figures, two at $275 an acre and one at $285 an acre. Eureka is the county seat. Illinois farm land values seem to be advancing all the time.

The National City Bank of Ottawa, of which Thomas D. Catlin, former president of the Illinois Bankers Association, is the head, reports a surplus of $225,000 and capital of $100,000. The bank is now open one hour Saturday evenings.

B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National of Champaign and former president of the Illinois Bankers Association, will give an address at the convention of the Indiana Bankers Association in Indianapolis, on October 16th, speaking from the subject, "Man Liveth Not to Himself Alone."

The Commercial Club of Canton is waging determined war on the loan sharks who are operating in that city.

While authorities were preparing to inter the body of Christopher Strattmeyer, who recently died at Alton, it was remembered that he had been making $5 a day for many years and had spent but little money. Search was made and $4,485 in five, ten, and twenty dollar bills, and a bank book showing deposit of $800, were found in the room of the dead man. No relatives have been located.

CHICAGO VISITORS

Wilson H. Doe, cashier of the Home National and Home Trust and Savings banks, Elgin, Ill., was a caller in the financial district this week. E. B. Redford, cashier of the Bank of Grand Rapids (Wis.), was unable to resist the temptation of seeing the opening game between the Cubs and White Sox this week. J. B. Green, vice-president of the Gary (Ind.) Trust and Savings, visited Chicago on Tuesday. Mr. Green says that business conditions are moving along satisfactorily in the important manufacturing metropolis of northern Indiana. W. A. Armstrong, cashier of the Peoples Trust and Savings of Galesburg, Ill., spent several days in the city this week attending the convention of the League of Building and Loan Associations of Illinois. Mr. Armstrong is treasurer of the local Galesburg organization and a delegate to the state association meeting.

BANKS CHANGE NAMES

From December 6, 1911, to September 5, 1912, seven Illinois state banks changed their names, either to make their titles more comprehensive or to avoid similarity with those of other institutions. After January 9, 1912, Chicago City Bank was known as Chicago City Bank and Trust Company. Interstate Bank and Trust Company of Peoria changed its name to State Trust and Savings Bank of Peoria on January 10th.

MILWAUKEE

WISCONSIN

The city of Milwaukee is broke. At least the city treasurer has besought the common council to authorize the mayor and comptroller to borrow money at the best rates possible to meet a shortage in municipal funds. The city treasury contains at present $194,692.15. A street car tax amounting to $233,000 is nearly due and the city will probably borrow $150,000 from the water department to meet immediate obligations.

May Form Mutual Guarantee Association

The failure of the bank deposit guarantee law in Oklahoma, reported by a recent investigating committee, may result in giving added impetus to the movement on foot among Wisconsin bankers to form a voluntary mutual guarantee association in advance of any legislation along this line in the state.

"The result of the law has been predicted by thoughtful bankers and economists from the first," said President James K. Ilsley of the Marshall & Ilsley Bank, referring to the Oklahoma fiasco. "The attempt to make the sound and prudently managed banks responsible for the losses of their speculative and reckless neighbors was not only unfair, but wrong in principle. It encouraged and gave credit for a time to institutions that could not otherwise have done business at all. The good banks, as far as possible, refused to assume the grave risks entailed by the law and gave up their state charters to become national banks. This left the smaller and weaker banks, together with those controlled by incompetent and dishonest men, to guarantee each other. Such a situation could not last long, and apparently the end is near in Oklahoma. The compulsory law will have to be repealed soon, or there will be a complete collapse of the state banking system in Oklahoma."

The report of the insurance committee of the W. B. A. was returned to it at the annual meeting of the association in July, with the understanding that a special meeting be called to consider it as soon as suggested revisions were made in the drafted plan.

City Bonds to First Savings and Trust Company

To the First Savings and Trust Company have been awarded the $325,000 city bonds, on a 4.20 per cent basis. The issue of $200,000 school bonds was not sold because the bids submitted were below par. Comptroller Louis M. Kotecki states that he will hold these and other bonds for a more favorable market condition.

L. J. Petit Returned From Summer Home

President L. J. Petit of the Wisconsin National has closed his Oconomowoc summer home and returned to the city with his family.

Celebrates Fortieth Anniversary

Herman F. Wolf, second vice-president and cashier of the Wisconsin National, celebrated his fortieth year in the banking business last week. He began his career at the age of fifteen years as a messenger for the old Houghton bank and at the time of the consolidation of the Wisconsin National and Houghton banks, became assistant cashier.

Fire Restores Faith in Bank

Some bank in Milwaukee will be one savings account better off following a fire which destroyed the house furnishings of one Mrs. S. Jetowski, living on the north side, together with $65 in notes which she had secreted in a mattress. Mrs. Jetowski, who long entertained a fear of the security of banks, is now their ardent champion.

Group 5 to Meet at Fort Atkinson

Group 5, W. B. A., the last group to hold its annual meeting, will convene at Fort Atkinson on October 25th. The group comprises 125 banks in the southeastern part of the state. All other groups met previous to the state convention in July.

Start Winter Campaign

The winter campaign of the W. B. A. in the interest of better crops began this week with the mailing of copies of the proceedings of the recent interstate crop improvement meeting in Minneapolis to each of the members, and a letter asking their opinions on the practicability of state employed agricultural experts, agricultural instruction in district schools and agricultural courses in connection with the county teachers' training schools.

OSCAR G. FOREMAN ON A VACATION

Oscar G. Foreman, vice-president of Foreman Brothers Banking Company, Chicago, is out of the city on a vacation.

CLEVELAND BANK MERGER DENIED

Cleveland.—The rumor of a projected merger in this city of three banks, the National City, the Cleveland National and a third—supposed to be the National Commercial Bank—is officially denied by F. W. Wardwell, president of the Cleveland National. The three banks mentioned have a total capital, surplus, and undivided profits of $3,700,000, and if combined would constitute the second largest bank in Cleveland.

The dominating interests in the reported merger are the Hanna interests, which have lately become prominent in the affairs of the National City Bank. Dan R. Hanna, it is known, expects to become active in banking as well as in iron and steel soon, and is planning the establishment in the new Leader building of a bank of the first magnitude in this city.

SYCAMORE BANK SOLD

Pierce Trust and Savings Bank of Sycamore, Ill., established in 1867, has been sold by Frederick B. Townsend to George E. Dutton. Mr. Dutton also holds the controlling interest in the Citizens State Bank of Tracy, Minn.

GEORGIA BANK ADDS TO CAPITAL

Under an authorization made by the stockholders some time ago, the capital stock of the Citizens and Southern Bank, Savannah Ga., has been increased from $700,000 to $1,000,000. The surplus account was also increased to $1,000,000 by transferring $300,000 from the undivided profits to the surplus account. The increase of the capital stock was made by the stockholders paying in $100 on each share held by them. This entitled them to three-sevenths of a share additional for each share previously held. This increase of capital stock and surplus puts the Citizens and Southern in the $2,000,000 column of banking institutions. Reports have been submitted showing that the total resources of the bank are over $10,500,000.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS BRANCHING OUT

As a result of the appropriation of increased funds granted by the last legislature, the University of Illinois has been enabled to open the present year with better facilities in building and equipment than ever before. There has just been completed a new engineering building for the railway administration department, which, in connection with the locomotive testing laboratory now in process of construction, and the building for the mining course and for the course in ceramic engineering, forms a very substantial addition to the facilities of the university for the highest kind of work. It also has been possible to provide a better building for the commerce courses and to take care of the ever increasing number of students in the agricultural department. President James says that much interest is being manifested in this department, also in the commerce courses. He predicts that the time will come when anyone entering upon a career in banking, accounting, insurance, etc., will not do so without first taking advantage of the facilities for preparation afforded by the universities.

"HOW TO SAVE"

Harris Trust and Savings Bank of this city has prepared a household expense account book, designed to enable anyone to save enough out of what ordinarily is wasted in daily household expenses to maintain a liberal savings account. Copies may be had upon personal application at the bank.

BANK INCREASES CAPITAL

At a meeting of the directors of the Nevada County Bank, Nevada City, it was voted to increase the capital stock from $135,000 to $150,000. The bank was organized in 1900 with a capital stock of $50,000, which was increased in 1907 to $100,000 and in 1911 to $135,000. The present increase gives the bank a capital and profit account of $155,000. It has deposits of over $1,050,000.

St. Louis, October 10th.—Local bankers characterize the demand for money during the past week or ten days as extremely healthy. Increased activity in all lines of business was noted, and commercial requirements now are broader than at any like time in more than a decade. There has been no falling off in offerings of commercial paper, and purchases of this class of collateral by St. Louis banks has been fairly heavy. The rates offered make the bills tempting, especially as they include excellent names. Probably the most notable feature of the week was the first signs of returning money from the Southwest. The extreme south end of Texas has started to send back funds, and the volume for this early date is surprisingly heavy. It had not been believed that the return flow would materialize before the twentieth at the earliest. Another feature was the heavy borrowing by Arkansas and Oklahoma for moving cotton and other crops. This demand, coupled with the routine commercial requirements, has kept all available funds in motion, and indications now are that there will be no let-up in the demand for some weeks to come. Certain optimistic financiers are of the opinion that the present pace will continue well into the winter. The early marketing of crops, especially cereals, will place the country in a position to purchase commodities, which buying will be reflected in the manufacturing industry, wholesale trade and railroad earnings. Receipts of grain at St. Louis this season are more than double those of the corresponding period last year, or in fact for many seasons past. As far as can be ascertained from wholesale and jobbing houses in the Washington Avenue district, politics has failed to affect business in the least. Buyers are still numerous, and their bills denote firm belief in an enormous late fall and winter trade. The recent spell of warm weather came as the final benefit in an agriculturally good year. It has enabled farmers to clean up the last bits of their 1912 operations, and make extensive preparations for the 1913 crop, besides placing pastures in excellent shape, and staving off feeding of stock for a goodly period. Business with local banks and trust companies, especially counter transactions, were stimulated by the fall festivities. Clearings have been holding up in splendid shape, and discount rates hold firm in the range between 5½ and 6 per cent.

McCluney Congratulated

John H. McCluney, president of the State National and dean of the St. Louis banking fraternity, was the recipient of numerous congratulations on his seventy-second birthday last week. Besides congratulations, he received sundry large bouquets of roses, which made the bank smell like a florist's shop. Mr. McCluney has been connected with the State National in various capacities for more than fifty-five years. He is more active than many men twenty-five years his junior, and rarely misses a day from his desk and duties. His only rival in point of length of service in local financial circles is William H. Thomson, vice-president of the Boatmens Bank, who has served with his institution eight months longer than has Mr. McCluney.

Koehler Fortune Large

An inventory of the personal estate of Henry Koehler, the St. Louis banker and brewer, who died in July, was filed for probate this week, and shows a personal estate of nearly $3,000,000. Much of the estate consists in shares of banks and trust companies in St. Louis and the Southwest, and practically all of the estate is in securities of corporations in which Mr. Koehler was actively interested. The largest item is securities in the St. Louis, Rocky Mountain and Pacific, which are valued at $1,383,400.

Central Suspends Dividends

Stockholders of the Central National have been advised by H. P. Hilliard, president of the institution, that the directory has ordered a suspension of dividends until the bank's surplus has been increased to twenty per cent of its capital stock, or $200,000. This action was taken so that the bank may participate in the privileges of the currency association of the local financial institutions, as provided by the recent act of congress. The Central National is the only large national here which does not now fulfill this requirement. According to the September statement, it has a capital of $1,000,000, and surplus of $87,894. Mr. Hilliard says the surplus now is about $100,000. The bank has been paying dividends at the rate of 5 per cent yearly, and its business is in excellent shape, and shows steady increase. Stockholders seem for the most part well satisfied with the temporary suspension, and there has been little change in the current value of the shares as a result of it.

Houston Oil Company

The Houston Oil Company, which is largely owned by St. Louis capitalists, and was recently reorganized by Edwards Whitaker, president of the Boatmens Bank, Colonel S. W. Fordyce, D. S. H. Smith and other local financiers, have begun drilling for oil on its lands in Tyler county, Texas, and operations will soon start at Saratoga, Texas. The company owns 800,000 acres of timber land in Texas and Louisiana, and 191,000 acres of oil land in Hardin county, Texas. The oil properties were recently surveyed, and it is believed by those interested that strikes will be made within the next few weeks.

Kentucky Hospitality

The St. Louis delegation to the Kentucky Bankers Association convention at Louisville returned with glowing accounts of their visit and praising the genuine old southern brand of hospitality which greeted them. The members were entertained by C. H. Wulkop, vice-president of the Stock Yards Bank of Louisville, and "Grand Dad" Watham, who is known by a majority of the bankers of the Southwest. Both of these gentlemen were on the entertainment committee, and were assigned to look after the St. Louisans. R. S. Hawes, vice-president of the Third National and C. R. Merrell and George R. Baker of the National Bank of Commerce, headed the local delegation.

Fremont Bank Chartered

A charter was issued this week by Bank Commissioner Swanger to the Fremont State Bank at Fremont, Mo. It has a capital stock of $10,000 and the stockholders are George Ellis, J. M. Morrow, C. C. Ellis, J. W. Ledbetter and J. W. Ellis. The new bank will begin operations some time next month.

Bush Sees Prosperity

B. F. Bush, president of the Missouri Pacific, who has just returned from the East, predicts a year of unprecedented activity in the region served by his railroad system, and for the entire Southwest. "I never knew," said Mr. Bush, "a presidential year when politics had a less disturbing effect upon business than has been the case this year. The tremendous crops and prospects of large exportations of the surplus to foreign countries, where there is a good market, owing to the ACTUAL value received from their connection with us has increased our accounts from other banks 50% in two years. We therefore invite the business of others with the assurance of mutual satisfaction.

Under Mr. Bush's management the Missouri Pacific continues to show increased earnings, and though there is still a vast amount of rehabilitation to be done, the outlook for patrons of the system, also stockholders thereof, is better than in many years.

New Brokerage Firm Started

Jay Herndon Smith, an authority on Middle and Southwest financing, and Charles Moore, vice-president and secretary respectively of the A. G. Edwards and Sons Brokerage Company, have retired from that concern and will open offices under the name of Smith and Moore on January 1st. Considerable surprise was caused by the announcement, especially with regard to Mr. Smith, who has been with Edwards for the past twelve years in charge of their bond department. According to B. F. Edwards, president of the National Bank of Commerce and a director of the Edwards firm, no changes will be made in the official staff of the brokerage house at present. The remaining officers are George L. Edwards, president; Harry F. Knight, vice-president, and W. A.

Bankers on Trial

Considerable interest here and in financial circles throughout the Southwest centers in the trial at Memphis, Tenn., of five bank presidents, charged with fraudulent use of the mails. A special term of the United States district court will conduct the trials. The defendants are officials and directors of the defunct All Night and Day Bank. Their cases are consolidated pleas of not guilty. The All Night and Day Bank of Memphis was one of a chain of institutions founded by a group of Oklahoma promoters, who had planned a gigantic chain of banks throughout the Southwest. If their plans had gone through, a central trust company, with $10,000,000 capital, was to have been started in Indianapolis and fed by the banks controlled by the promoters.

THE SPELL OF FRANCE

From L. C. Page & Co., Boston, comes another of those brilliantly enticing books on travel topics. It is by Caroline Atwater Mason, who wrote "The Spell of Italy," and this time her title is "The Spell of France," with illustrations from special photographs. The cover is in green and gold, showing an embossed castle of France in outline. The effect is beautiful. Miss Mason has written similarly titled books on Holland and England and of her experiences in France says: "I have traveled in the north of France and through its central plains; there I have found fine coast lines, fertile fields, fair cities, ancient monuments, architectural glories;—endless things, indeed, to awaken admiration and stimulate interest in a high degree. But until I journeyed through the Midi I failed to find that France had power to cast a spell upon my mind. Among the mountains and rivers of Old France; among the mighty remains of an earlier civilization; among its legend-haunted castles, churches and abbeys; among fields of olive and vine, and the roses and nightingales of Provence; among the green pastures and sweet waters of the Pyrenees; under the palms and pines and orange groves, the sky and air of the Mediterranean shore, the spell was laid upon me."

There are more than fifty full-page illustrations, many of them in color. The text is clear and combines history, legend and observation in an informing way, told in a spirit which entrances and holds the reader spellbound.

The volume is $2.50 net, of all book stores.

TWO VERY INTERESTING BOOKS

The Alps have been done in crayon, oil and story, and, if you please, in verse. It has remained for J. W. McSpadden, the author of "Famous Painters of America," to evolve "The Alps as Seen by the Poets." The finest collection of pictures from the pens of poets and the brushes of painters ever published has been gathered into this volume in celebration of the glories of Alpine scenery. The poems are by such masters of descriptive writing in metrical form as Byron, Schiller, Wordsworth, Shelley, Tennyson, Longfellow, Bryant, and other traveler-poets who have given expression in their lines to the universal appeal made by mountain heights, in all ages of the world, to man. There is no question that these poetic excursions, with their calls to come and enjoy various peaks or valleys, rivers or lakes, woods or wild flowers, convey to the reader a more vivid and lasting impression of the wonders of the Alps than can be secured from any other source. Accompanying the poems, of which there are 125 in all, and illustrating the scenes described, are some of the best color pictures, reproductions of the work of leading landscape painters, that have as yet appeared in a book of this nature. By the editor's excellent arrangement, the work of both poets and painters has been so combined as to make of this attractive volume a most artistic whole. It will prove a choice gift-book for travelers and for all lovers of beautiful books. Published by Thomas D. Crowell Company, New York.

Another remarkable book is "Fairs and Fetes," by Caroline French Benton, author of "A Little Cook Book for a Little Girl," "Margaret's Saturday Mornings," "Living on a Little," "Easy Entertaining," etc. The old-fashioned fair is a thing of the past. It is no longer worth while to put a row of tables around a large bare room, pile some of them with crocheted afghans and sofa pillows, and others with cut flowers or candy, and then expect a crowd to come in and buy. Such a plan may have succeeded with our unsophisticated forebears, but to-day the public wants its medicine doubly sugar-coated. If men and women—especially men—are to attend a fair at all, they must be offered some inducement beyond the mere suggestion that by doing so they are aiding a worthy cause with presence and money.

One of the things that every woman knows who has engaged in raising money for a hospital, a church, an asylum or any other institution which has a treasury perennially depleted, is that nothing is as effectual in bringing in money as some sort of fair or bazaar, provided it is unique and well advertised. To inform the public by means of huge picture posters, well drawn and colored, that on a certain day something quite novel and delightful is to happen, and then to leave them guessing as to exactly what that is, is to insure their presence at the appointed time and place; then if they are amused and interested their pocketbooks will open as if by magic; and presto! there is the needed money. REWRITING THE A. B. A. CONSTITUTION

A wave of reform, which had its origin in part at the Briarcliff meeting of the A. B. A. executive council last spring, resulted in the adoption of a resolution at the Detroit convention in September authorizing the appointment of a committee to rewrite the constitution of that organization. So rapidly has the American Bankers Association grown in size and importance that it has been a difficult matter to enlarge skillfully that somewhat primitive document to be in keeping with up-to-date requirements. That abuses have crept into the organization under the ambiguous authority of the constitution is admitted by everyone. A very sensitive topic is that of expense accounts for members of committees and members of council attending special sessions or the mid-year meeting. The machinery of the constitution had not provided any check on the size of these accounts nor upon the frequency with which they might be rendered. These essentials depended entirely upon the conscience, or lack of it, of the individual. Frequent attempts have been made to charge the excesses up to Col. Farnsworth, who in reality does not have the power to negative an account submitted by a member nor to refrain from signing a check prepared by any of the auxiliary secretaries acting for the sections. This is putting it rather plainly, but the whole of it is a business question and not one of social prerogative.

The committee appointed at Detroit by the convention, and which will be supported loyally by the administrative committee, is a very able one. It is headed by Robert E. James of Pennsylvania, who is a lawyer of ability, experienced in legislative matters and a skilled parliamentarian. Associated with him are Charles H. McNider of Iowa, who already has distinguished himself by bringing about a number of notable reforms through amendments to the constitution, and Ex-Governor Bailey of Kansas. Other members of the committee are equally well known and deserving of the confidence of every member of the association.

That the members of the Big Council are not averse to having their expense accounts trimmed or abolished is shown by the following letter addressed to THE CHICAGO BANKER by N. E. Franklin of South Dakota.

I have taken up the matter with the committee on revision of by-laws of the American Bankers Association, the question of eliminating from the new constitution, any reference to payment of expenses to the spring meeting of members of the executive council. I find that in the smaller communities there is a great deal of comment and dissatisfaction among members, because of this immense expenditure each year. I believe that any banker, so honored by his state association as to select him as their representative in the council, that he should be willing to pay a small financial tribute for the cause of better banking. I am sure it will send to the council meetings the best material to be selected, and men who will attend these meetings for business and not for pleasure. Your journal is such an ardent supporter of the association that I am taking the liberty of submitting this matter to you, and hope that if you concur, you will lend the aid of your publication.

Should Mr. Franklin's suggestion prevail, and there is a good chance that it will, the position of member of council for the American Bankers Association will become more of an honorary one than heretofore. It has been the custom of banks for many years to allow expenses for officials who are fortunate enough to secure substantial recognition from either the state or national organizations. It is a legitimate charge for any bank to make which is looking for balances from other institutions. The opportunities which a member of council has to make influential acquaintances are worth many times more than the expense account to the employing bank. The columns of THE CHICAGO BANKER are open to any member of council who will have anything to say over his signature on this important subject. We are informed that members of the committee appointed to rewrite the constitution "will be glad to hear from members of council and members of the association at large." The whole matter likely will be taken up at a meeting to be called, probably at St. Louis or some other central point, where the committee can get down to hard work. This committee meeting is expected to occur in advance of the council meeting, which will be held in May, probably at the Virginia Hot Springs. Those who have suggestions to make can make them direct to members of the committee or through the columns of THE CHICAGO BANKER. As it now stands, members of council will no longer be burdened with the selection "of the future president of the association" in electing its chairman. Next year the nominating committee will name candidates for president and vice-president and it isn't likely that hereafter the ex-chairman of council will have any precedent in his favor.

IMPRACTICAL EDUCATION OF YOUNG MEN

The grave educational question which the bankers of the country, under leadership of Joseph Chapman, have been discussing at all their meetings has been settled in part in Germany. In England it is thought that the education of young men is more deficient than it is even in America. The British youth has been much chastised recently and his chief critics are of his own household. A writer in the editorial page of the Daily Mail has scari-fied the public schools and universities. "Swank" and snobbishness were declared to be the distinguishing characteristics of both. A much discussed article in an English review added preparatory schools to the list and carefully demonstrated how all three combined to turn out a nice fellow who had learned nothing useful and unless he found himself quickly after his university career was only fit to become a remittance man abroad or a country house loafer at home. The Duke of Argyle, who is an Etonian and a Trinity College (Cambridge) man, now joins the critics. The duke points out that in foreign universities, such as Berlin and Paris, men assemble for real study in stern preparation for the hard work of life. We are not so badly off as that in America but the stirring up by bankers and business men will improve the schools, the teachers and the graduate output.

GROUNDLESS FEARS IN ILLINOIS

(From Commercial West.)

The Illinois Bankers Association again let its fears get the upperhand and prevented any action at the annual convention last week on the important matter of bringing all banks of the state under supervision. The private bankers seem to be afraid of supervision, and the managers of corporate banks are fearful of losing some business if they force the issue, and as a result nothing is done.

All these fears are entirely groundless, as the bankers of many neighboring states can testify. Both Wisconsin and Minnesota went through the same sweating process and had goose-flesh for years whenever the subject came up for debate. But when strong leadership came to the front and put through proper legislation making all deposit banks corporations under either state or national supervision, it was all very simple and easy and no one was hurt. The erstwhile private bankers who had shied at supervision prospered more than ever before, being helped to avoid heavy losses through the assistance of bank examiners; the big banks of the reserve cities increased their business immensely and the public was protected from the disaster of bank failures.

If Illinois will only "screw its courage up to the sticking point" and go ahead and do what everyone knows and admits should be done, she will be a gainer in every way and will wonder why she listened to her fears so long. Then she will be calling over to Iowa in the language of the urchin in swimming, "Come on in, boys, the water's fine."

It is worth while to get rid of this bone of contention in the interest of a closer co-operation among the banks of the state, if there were no other reasons. But when so many states have demonstrated that there is so much to gain and nothing to lose by supervision, Illinois should no longer hesitate.

INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT

When Roosevelt speaks about invisible government he probably means the representatives of predatory interests who have financed his campaigns so liberally. In the platform of the Bull Moose party will be found a plank which advocates the creation of a commission whose purpose it shall be to exercise supervision and control over corporations engaged in interstate commerce, or such of them as are of public importance. By this method the government would exercise a tremendous influence over the business interests of the country. All a president would have to do would be to place the head of this commission as chairman of his national committee. The result is perfectly obvious. No requests for campaign contributions would be necessary. The large corporations would appreciate the situation at once; they would recognize wherein their interests lay, and probably would respond generously without any requests or promises being made. It may be that this is what the Colonel has in mind when he speaks of "invisible government."

BANKERS' REUNION

Cards of invitation are out for the reunion of representatives of banks in the larger cities, known as the "Flying Squadron," for dinner at the Columbia Club, Indianapolis, next Wednesday evening at six o'clock. G. H. Mueller, vice-president of the Fletcher-American National of that city, is the host. Those fortunate enough to be included in the list will be sure to have a good time.

GROUP 5, WISCONSIN

Members of Group 5, Wisconsin Bankers Association, will hold their seventh annual meeting at Fort Atkinson, October 23d. A splendid program has been provided for the occasion. President S. M. Smith, cashier of the Merchants and Savings Bank, Janesville, will preside and will be assisted by H. A. Mochlenpah, of Clinton. The local committee on arrangements is headed by R. D. Chase. Visitors are requested to inform Mr. Chase by post card of their intended arrival. The sessions will be held in the Masonic Lodge rooms. Ex-Governor W. D. Hoard, the father of the dairy interests in Wisconsin and one of the leading writers and agriculturists of the country, who resides at Fort Atkinson, will welcome the delegates and visitors. Prof. Scott, of the University of Wisconsin, will speak. The remainder of the program is made up of timely topics and responses by leading Wisconsin bankers.

TRUST COMPANIES OPERATING IN ILLINOIS

On September 5, 1912, there were seventy-one trust companies in Illinois authorized to accept and execute trusts by reason of having made the required deposit with the auditor of public accounts. Of this number, twenty-two are in Chicago, several of which institutions have on deposit a half million, viz.: Central Trust Company of Illinois, Chicago Title and Trust Company, Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, First Trust and Savings, Illinois Trust and Savings, State Bank, Merchants Loan and Trust, Northern Trust and Union Trust. In addition, there are several trust companies of other states operating in Illinois, the deposits in each case being $50,000. Among the more important are the Old Colony Trust of Boston, Bankers Trust, Central Trust, Guaranty Trust, and Knickerbocker Trust companies of New York, and Mercantile Trust and Union Trust companies of St. Louis.

BANKS INCREASE CAPITAL STOCK

As an indication that banking in Illinois is profitable, it may be stated that twenty-one state banks increased their capital stock from December 6, 1911, to September 5, 1912, five of which were Chicago institutions, viz.: First Trust and Savings, from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000, January 16th; West Side Trust and Savings, from $200,000 to $400,000, January 23d; Central Trust Company of Illinois, from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000, December 15, 1911; from $2,500,000 to $3,500,000, January 27th, and from $3,500,000 to $4,500,000, May 4th. Austin State Bank, from $50,000 to $100,000, August 30th, and Peoples Stockyards State, from $300,000 to $500,000, August 31st. It will be noticed that the Central Trust Company of Illinois increased its capital stock three times, which was brought about by the absorption of other banks.

KANSAS GROUP MEETINGS

Two changes have been made in the Kansas group meetings as previously announced. Group 4 and 2 have exchanged dates, making the revised list stand: Wednesday, November 20th, Group 2, Lawrence; Thursday, November 21st, Group 1, Kansas City, Kan.; and Friday, November 22d, Group 4, Beloit. The first three meetings remain unchanged, Group 5 meeting at Great Bend on Wednesday, November 13th; Group 6 at Harper, Thursday, November 14th; and Group 3 at Chanute, Friday, November 15th.

STATEMENTS OF ILLINOIS STATE BANKS

On September 5, 1912, the combined capital stock of Illinois state banks amounted to $74,399,300, an increase of $1,860,000 from June 15th; combined surplus amounted to $36,375,031.78, an increase of $511,847.85; undivided profits were $14,680,240.65, an increase of $452,697.73, and total deposits amounted to $694,833,024.53, an increase of $4,285,851.19.

Agriculture and the Problems of American Rural Life

PART III

I venture now to assert the importance to the country at large of such a reform in our ideals of living as will bring us to a more rational simple life. American life has been characterized by prodigality and wasteful extravagance. An intelligent manager of a first class hotel in the largest city of Ohio recently said to me that there was not an economically managed hotel in the state. He further declared that the waste and extravagance characteristic of our hotels was a menace to their successful operation. It might be added that we have not reached the point of the economic use of foods. Intelligent persons say that the French people are able to utilize all food stuffs in a much better way than Americans. Besides, it is an obvious fact that very many people have not discriminated between extravagance, wasteful living and the best type of living. The prosperity of the country is not enhanced by extravagant methods either in business or in living. Such methods make no contribution to sane living, to wholesome social life, or to financial soundness. Both city and country alike have failed to appreciate the importance of a well ordered and systematic use of food. The present methods tend to the enslavement of women, to an increased labor, to a high cost, and these constitute sources of irritation and of discontent. They practically destroy the social element in family life. Nothing is more destructive of real social life than the modern formal dinner, to say nothing of its extravagance and its waste of human life. On the other hand, the unsanitary and poorly prepared food found on many farmers' tables prohibits good fellowship, and becomes a practical bar to social intercourse. The teaching of domestic science in our public schools and our colleges has to do with something more than mere cooking of foods. It must attempt the solution of larger problems involved in the economics of the home, the conservation of the woman's life, and the improvement of the social condition of the family. If we are to increase our annual production simply to maintain American extravagance and wastefulness in one circle, while continuing the unsatisfactory conditions in others, we shall make very little progress in improving the conditions of rural life. It is a false economy, as well as a false philosophy, for the producer of our food products to fail to utilize in a satisfactory way the largest proportions of the earth's bounty. We must go to the root of this matter by the process of education and such an adjustment as will make the American farm home provide a table that will maintain a family not only in good health but in a state of efficiency as producers.

What now are the remedies in operation and proposed for the betterment of agriculture and rural life?

Educational Agencies

The fundamental beginnings in this movement were in the foundation of the colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts. Back of these colleges was an aroused public sentiment in favor of the teaching of agriculture based upon the doctrine that the conservation of soil fertility, the improvement of agricultural methods, and the improvement of live stock, were fundamental in maintaining the prosperity of the American farmers. There was a divided sentiment whether agriculture could be taught or whether there was a science underlying agriculture. We have long believed in a science of chemistry but have not put the principles of chemistry into application upon problems of soil and fertilization.

We had long had a science of physics, but the science of soil physics was an unknown quantity. Botany and zoölogy had never been developed as a science related to the field and the orchard. Accordingly the colleges of agriculture addressed themselves to the problems of applied science. They soon discovered the undeveloped condition of agricultural science and the fact that there was no textbook on this subject. The logical situation demanded an experiment station in order that there might be a great body of knowledge, of experience, and of science that could be taught. The college, therefore, undertook to teach the science that the experiment station had developed. The influences of these colleges for a generation was to develop not only an amount of education in these topics, but to stimulate farmers' institutes, farmers' granges, and other agricultural enterprises to the teaching of an improved agriculture. During these years the agricultural press, heartily in sympathy with improved agriculture, lent its powerful aid to the agricultural colleges and experiment stations and to the intelligent reading farmers as a means of spreading broadcast the results of agricultural science as discovered and taught. The importance of this great movement has never yet been fully measured. Leaving out of consideration the influences of these colleges upon industries and industrial education, it is within the bounds of propriety to say that they aroused the country and greatly stimulated the movement to carry into the public schools an interest in applied science and household economics. The conditions now in the country reveal a wide-spread need of bringing into the public schools some form of industrial and vocational training. Practically every city in the country has not only developed manual training, industrial and trade schools, but domestic science and in some states the teaching of agriculture has been extended to all public schools. The one purpose of all these enterprises is to stimulate public interest, to educate the boy and girl in sympathy with the practical every-day life of the multitude. The latest development has been the work of agricultural extension as carried on through the agricultural colleges. In Ohio, for example, we have been engaged in this work for nearly ten years. In a single year we are able, through the state appropriation, to conduct as many as seventy-five extension schools in as many different counties. During these years, we have developed interest in boys' clubs, in girls' clubs devoted to the beautifying of the home, and the introduction of agriculture in many schools. Recently a law making the teaching of agriculture compulsory has brought the subject into all our public schools. For fifty years we have been bringing the children to school. Now we are carrying the school back to the parents at home and bring-

President W. O. Thompson, of the Ohio University, at the Peoria convention read a paper of such great value that it will be printed in full in the Chicago Banker, but owing to space restrictions will be divided into three parts. Following is part three ing to them the elementary and important instruction in the science of the farm and the home. This work as carried on in a number of states has brought new methods of production in those crops so closely related to the welfare and prosperity of the community.

Demonstration Work and the House Extension Bill

Portions of the year are given in all these places to demonstrations, to spraying in orchards, to selecting crops in the fields, so that in many communities the actual experiments as worked out in the experiment station have been carried to the distant communities of the state. In the South this has taken the form of specific treatment for such evils as boll-weevil and for the general development of a diversified farming. So successful have these experiments been and so important have been the results reached by the federal government, that the colleges of agriculture have urged for a series of years that the federal government co-operate with the states through agricultural colleges in the extension of agricultural teaching, demonstration and agricultural extension. A bill known as the Lever Bill as passed by the lower house of congress awaits the consideration of the senate next December. This bill makes provision for the teaching of agriculture in the communities away from the colleges, for demonstration in selected communities and for such methods of improved agriculture as may be suitable to the several states. The state appropriations have usually had a wider scope, permitting the teaching of household economics to the farmers' wives. If in response to urgent public sentiment the United States senate should pass this bill, there would be a great revival in every state in the union in the extension of agriculture, both in teaching and demonstration.

Voluntary Agencies

Experience shows that the land grant act in making federal appropriations greatly stimulated the states in their appropriations for the same purpose. The Lever Bill puts that principle into the statute and provides as a condition of receiving federal aid that the several states shall make definite appropriations for this work and organize a division of extension that shall accomplish this desired result. It is the earnest desire that commercial and financial organizations over the country shall co-operate with the colleges of agriculture in securing the passage of this bill through the senate. In addition to this governmental agency a number of volunteer agencies have sprung up having similar purposes. These voluntary agencies have grown out of a conviction on the part of public spirited, progressive citizens that the only way to avoid disaster is to arouse the farmer and secure his co-operation in putting into effect improved methods of agriculture as taught and demonstrated in the colleges and experiment stations. It is a happy situation that the interest in these movements is not confined to farmers, but finds its keenest expression in commercial and financial organizations such as the one represented in this bankers association. It will be a happier day when the active co-operation of all the farmers shall be secured and when the most progressive, intelligent farmers of the country have enthusiastically enlisted. Patriotic citizens everywhere see that agriculture must be redeemed from primitive methods and that an appreciation of our agricultural resources must be developed.

We invite the Accounts of Banks, Bankers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Individuals

Resources, Twenty-five Million Dollars

Meaning of Conservation

The doctrine of the conservation of our resources means not that they shall be kept intact but they shall be developed and used from year to year in such a way as to keep our agricultural resources undiminished. We have reached a common agreement that no generation has a moral right to waste and deplete its patrimony, the land. It is God's bounty for the race for all time and must be kept in a high state of productiveness and handed on to the next generation, unimpaired in its ability to meet the needs of the people.

Conclusion

This whole problem as you see is one of education. I do not mean education in the school sense merely, but education in the broader sense of reaching the people and in developing in them an appreciation of our resources and of the patriotic sentiment that men are to live not simply for themselves, but for the public welfare. We are not engaged, therefore, in any war upon existing educational methods, but in a great movement that shall broaden the field of education, widen the interest in its work, strengthen the foundations upon which our national life and prosperity are built. Ultimately it must mean better classes of producers. There could be no such thing as an efficient agriculture apart from a highly developed agriculturist. For the farmer to engage in the business of producing pure-bred live stock means that if he succeeds in developing a high type of horses, cattle, swine or sheep he must at the same time develop a high class citizen, who is better than any products of his labor.

From another point of view, therefore, the problem is not material or financial but one of character. The quality of the American farmer must be such as to insure the quality of the farm and eventually its own fertility. The most disastrous results that could come to American rural life would be to have our farms occupied by a peasantry provincial in character, taste and living. The American spirit as expressed in our forms of government, in our educational institutions, represent the development of representative American character, on the farm, as truly as in the bank, in the mercantile establishment, in the great manufacturing enterprises, or in our great transportation systems.

The American democracy therefore will not endure a stratification of society which permits us to assume either intellectual, social or religious superiority of the city as against the open country. We recognize American agriculture as the basic industry of our people. Its economic soundness is a guarantee of the welfare of all our commercial enterprises. The whole people therefore are interested in developing such conditions in rural life as will make it possible for the independent American farmer not only to maintain his own self respect but to command the respect and confidence of all men engaged in other industries.

This is a field in which American patriotism may express itself without limitation. The problems of agriculture and rural life are larger than any political issues. It seems, therefore, the evident duty of American democracy to urge upon its legislative bodies, both state and national, such consideration of all her industries, including agriculture, as shall insure a profitable industry for all people, a high standard of social life, and a maintenance of national efficiency. It is in consideration of such a prospect that we begin to realize the sweep of Lincoln's conception of a government of the people, for the people and by the people. It is our cherished belief, not that the people exist for the glory of the government, but that the government is instituted to establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

INCREASED DEMAND FOR GOVERNMENT BONDS

C. F. Childs & Co. of this city report that in view of the scarcity of all government issues, due to the demands of newly organized national banks for charter purposes and the steady increase in circulation, bonds now may be purchased with a view to a profitable turn. Old 3's and 4's have been particularly favored and are being substituted in many cases for 2's by investment holders. The 2's thus released readily are being absorbed under the increasing demand. The opinion is given that notwithstanding published statements to the contrary there is a shortage of bonds in the dealers' hands. An advance in prices confidently is expected.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

That recent enthusiastic statements regarding business activity in the Central West were entirely justified has been shown by the statements of state banks in Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas that were given to the public last week by the various state banking departments. The report of the bank commissioner of Nebraska is the most flattering ever issued by that official. In three months, ending September 2d, the deposits of the state banks in Nebraska increased nearly $3,000,000, and are now $85,696,151, the highest ever reached. This is an increase of $10,000,000 in one year. There has been no real failure of a state bank in Nebraska in the past eight years. The number of state banks in Nebraska is 685 and the average reserve is 29¾ per cent.

Kansas State Bank Deposits High

For the second time in two years the deposits in the Kansas state banks have jumped over the $100,000,000 mark—an increase of 7½ million dollars in three months. The Kansas statement is for the year ending September 11th and shows 902 state banks in business with $106,049,142 on deposit. The Kansas state banks have strengthened their reserve 1½ points since last June, now having a cash reserve of 33.7 per cent. Acting Bank Commissioner S. A. Wardell, of the Kansas department, comments upon the showing thus: "Very decided advance has been made along the lines that tend to make the bank situation stronger. Deposits will continue to increase materially for the next few months. A large part of the wheat crop is still in the elevator and farmers' hands, and a very good corn crop is yet to be realized upon. Kansas business conditions are flattering in all lines, with excellent fall and winter trade assured to the merchants. This promises to be a season of marked liquidation, as shown by the substantial decrease of 12½ per cent in rediscounts and borrowed money, and it is believed that the greater per cent of the proceeds from the sale of the 1912 crop will be applied to the payment of existing indebtedness."

Increase in Oklahoma Deposits

Individual deposits in Oklahoma state banks increased $2,117,368 between June 14th, the date of the previous call, and September 4th, the date on which the last call for statements was made. During the same period, loans increased only about $300,000, according to the report of Bank Commissioner Lankford. In June, 623 state banks reported, and, at the last call, 621 banks responded. The total capital of the Oklahoma state banks is $9,947,250. Local bank clearings in Oklahoma City for the week ending October 4th, were the largest since February, 1911, and an increase of 33 per cent over the average for the past six months. The average reserve of all Oklahoma state banks is now 48.3 per cent, as against 31.1 three months ago.

Remarkable Growth of Texas State Banks

The growth of state banks in Texas is considered by the department of banking as remarkable. Not only have the number of state banks increased, but the capital stock has increased, also other items which go to make up expansion of banking business. There are 666 state banks in Texas with $58,152,218 in individual deposits, an increase of nearly nine million dollars over the showing of June last. The reserve on demand deposits is 45 per cent, being just three times the legal minimum. The report on the national banks of Texas shows increases in all asset items.

Bankers Club Dinner

The first season's dinner of the Kansas City Bankers Club last week was notable because it brought together, not only the local masters of finance, but all the members of the Kansas City Chapter of the American Institute of Banking were invited as their employers' guests. George B. Harrison, Jr., president of the Bankers Club, presided and the quartette from the First National sang between set speeches. Part of the entertainment was furnished by the Kansas City Athletic Club minstrels. C. W. Allendoefer, assistant cashier of the First National, who was elected a member of the executive committee of the American Institute of Banking in Salt Lake, reported the chief events of general interest at that meeting. C. A. Burkhardt, assistant cashier of the National Reserve Bank and president of the local chapter, discussed the plans of the chapter for the winter's work. The educational committee of the chapter has divided the season's course into two branches—banking and finance being the first, and commercial law the second. Several important lectures will be delivered on the various phases of these general subjects. After the courses are completed the members of the chapter will be given an examination, and those who pass will be given "institute certificates" which testify that they have completed the study of banking, finance and commercial law. After this a special or post-graduate course will be given to all holders of certificates. This course will be instruction in banking and currency principles of the United States and foreign countries. The institute work begins October 15th, meetings being held every Tuesday night during the winter and spring season. The dinner closed with a short address by P. W. Goebel, president of the Kansas City Clearing House Association, who told of the recent convention of the American Bankers Association in Detroit. He praised highly the plan of the local institute chapter and advised every bank clerk to become a member of the chapter and take the course of instruction.

Death of George D. Ford

George D. Ford, 75 years old, who had been identified with the banking business of Kansas City for nearly half a century, died last week after a long illness. His last banking connection was as vice-president and director of the National Bank of Commerce. Previous to this he was connected with the Union National of Kansas City for many years. Mr. Ford was born in Forfarshire, Scotland. He went to Canada as a boy and engaged in stock raising, coming to the Southwest to take up the same work. He was associated with the late David T. Beals of Kansas City in the cattle business and came to Kansas City to take stock in one of Mr. Beals' banks. Mr. Ford was one of the heaviest stockholders in the Southwest National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, and the honorary pall bearers, made up of all the officials of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce, were: A. W. Byers, Frank G. Crowell, W. S. Dickey, Edward George, John G. Groves, H. A. Guettel, J. D. Guyton, S. Harzfeld, J. J. Heim, George R. Hicks, Walter M. Jaccard, L. T. James, W. D. Johnson, R. A. Long, J. Z. Miller, Jr., John M. Moore, Fernando P. Neal, E. D. Nims, J. G. Peppard, J. W. Perry, W. A. Pickering, H. L. Root, Nathan Schloss, C. J. Schmelzer, O. C. Snider, J. P. Toenley, S. H. Velie, C. H. Whitehead and Edward W. Zea.

Carnival Week Brings Many Bankers

The annual fall carnival week in Kansas City opened Monday, October 7th, and an unusually large number of visitors came to enjoy the various events. In addition to the historic Priests of Pallas entertainments the American Royal Cattle Show was a magnetic attraction. Kansas City banks held all-day receptions during the entire week and many bankers went from one financial institution to another, paying their respects and renewing acquaintanceships. All these visiting bankers brought glowing reports of conditions in their communities, and, in fact, it was jubilee week so far as bankers and business men generally were concerned. Among the visiting bankers were: C. G. Cochran, Plainville, Kan.; J. B. Floresch, Manhattan, Kan.; R. W. McCurdy, Independence, Mo.; Benjamin Hayes, Jr., Salisbury, Mo.; C. J. Webster, Sulphur, Okla.; Judge G. H. Buckham, Winfield, Kan.; H. E. Sunderman, Newton, Kan.; Cap-

New Assignments for Texas Bank Examiners

As the result of a conference between the bank examiners of Texas and Bank Commissioner Bill of that state, new assignments of bank examiners have been made which will mean practically an entire change of territory for each examiner. Following are the new assignments: Amarillo district, C. S. Holderness; Beaumont district, P. G. Villaret; Brownsville district, R. R. R. Cook; Calvert district, J. H. Cheatham; Dallas district, L. P. Kean; El Paso district, L. J. Davis; Fort Worth district, W. L. McFall; Greenville district, J. S. Wightman; Houston district, E. F. Gossett; San Antonio district, Louis Cohn; Sherman district, L. R. Buchanan; Tyler district, L. V. Myrick; Waco district, J. W. Hayes; Wichita Falls district, Will H. Leftwich. Mr. Leftwich takes the place from which George D. Campbell resigned. Mr. Leftwich is from Dallas and was formerly employed in the American Exchange National Bank of that city. Mr. Campbell has become cashier of the State Bank and Trust Company of San Antonio. He was in the banking department of Texas for many years and was one of the ablest of the staff of examiners.

Central West Notes

Bank clearings in Omaha for the month of September indicate a big increase over the same month a year ago. The clearings for the month this year amounted to $68,420,007, and last year $53,365,008, an increase of $15,054,999.

A new five-story office building is to be erected in Wichita Falls, Tex., by the First National of that city.

The grand lodge I. O. O. F. of Oklahoma had $8,000 on deposit in the recently failed Farmers and Merchants Bank of Sapulpa. Because of a special security bond, as well as the guaranty fund, the lodge expects to get its money back.

Joseph F. Rippey, 65 years old, vice-president of the Commercial Bank of Lawson, Mo., died last week.

Judge J. N. Brown has denied the habeas corpus petition of J. Beal Snead of Amarillo, Tex., charged with killing Al G. Boyce in that city Sept. 14th, and Snead was remanded to jail.

Robbers attempted to blow the safe of the State Bank of Kremlin, near Enid, Okla., the night of Oct. 7th, but after wrecking the fixtures the men were frightened away without getting into the vault. Two hours later three men attempted to enter the safe of the State Bank of Douglas, Okla., eighteen miles from Kremlin, but again escaped without any spoils.

It is estimated that not less than $5,000 has been lost by banks in the Southwest through a series of forgeries of checks purporting to have been issued by the Frisco North Texas lines. They were made on duplicates of the regular railroad form used by Treasurer Wilds of the Frisco.

Bungling robbers, in attempting to crack the safe of the Bank of Vera, Vera, Okla., one night last week, used such a heavy charge that it turned the safe over on its face and people for blocks around were aroused. The robbers got nothing.

Joseph McNeal of Guthrie, Okla., Republican candidate for governor two years ago, and L. W. Baxter of Guthrie, will open a new national bank in Tulsa, Okla., soon. Mr. McNeal will be president and Mr. Baxter cashier.

E. F. Swinney, president of the First National of Kansas City, was in New York last week attending a meeting of the directors of the Kansas City Southern railway. F. M. Prince, president of the First National of Minneapolis, was in Kansas City last week visiting F. W. Fratt, builder of the Swift-Armour bridge.

Locke Sawyer has been elected cashier of the Christman-Sawyer Bank of Independence, Mo., to fill the vacancy caused by the death of A. M. Rodgers.

The Drovers National of Kansas City, which has been growing very rapidly since its reorganization about a year ago, has increased its capital stock from $300,000 to $500,000. The bank now has deposits of $2,210,000 and a fixed surplus of $60,000. It is one of the youngest national banks in the Central West and has had remarkable success.

The board of directors of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City ordered a dividend of 1½ per cent paid October 1st. This is the first dividend since the consolidation of the Southwest National with the National Bank of Commerce and indicates an annual distribution of 6 per cent.

The First National Bank of Wichita Falls, Tex., is preparing to erect a five-story office and bank building.

The Farmers and Merchants Bank of Kidder, Mo., has been opened for business with $25,000 capital. A. G. Jones is president and S. L. Gibson of Browning, Mo., is cashier.

An important event in Fort Worth, Tex., was the purchase of a large block of stock in the State National of Fort Worth, October 1st, by Earl Baldrige, who becomes first vice-president and chairman of the board of directors. Mr. Baldrige is still a heavy stockholder in the Waggoner Bank and Trust Company of Fort Worth, of which he is president. The State National is preparing to erect a twelve-story bank and office building in which both banks will have permanent homes.

C. G. Hutcheson, cashier of the First National of Kansas City, and P. W. Goebel, president of the Commercial National of Kansas City, Kan., have returned from Mount Clemens, where they took a rest after the convention in Detroit.

In a suit brought by Bank Commissioner Lankford, of Oklahoma, against James A. Menefee, former state treasurer, and Boon D. Hite, of Anadarko, to recover from them as stockholders in the defunct Columbia Bank and Trust Company, of Oklahoma City, under the double liability law, the Oklahoma supreme court held that the law applied to banks but not to trust companies and that the defendants therefore were exempt from its operation. The bank commissioner appealed the case.

The banks of Paris, Tex., held a "get acquainted" meeting recently. Invitations were sent to twenty-six banks in neighboring territory and each sent one or more representatives to Paris.

The Texas banking department has designated the following reserve agents for Texas state banks: For the Anson State Bank of Anson, the Lumbermans National of Houston; for the Guaranty State Bank of Blum, the National Bank of Cleburne; for the First State Bank of Hansford, the Drovers National of Kansas City; for the First State Bank of Malone, the State National of Fort Worth; for the Guaranty State Bank of Tyler, the National Bank of Commerce, Houston; for the Bronson State Bank of Bronson, the National Bank of Commerce of Houston; for the Texas Bank and Trust Company of Beaumont, the City National of Galveston; for the First State Bank of Killeen, the City National of Galveston; for Yoakum State Bank of Yoakum, the National Bank of Commerce, Houston; for the Lockney State Bank of Lockney, the First National of Fort Worth; for the Farmers Guaranty State Bank of Meridian, the Guaranty State Bank and Trust Company of Dallas; for the Guaranty State Bank and Trust Company of Paris, the Fourth National of New York; for the First State Bank of Dumas, the National Reserve Bank of Kansas City.

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

More than $4,000,000 resources are shown by the St. Paul savings banks than ten years ago, and most of it is made up of small deposits. Three banks were doing a strictly savings business in 1902. Resources were $1,713,656, as against $5,622,775. In addition, the state banks of Ramsey county have resources of $3,705,761, as against $2,892,403 ten years ago. At that time the Scandinavian-American was listed with state banks and it had $1,111,033 resources alone. Difference in the resources of national banks over those of ten years past is $24,879,117. The resources in July, 1902, were $29,808,355, as against $54,687,473. The nationals now number seven, with the addition of the Capital and the Scandinavian-American. Bank clearings on a selected date amounted to $1,969,107, as compared with $1,356,067 the year previous. In two days, clearings gained $1,142,069. The bankers expect the clearings for October to show a gain of $10,000,000 at least, as compared with those of the month in 1911.

Up to October 1st, the clearings have made a net gain this year of $25,578,593 over the period of 1911. Each month, except April, shows a gain of more than $1,000,000. The record of last year of $531,574,516 is expected by the bankers to be beaten by $50,000,000. Clearings for the first nine months are $407,731,446. In 1885, clearings were $101,636,568. In 1895 they were $183,856,875, and in 1905, $315,805,393.

The following table shows how clearings have made a big gain each month over the corresponding month of 1911:

1912.		1911	Gain
January.....	$43,587,752.18	$41,987,103.50	$1,600,648.68

Concerning the Second National

Impenetrable mystery, so far as the daily newspapers go, surrounds the goings-on over the Second National stock in St. Paul. James J. Hill is said to have acquired all the stock and that "this week" the bank will be turned over formally. It is said, also, that Mr. Hill will organize a trust company to go with it; that the change has to do with the financing of the Hill ore lands and the deposits of the Great Northern road. Joseph Chapman's name was tacked to the head of the mast by rumor, for president. Mr. Chapman said in diplomatic language: "Unless Mr. Hill says that it is so, it is not true. I have not heard from him concerning such a matter." Then the newspapers began to think maybe it was so anyway, that Mr. Hill is going to buy the First National, also to create a big bank of the two. President E. H. Bailey denied the negotiations in flat terms.

Bankers Honored

Bankers continue to hold their place in the activities of Minneapolis civic life. G. A. Lyon, assistant cashier of the First National, has been elected president of the new athletic club, which is to erect a twelve-story building. George F. Orde was elected director in the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association at the first annual meeting. He has been an active committee chairman.

Will Not Need Government Assistance

What the Northwest can do without the assistance of the government treasury is put down by the bankers in interviews. They say the crop needs no lubrication from outside to move easily. The bankers speak thus: F. M. Prince, First National, Minneapolis: "We do not need government assistance. We cannot foresee the future, but there is nothing now to indicate that any condition of the immediate future would make it necessary." E. W. Decker, president Northwestern National: "There is money enough. As to the future we cannot tell, but the government need not deposit money now, so far as we are concerned." J. S. Pomeroy, cashier Security National: "Although there is a sharp money demand, there is enough to go around."

C. C. Webber

C. C. Webber, president Deere & Webber Co., succeeds the late H. C. Akeley as trustee of the Farmers and Merchants Savings Bank. There is another trusteeship and the presidency to fill, following the demise of John DeLaittre. The bank this quarter goes on a 4 per cent dividend basis for its depositors. It is a mutual bank. This means a distribution of more than $100,000, in 62,154 accounts. Since information in 1874, up to April, 1912, the bank has thus paid out $7,278,982.46. The rate has been 3½ per cent.

George E. Dutton, president of the Citizens State Bank of Tracy, Minn., actively identified with several banks in the West, is the new president of the Pierce Trust and Savings Bank of Sycamore, Ill. He has bought it from Frederick B. Townsend.

The State Institution for Savings, Minneapolis, announces that its assets have passed the million mark and that it is fourth in the state among exclusive savings banks. It pays 4 per cent interest on deposits.

W. F. Olson, assistant cashier of the Union State has jumped from bachelorhood to celibacy. He was married Tuesday. His wife was Miss Anna Kramer. Finance and Commerce commented as follows: "There isn't anything quite as positive to make certain a man's success, especially of the sterling type of our friend, as 'taking to himself a wife.' May his shadow never grow less. Both young people are to be congratulated."

The Peoples State of Forest Lake, Minn., has a charter. The capital is $10,000 and the surplus $2,000 to start. Carl G. Malmberg is president and H. W. Swanson is cashier.

The Citizens State of Anthon, Iowa, has consulted a Sioux City architect about a new building to cost $3,000. It is for the postoffice.

A. G. Phelps Dodge Endorses Good Roads Movement

A. G. Phelps Dodge, a prominent citizen of Danville, Ill., in a letter to Judge Thompson of that city, indorses good roads for Illinois and points out some of the advantages to be derived therefrom. Mr. Dodge said:

"It is of little moment to anyone what my political status may be. Have been an independent all these years in Danville, voting often for republicans and quite as often for democrats, my views now fully endorsing the Wisconsin progressive ideas, which under the matchless leadership of the great Senator La Follette, the early and most sincere and trustworthy progressive, have done so much for the peace and progress of Wisconsin, satisfying the great business interests and the railways and corporations who were formerly in league against the people's interests, and giving 'The People' all that progressive politics can offer.

"Good roads, such as should exist in the Empire State of the West, waterway developments (which have doubled the wealth of Germany in the last thirty years), as perfect government of our municipalities as modern science and investigation make possible, mean more to our citizens than present partisan machine politics can offer, and vast savings of money and resources.

"As a delegate to several of the good roads gatherings in Chicago, I was impressed with the fact that the state of Illinois is perhaps the most backward state of all the greater states in this regard (which is attracting the attention of a nation-wide constituency).

"A large percentage of our roads are in almost as primitive a state as when the first settlers made access to their farms. The loss of money is prodigious, there are many millions of extra cost in marketing products, an important factor in the 'higher cost of living,' the isolation of families for months in the year from companionship with each other, at the season when, by slackness of farm work, social life should be best promoted; access to schools is hampered and the children are denied advantages enjoyed by townspeople. Almost all the evils of country life, and most of its hardships, would take flight on the completion of an adequate system of good roads. The farmers and their families would be far better customers of our merchants, higher education and advantages of religious and social life would so increase as to make the country quite as attractive as the city life, and would make plausible the cry of 'back to the soil' for many now crowded in tenement houses and other districts in our cities. The whole farming region in this automobile age would become almost suburbs of our towns, giving contentment, new energy and life to our farmers, and opportunities for culture and refinement now so often denied them, making country life far more attractive than now to the young and ambitious.

"All know these conditions; why are not the highest ideals possible? Why such waste in loss on products, on horses, harness and higher cost of necessities? A vast sum of money is lost every year by the citizens of Illinois. Is it not time for the Empire State of the West to take its place in the forefront, and, overcoming all hindrances, make the state what it ought to be for the present generation? It is far from impossible for Illinois in fifteen years to have the best, rather than the worst, system of roads in America.

"In 1849 I visited in Illinois. The rural regions were primitive indeed. I saw the beginnings of the network of railroads that lifted these isolated districts into the vast wealth of the present day. Perhaps not a 'prophet's vision,' but the excellent system of good roads contemplated would double the wealth of the state, and advance civilization as perhaps no other one thing would do. How should it be done, and in the next fifteen years?

"The state should assume the care and responsibility for all roads in the state, and for all time do away with the inefficiency and mockery of 'working the roads' in the primitive way, that each year has wasted enough money to pay the interest on a capital sum that would have given the state almost a perfect system years ago.

"In this age of gigantic undertakings, with the Panama Canal, the Drainage Canal, Canada building three main lines across the continent, and the subways of New York, equaling the greatest undertakings of the Ancients, shall the great men of our state find it hard to conceive of a state commission endorsed as to fitness by the banks and commercial men, who could furnish the many millions needed, not allowing it to become the football of politicians, but organized as the great railway properties are, with a president and board of directors above suspicion? A non-partisan syndicate of our strongest men, who could insure honest, business-like procedure and give to the people full worth of all outlay. The saving of easily a dollar and a half a ton on the acreage haul from the farm to the railways would justify a moderate road tax, that, in a term of years, would return interest and principal on an immense outlay without our citizens feeling it. Suppose the whole investment was equal to the money cost of a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the saving of money to the state annually, and the vast increase of wealth would justify the outlay. The increase in farm values and profits and other advantages to farmers, would be a strong argument to enlist their hearty support with perhaps less taxes than the present system entails.

"The railroad men, the industrial and commercial clubs and the multiplying automobile owners and manufacturers are all greatly interested. More and more our rich farmers are buying automobiles, and with such a system of roads through the state much of the hauling of products to the station, at a minimum cost, by auto trucks, might be inaugurated. If, in the early fall, the Industrial Club of our city would invite all similar bodies of business men in central Illinois to gather in Danville to canvass the matter and listen to suitable speakers representing the national and Illinois state good roads organizations, it might lay the foundation for an early state-wide movement that would enlist the legislature to act on some gigantic plan worthy of one of the richest states in the Union. To remain as we are for another quarter of a century would be a reflection on the good sense and capacity of our statesmen and business men, who can inaugurate a state-wide system of good roads equal to the best in other states. As you know, I am quite powerless to be of much use, but am emboldened to appeal to you and through you to some of the most powerful men in our state, to take up in their own way, this great need of Illinois. The Industrial Club would do all in its power to make the effort successful, and it greatly would advance the prosperity and fame of Danville to be known as the center of such a movement.

"Pardon my presumption in urging this matter, but its vast benefits would redound to the honor of all of you who would throw your strength into it. The tide all over the state is rising, and now is the time when friends of the state and people can do their best life work for the state of Illinois.

"Very sincerely yours,
"A. G. Phelps Dodge."

ARKANSAS BOOSTER

George R. Brown, secretary of the board of trade, Little Rock, Ark., who attended the convention of the A. B. A. at Detroit, operating the publicity bureau of the Arkansas Bankers Association, is a hustler, all right, and is out with a circular letter calling attention to the opportunities afforded by their wonderful country.

ANOTHER GET-RICH-QUICK STORY

Grant Richards' new novel, "Caviare" (Houghton-Mifflin Company), recounts the adventures of a young Englishman who, being in love with an American heiress, starts out at Monte Carlo with a few hundreds, and shortly blossoms out in New York as owner of millions, amassed in a single deal in stocks. Whereupon, runs the tale, the hero hastens to rehabilitate his prospective father-in-law, ruined in the same deal, and all ends well. The story is clean and told in a vein of equable humor. The book is a "chaser" for the Wallingford series and already has gone into its third edition. It looks like a "best seller."

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, October 7th.—Bumper cereal and fruit crops in the Spokane country are already having a wholesome effect for good on conditions generally in this section, and the outlook for the future is exceedingly bright. One of the first indications of the revival is increased building activity in Spokane. Eighty-six building permits for structures, costing a total of $214,515, were issued during the month of September, a gain of $55,950 over September, 1911. In the first two days of October nine permits for a total of $16,440 were issued, indicating that September's activity may be overshadowed by its successor. The collection of grains, grasses, fruits, vegetables and live stock at the Spokane Interstate Fair last week is a concrete example of the great size and splendid quality of soil products of the Spokane country this year. From all parts of this territory are assembled the largest and best exhibits ever shown in the Spokane country.

The success already attained in preliminary plans for the fifth national apple show, to be staged in Spokane on a $42,000 basis, September 11th to 17th, is another indication of the upward trend of financial things. Business men of Spokane contributed a $60,000 fund for apple show and development purposes this year.

Now that the bumper wheat crop is safely in the sack, apples and other fruits are occupying the center of the stage. Never in the history of the Pacific Northwest has such a big yield of apples been realized. This is due not only to increased acreage but to a greatly increased yield per acre. Improved methods of marketing will enable the growers to dispose of their product with greater facility this year, although much remains to be accomplished in the matter of organization and co-operation for distribution purposes. A determined campaign for evaporation, dryers and canneries has been taken up, with the hope of increasing revenues and preventing waste.

Keystone Water Users Association Organized

The Keystone Water Users Association has been organized to place water on between 5,000 and 25,000 acres of semi-arid land in the vicinity of Sprague, Wash., and Keystone lakes, in the northern part of Lincoln county. After more detailed engineering investigation the project will be started and the land devoted to fruit culture. E. A. Moritz, formerly government irrigation engineer at North Yakima, Wash., is in charge of the investigation, to conduct which an assessment of 10 cents an acre has been levied. The maximum raise to irrigate the proposed area will be about 90 feet, while a considerable area can be watered with a lift of 50 feet. Engineers, after a short survey of the situation, have estimated that an assessment of $30 an acre on a basis of 10,000 acres, and a lift of 65 feet will be sufficient to complete the work, and that a maintenance fee of about $3.50 would suffice.

Reduced Rates on Shipments

A compromise agreement entered into between Spokane, Seattle and Tacoma shippers, railroads engaged in traffic across the Cascade mountains, and the state public service commission, will give Spokane reduced rates on carload shipments from Pacific coast points. Most of the commodities affected are products of California shipped north by water. Spokane made the fight for lower carload rates from the coast on twenty-six commodities, that they might compete on more equal terms with the coast shippers, who had been given a lower carload rate last spring, which placed the local shippers at a disadvantage. The agreement, as it now stands, will give Spokane relief on nine of the twenty-six commodities they desired. The settlement, as explained by Spokane authorities, is a "saw-off" all around, and while Spokane makes considerable gain, the local shippers have made concessions.

Improvement Bonds at Par

Approximately $380,000 in Spokane improvement bonds, issued to contractors Fife Brothers & Kennedy, together with $103,000 in cash, have been disposed of by the contractors through the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company at a price netting the contractors slightly better than 97 cents on the dollar, according to Frank Williams, in charge of the bank's bond business. This is considered the best price for a large issue of special improvement bonds ever obtained by a Spokane contractor, and Mr. Williams states that the bank has already sold every dollar's worth of the bonds at par to local investors.

Spokane to Be Made Fruit Storage Center

By an arrangement announced by the Northern Pacific, fruit growers of the Spokane country will be able to decrease the amount of money tied up heretofore in the moving of their crops, and Spokane will be made the fruit storage center of the Northwest. The plan includes building of a central storage plant in this city, with a capacity of 5,000 carloads. In addition, the Northern Pacific announces that this city will be made a storage-in-transit center October 19th. Under the present tariffs and arrangements, Washington, Oregon and Idaho fruits destined for eastern points cannot be stored west of St. Paul, and a special storage rate of ten cents a hundred pounds is added. After October 19th the fruit may be stored in Spokane at a cost of five cents a hundred. The project of building the 5,000-car storage plant will call for the formation of a company, in which the growers themselves will be interested on a co-operative basis. It is proposed to handle here the product of the Spokane valley, Wenatchee, Walla Walla, North Yakima, Palouse and Lewiston.

Harvesting Begun

Harvesting is on in full sway in the grain districts of the Spokane country. The bumper crop which stood in the fields of eastern Washington and northern Idaho when the rains began a month ago will all be saved, several days of brilliant sunshine and gentle but drying winds having put the wheat, oats and barley in fine condition. In the Palouse country about a week more is expected to put the grain in the sack. The same is true of the Walla Walla, Lewiston and Big Bend districts.

Bank of Montana Organized

Articles of incorporation for the Bank of Montana have been filed with the county auditor at Billings, Mont. The legal life of this institution is 40 years, and the capital to open on will be $50,000. Seven directors have been chosen to serve until January 1st. They are Chas. O'Donnell, R. Molt, A. H. Arnett, L. H. Wenske and Jos Zimmerman of Billings, Kenneth McLean of Miles City, and A. H. Marble of Cheyenne, Wyo. The bank will be located at Billings, but the date of opening has not been made public.

Banking Notes

Among out-of-town bankers who came to Spokane for the nineteenth annual interstate fair were W. R. Anderson, cashier Farmers State of Colfax, Wash.; A. A. Crane, president First Bank of Harrison, Idaho, and Stewart Young, president Rathdrum (Idaho) State Bank. All report improvement of conditions in their localities.

John W. Hall, former president of the First National of Montezuma, Iowa, has bought a majority of the stock of the Burlington Mining Company in the Coeur d'Alene district. Mr. Hall is now in Spokane on business connected with the mine.

Mrs. J. P. M. Richards, wife of the president of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, died at the family residence in Spokane last week after an illness of two years. Mrs. Richards was a pioneer of Spokane.

W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National at Spokane, and a member of the executive council of the clearing house section of the American Bankers Association, has been named one of three delegates to represent the association at the International Dry Farming Congress, to be held in Lethbridge, Alberta, this fall. The other delegates are B. F. Harris of Champaign, Ill., and J. W. Wheeler of St. Paul.

The local chapter of the American Institute of Banking has received word that Byron W. Moser of St. Louis, recently elected president of the organization, will visit in Spokane this fall. A large reception is being arranged for Mr. Moser.

The Union Securities Company of Spokane has secured control of most of the stock of the Colfax (Wash.) State Bank. The following officers were elected: J. K. McCornack, president; R. M. Hanna, vice-president, and R. F. Bigelow, cashier. Mr. Bigelow has been with the Old National Bank in Spokane.

James C. Cunningham, vice-president and manager of the Union Trust and Savings Bank of Spokane, received appointment as vice-president for Washington of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association. Mr. Cunningham is expected to return shortly from Chicago.

SECRETARIES SEND OUT PROCEEDINGS BOOKS

Among the convention proceedings books which have been received at this office to date are those of Wisconsin, California, Iowa and Vermont. All are neatly bound and reflect much time and work spent in their compilation. Secretary Bartlett sends out a book for Wisconsin containing close to 300 pages, replete with information relating to the association, its members and activities. Secretary Colburn of California has a volume profusely illustrated with pictures of prominent members of the association, while those of Secretary Hall of Iowa and those of Secretary C. S. Webster of Vermont faithfully detail all that transpired at their respective conventions. The Vermont association, while only a few years old, has shown a consistent growth and the character of the meetings has been of a very instructive nature from the beginning. An appeal is made to bankers to work toward including every bank in the state in the membership.

EDMONTON NEWS

Edmonton, Alta., October 7th.—Substantial increases in all lines of financial, commercial, industrial and municipal activity at Edmonton, Alta., are shown by reports for September, the most rapid progress being in building operations. Two hundred and twenty-two permits, involving an expenditure of $2,023,075, were issued last month, as against 216 permits for buildings costing $369,970 in September, 1911, and 138 buildings, valued at $169,863 in September, 1910. The total for the first nine months this year is 2,981 buildings valued at $12,274,551, as against 1,382 buildings costing $3,076,750, the same time in 1911. Bank clearings reached a total of $17,702,714 in September, as against $10,221,782 for the same month a year ago. The total clearings for the first nine months this year amount to $153,491,342, as against $80,536,785 for the first nine months of 1911. Custom house receipts for September amounted to $159,044, as against $65,076 the same month a year ago. The total for the first nine months this year is $1,098,834, as compared with $482,888 for the same period last year.

J. E. Brown, president of the Edmonton Wholesale Merchants Association, says all lines of wholesale and retail merchandising in Edmonton show gains of from 65 to 150 per cent over September, 1911. Stores are being established in new towns in central Alberta, along the Canadian Pacific, Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern railroads.

Banks and implement houses report that collections are better this fall than at any time in the last three years. Large crops of all kinds of grains were safely harvested, and threshing is now under way in many districts around Edmonton. Wheat generally is of higher quality than in 1911, and millers are placing large orders.

There are large increases in sales of city and farm land. Smaller farms, to be devoted to mixed agriculture, including dairy cows, hogs and poultry, are in demand with prices somewhat higher than a year ago.

"The fall season is opening earlier than formerly," said H. Milton Martin, president of the Edmonton Board of Trade, "and there is every indication that business of all kinds will be better the next six months than at any time previously. English capital and some American investors are looking to central Alberta as a safe field and scores of experienced farmers are coming into this district from various parts of the world."

George M. Hall, industrial commissioner for the municipality, reports receiving numerous inquiries from eastern Canada and the United States as to the manufacturing possibilities in Edmonton and the tributary country. Seven branch factories were located in September.

BANK CONSOLIDATIONS

During the period from December 6, 1911, to September 5, 1912, there were four state bank consolidations in Chicago, three of the banks,—the Metropolitan Trust and Savings, Western Trust and Savings, and Prairie State,—being taken over by the Central Trust Company of Illinois on December 15, 1911, and January 27 and May 4, 1912, respectively. The Merchants Bank was absorbed by the Merchants Loan and Trust Company of Chicago on January 2d.

Indiana

The bank of A. T. Bowen and Company of Delphi has deposits of over $1,100,000 in a little city of 2,100 people. The deposits are the largest of any private bank in Indiana and are also the largest of any private bank in the United States in a town the size of Delphi. The business of A. T. Bowen and Company is unique in that the capital of the bank is only $10,000 and only $4,400 in cash and on reserve is carried. The last named amount gives the Bowen bank the record of being "the bank without money." Mr. Bowen was among the early bankers in the Middle West to foresee the rapidly increased use of checks, and early encouraged his customers to use checks instead of money. He also gave all checks and drafts at par at a time when the exchange charges were larger and more universal than they are now. As high as five per cent is paid to customers on certificates of deposit.

The business of A. T. Bowen and Company was established in 1837, and since 1844 has been conducted in the same room. Mr. Bowen has also operated a private bank in New York City for twenty years and divides his time between Delphi and New York. Mr. Bowen's father, a pioneer banker in Indiana, established the bank.

The deposits of A. T. Bowen and Company in Delphi are larger than the deposits of any other private, state, national or savings bank or trust company in any town in Indiana of not more than four times the population of Delphi, or in any town in the United States of no larger population than Delphi and having as many financial institutions (five) as Delphi. The bank is examined by the state twice a year. The other banks in Delphi total somewhat less than a million dollars in deposits, so that the little city of 2,100 people has bank deposits of two million dollars.

Preparations now are being made for the organization of a new bank for Indianapolis, to be known as the Indiana State Bank. It will be capitalized at from $300,000 to $500,000, and probably will begin business about November 1st.

Indianapolis.—A site has been purchased and announcement made by officials of the East Side State Bank that work is soon to be begun on the erection of a modern two-story banking building in Irvington at an approximate cost of $15,000.

The structure will be built on a site at the southern corner of Washington Street and Ritter Avenue. The new building will cover the entire site, which has a frontage of forty feet on Washington Street and 100 feet on Ritter Avenue. The building is to be of brick construction and, in addition to the banking quarters on the ground floor, will have space for a store room. The purpose for which the second floor is to be used has not been determined. Large vaults will be located in the basement of the building.

NEW TRUST COMPANY CHARTERED

A charter has been granted for the Equitable Trust Company, Atlantic City, N. J., with $200,000 capital. Ex-Mayor Harry Bacharach will be president. Others interested include Dr. Emery Marvel, George B. Harris, B. Frank Off, Samuel I. Braunstein, Henry Weinman, Frank J. Moore and Hiram Mathis.

NEW BANK FOR PASADENA

Pasadena, Cal., October 8th.—A group of Pasadena capitalists headed by W. H. Hubbard has organized the Citizens Savings Bank. Articles of incorporation have been filed with the county clerk. The bank starts with a capital stock of $100,000, which will later be increased to $250,000, and a trust department will be added. The directors are W. H. Hubbard, Charles Durrand and Henry T. Hazard.

Accounts of Iowa banks invited. Reserve agents for national banks

The Bankers Life Company of Des Moines, Ia., officered and owned by leading bankers of that state, is having the usual difficulties incident to a change in rates. Their business, built up on the assessment plan, recently has been changed to embrace certain features of the old line insurance plans, and consequently some yelping is going on among the policy holders.

Des Moines, Oct. 9th.—The relation of the bank and the Iowa manufacturer are to be discussed once more. The Iowa League of Commercial Clubs, in making its call for the state convention at Sioux City, October 22d and 23d, calls especial attention to this phase of the program. A committee of bankers and merchants is at that time going to take up the proposition with a view to making Iowa credits more substantial and fostering industrial development all over the state. It is claimed that small manufacturing establishments all over the state have been closed down within the past two years for want of confidence in commercial paper by local bankers. The official call for the convention continues: "We are not criticizing the banks. They did what they were obliged to do in the premises under our present monetary system. There is scarcely enough real money in the United States to pay our postage. We should have an elastic currency to take the place of a doubtful credit system. No other nation in the world would do the volume of business that is done in America to-day with practically nothing back of our credit but confidence. The credit system will always be of an elastic character, but with proper legislation a banker can be made absolutely certain in his securities against credits, and it is our desire to place Iowa credits, with the assistance of our banks, in the very front ranks. When we protect our banks we protect our credits, for our banks deal more largely in our credits than anything else."

Not the Same Gang

Gust Patek, Iowa detective for the Iowa Bankers Association, is convinced that the gang which robbed the Grand River bank of $1,000, is not the same as that which later robbed the Lake Park bank of $3,000. He thinks that the former is an Omaha or Des Moines bunch, while the latter is either working out of Minneapolis or Sioux Falls. No arrest has been made in the Lake Park case except the one man spoken of in my last letter.

For Private Bank Inspection

Bankers in Des Moines, while not as yet united upon the method to pursue, are seemingly unanimous in the opinion that the next legislature should provide some means of private bank inspection. It is proposed to require a system of reports such as will make it possible for the state insurance department to keep in touch with the situation. It is thought that the Des Moines bankers will take up the question at meetings of the Bankers Club this winter. Bankers in other cities in Iowa are in favor of legislation along the same line.

Interest Rates Will Advance

Arthur Reynolds, president of the Des Moines National, was quoted in a Des Moines paper as stating that loans are so low in Iowa this fall that a movement is on foot to reduce the rate of interest to 5 per cent. When this interview was published, people began to inquire at the various banks for low interest loans. Mr. Reynolds was quick to explain that he had been misunderstood by the reporter and that interest rates in Iowa are more apt to advance than to go lower than 6 per cent. Conditions are excellent in Iowa, Mr. Reynolds says, much better than in the East. There has been a falling off in demand for money on the part of farmers for speculative purposes, indicating that the furore for acquiring lands in the West, Southwest and Northwest has subsided. Also, the indications are that the farmers have largely completed the payments for lands of this character and are not borrowing money nowadays to pay on their contracts.

September Clearings High

September was a splendid month for the Des Moines bankers. Clearings for the month show a total of $18,919,540.13, as compared with $16,539,274.02 in 1911. This is a gain of $2,380,266.11 in favor of 1912, which is regarded by Des Moines financiers as a most satisfactory showing.

Judgments in Favor of Bankers

Five farmers at Treynor who have been financing the Iowa and Omaha Short Line, connecting Council Bluffs and Treynor, have been forced to file confessions of judgment aggregating more than $105,000 in favor of Council Bluffs and Treynor bankers. The City National of Council Bluffs, the Treynor Savings of Treynor and August Dammrow, president of the latter, are named. Five confessions of judgment filed prior to this time were named as follows: August F. Dammrow, $44,413.39; Treynor Savings, $38,890.49; City National, $25,396.44; Council Bluffs Savings, $17,000; First National, $69,053.78; B. P. Wickham, $35,832.59. It is stated that the suits and resulting judgments are largely of a friendly nature and it is not anticipated that the road will be embarrassed in the future.

Sold Newspapers on Sunday

An interesting situation developed at Guthrie Center recently when A. D. Lemmon, druggist and president of the Guthrie Center

Farmers Savings Bank, was arrested for selling newspapers on Sunday. It seems that Guthrie Center has had a Sunday closing war on its hands, following a struggle over whether or not Sunday base ball should be permitted. For three Sundays every restaurant, drug store and ice cream parlor was closed and not even cigars were sold or meals served. Then Mr. Lemmon opened his store and dispensed the Sunday morning papers. He was taken before "hizzoner" and it is said that the end is not yet.

John Burianek, Jr., Causes Arrest of Forger

Cashier John Burianek, Jr., of the Peoples Savings at Cedar Rapids, nipped in the bud an effort on the part of David Schueler of Peoria to make a "killing" by means of a bogus certificate of deposit for $2,500. Schueler, it seems, rented an office in the Cedar Rapids Savings Bank Building and had secured a loan of $500 on the certificate when Burianek became suspicious. He communicated with the First National at Lincoln, Ill., in which the money was reported to be deposited. Then he swore out a warrant and caused Schueler's arrest.

Pay Large Dividends

Stockholders in the various Davenport banks received $71,500 from the institutions as dividends on October first. The First National, which pays in November, and the Home Savings, which pays in January, did not participate in the division, but the other institutions of the city were on the job. It is said that the dividends are the largest ever paid. The total paid by the banks each year amounts to $241,500, while the average annual dividends are 9.9 per cent.

Iowa Banking Notes

Fred E. Frisbie of Sheldon, a banker who was named elector on the Republican ticket in the eleventh district to succeed Simon Fisher of Rock Rapids, who resigned because he favors Roosevelt to Taft, will in turn be required to retire. It seems that a ruling has been made that as a director and officer in a national bank, he is ineligible. C. L. Voss, the electoral candidate in the tenth district, also will be compelled to retire because he is a banker and comes within the terms of the same ruling.

The Northwest Davenport Savings has opened its doors and takes pleasure in the announcement that by three o'clock in the afternoon of its first day its deposits had reached $35,350.26. There were 100 savings depositors and 50 commercial accounts and the bank officials feel that for a new institution they are "going some."

Fred Risser, cashier of the Central State at Des Moines, read a paper before the Des Moines Credit Men's Association on "Economic Conditions in the Middle West." He declared that the financial outlook is splendid, with easy money, collections good, and crop prospects excellent. Mr. Risser attributed the high cost of living to the tendency on the part of consumers to live more expensively than they did in former years.

President Lee Stevens of the Century Savings has mailed out neat little booklets showing that the Century, since January 26, 1910, has increased its deposits from $465,246.74 to $994,864.50 at the call for September 11, a remarkable gain.

Iowans have been especially interested in the recent sentence of Earl Standard for robbery of the American National at Pomona, Calif. Like a great many residents of California, Standard was formerly a resident of Iowa and lived at Northboro in Page county.

Charles S. Huttig, head of the American Bankers Association, was once a resident of Muscatine. With George M. Reynolds, former president, and Arthur Reynolds, future president of the A. B. A., also Iowa products, this state feels that it is entitled to take a reasonable degree of pride in what she has done.

Mrs. J. I. Sweeney, wife of a well-known banker at Osage, died of paralysis at the age of 61 after a short illness.

The loan shark evil is slated as the subject of an address and discussion at the Iowa state conference of charities and corrections, which will be held at Cedar Rapids November 17th to 20th. It is anticipated that much good will come out of this debate.

The directors of the Davenport Savings at a meeting last week passed resolutions in memory of the late Henry Struck, cashier and director. Mr. Struck's death occurred July 18th. The resolutions recite something of the history of the man and are warm in their praise of his devotion.

The bonds for $124,000 for river improvement in Des Moines are having a serious time. Chapman & Mills of Chicago, after securing the bonds, announced a misapprehension and refused to take them. They will be advertised again.

Sioux City

By JOHN J. BIDDISON.

Sioux City's fourteenth bank has opened for business. The Morningside bank, a private institution, but backed by several men of considerable means, opened its doors on St. Aubin Avenue, in Morningside, a suburb of Sioux City, on Monday, October 7th. It claims a responsibility of $100,000. E. C. Peters is president of the bank, and John Scott, Jr., is cashier. M. C. Peters, son of the president, was the first depositor.

This is the third bank to be organized since the Merchants National was absorbed by the First National, nearly two years ago. The other two are the American Savings and the Mid-West.

Depositors to be Paid in Full

The German-American State Bank, of Witten, S. D., which closed its doors two weeks ago, has cleared away the debris in record time, through the medium of State Bank Examiner Wingfield. The three other banks of the town have taken over the affairs of the defunct institution, and the depositors will be paid in full.

Death of Orville Schubert

Orville Schubert, cashier of the State Bank of Isabel, S. D., died at the home of his parents in Pierre, S. D., after an illness with typhoid fever. He was sick only a few days.

Sioux City Postal Savings Bank One Year Old

Sioux City's postal savings bank celebrated its first anniversary Tuesday, October 8th. Sioux City bankers who have recently been willing to be quoted are of the opinion that it has been a benefit, rather than a hindrance, to their business, for the reason that it has drawn money out of hiding that would not have been deposited in the banks themselves, while the government has re-deposited most of the money with the banks here, all but two of the principal ones are depositories of the government bank funds. There has been deposited during the year, $15,333 more than has been drawn out. Most of the depositors are foreigners.

The Bank of Sidney Ark., has been chartered by the state, capital $10,000. J. P. Bone is president; S. T. Ham, vice-president; D. H. Yeager, secretary and treasurer.

FOURTH NATIONAL OPTIMISTIC

The Fourth National Bank of New York, in its October circular, says:

"At no time since the year opened has the money market situation been as interesting as it is to-day. This is because the efforts under way to move the crops at the West has produced the first shortage in the supply of freight cars reported by the railroads of the United States since October, 1909. Traffic is so great on many of the western lines as to cause a serious congestion at various distributing points, with the result that a vast amount of money is tied up, pending the marketing of the grain that is awaiting shipment to all sections. This congestion will be relieved gradually, but advices from all parts of the West and Southwest indicate that the sum required to move the crops this year will be very greatly in excess of what was used for that purpose a year ago. The banks are admirably prepared to meet this demand, but during the period when the crop movement is in full swing the banks of many important reserve centers are likely to experience a greater demand for money than ever before from this source.

"Trade expansion is continuing throughout the United States, which is another reason why money rates are just now at the highest level of the year. With the rise in call loan rates during the closing days of September, a great deal of out-of-town money was attracted to New York.

"A canvass just made of the southern territory shows that the banks of that section are in a very strong position, and that the cotton crop will be moved without serious difficulty. There is plenty of money in the South; most of the banks being in a generally better position than last year, and when the new cotton crop is paid for the people of that territory will certainly enjoy increased prosperity. The movement of cotton will be in full swing very soon, and Europe will be a heavy bidder for whatever surplus there is to spare. Cotton creates exchange faster than any other crop raised in the United States, and the enormous export this season will be of great benefit in promoting the import of gold from Europe.

"One reason for the great activity in the Wall Street loan market during the closing days of September was the heavy increase in the amount which has to be disbursed this year in connection with the October first payments. Altogether $173,000,000 will be paid out in connection with these maturing obligations. It must be remembered also that there is a considerable volume of short term notes which fall due before the close of the year. A large number of these issues have already been provided for, but there is still a good deal of financing to be done in connection with the large payments which invariably have to be made towards the close of each calendar year. The New York banks have not a large surplus reserve, but there is no reason to look for undue stringency in the money market or for such an advance in discount rates as would really bring hardship to commercial borrowers. While trade is as active as it is to-day merchants will have to borrow heavily, and there is every reason why the banks should afford them all the accommodation that they are entitled to. It takes a great deal of money to operate the immense steel plants and other manufacturing interests on the 'rush order basis' which is being followed at many industrial centers. With gold flowing to the United States from Europe and with the treasury possessed of a sufficient working balance to permit of large deposits of government funds with the banks should occasion require it, the money market would seem to be fairly well protected at this time against any very startling advances in discount rates."

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

CHICAGO CHAPTER, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF BANKING

W. W. WALTON

Walter D. Moody, managing director of the Chicago Plan Association, gave a very interesting and instructive stereopticon lecture before the members of Chicago Chapter, American Institute of Banking, at its first general meeting Tuesday evening, October 8th. The plans outlined in his lecture will be watched with great interest by those who had the privilege of attending the meeting. The late Daniel Hudson Burnham, accredited with being the world's greatest "city planner" of this age, was one of the originators of this plan, and too much praise cannot be given him for the prominent part he has taken in this work.

This undertaking for the beautifying of Chicago is considered by many as only a dream, but Mr. Moody conclusively proved that this plan is not "a dream." He showed views of the city at different stages of its wonderful growth, and of the rapid progress it made; also views of the new Blackstone and Sherman hotels in comparison with the old Fremont House, and the new Northwestern station in comparison with their first station.

In building a house one must have a plan; in fitting a garment the tailor must have a model; so, in building a city, a definite plan must be drawn up and followed with precision. As striking examples of where plans have been followed in beautifying cities, and which have been successfully worked out, views were shown of Paris, Berlin and London. Similar plans are at the present time being worked out in Washington, Cleveland and Seattle.

The tendency is for people to locate in cities, and Chicago, on account of its geographical location and the large amount of natural resources at its door, is destined to be the world's greatest city, and some definite plan should be mapped out for the future of the city and assiduously followed. Much labor and money will be necessary to bring this work to a successful termination, and this can be done only with the co-operation of all those interested in a "city beautiful," built along scientific lines, and, while it is not expected that this achievement will be completed before fifty, or even seventy-five years, those who are interested in this movement are very optimistic and feel confident that results will be accomplished by that time; in fact, it is stated considerable progress will be made during the next twenty-five years. Views were shown of Paris, the world's most beautiful city at the present time, as a vivid illustration of what can be accomplished if a definite plan is followed.

The Chicago Plan contemplates a civic center, boulevards and the main thoroughfares diverging from this center like a fan, thus relieving congestion in traffic. This plan will also give added conveniences in travel and opportunities to enjoy the fresh air and sunshine. Mr. Moody places the conservation of pure air, light and sunshine of more vital importance than the conservation of the natural resources, which after all are the real natural resources, and the Chicago Plan Commission has not neglected the conservation of these resources in their plans for a greater city. An outer parkway and lagoon on the lake front is also planned, and it is hoped, during the course of time, to extend this as far as Lake Forest. Views were shown of what the commission contemplates doing toward beautifying Chicago, and showing conditions as they exist at the present time and wherein it is advisable and practicable to carry out the plans outlined.

Mr. Moody is very confident in the belief that when the population on the Pacific Coast, the most resourceful part of the country at the present time, reaches twenty millions of people, that Chicago will be the commercial center of the world.

Too much credit cannot be given to those gentlemen who have contributed of their wealth and energies in making this commission possible, as it has only been through their efforts that the work has been so successfully inaugurated. Mr. Moody also stated that no other class of business men in this city is so well represented on the committee as Chicago bankers.

Mr. Moody's lecture was very interesting, and it is only regretted that he did not have the time to give the institute more of his valuable ideas as to the plans of the commission, and he certainly can depend upon the moral influence of the Chicago Chapter in such a grand work.

The Rhetoric and Composition class met Friday evening, October 4th, about three hundred and fifty being in attendance. Mr. Halsey M. Matteson gave a very interesting lecture. The class in Commercial Law met Tuesday evening, October 8th, and although the weather was inclement during the day, over three hundred were in attendance at this class.

Chicago Chapter anticipates enjoying a very prosperous and profitable year, as we are already assured that our membership will be thirteen to fourteen hundred members.

CANADA FROM THE BANK CLERK'S POINT OF VIEW

London, Oct. 7, 1912.—There is no doubt that a considerable number of young bank clerks—especially those who have received their training in Scotland—proceed yearly to Canada in the service of the Canadian banks. One of the first things which very many clerks do when they have passed the examination in England of the Institute of Bankers, in Scotland of the Institute of Bankers, is to apply to some foreign or colonial bank for a position on its staff abroad. They find, as a rule, that it is no easy matter to obtain an appointment forthwith, and it is possibly due to this fact that so many of them accept appointments in Canadian banks, notwithstanding the small salaries offered by such institutions compared with the salaries paid to bank officials in the East, and South America, and even in South Africa. The bank clerk is, perhaps, inclined rather too much to sacrifice the future for the present, influenced no doubt by the immediate increase in his salary from 50 pounds or 60 pounds a year in England, and even less in Scotland, to 120 pounds or 140 pounds a year which he receives on proceeding to Canada. Very few ask themselves whether their position in twenty years' time will be better or worse than it would be if they were to remain in this country; and out of those who go to Canada there will be very many men, who, after twenty years' service, will feel that they would have done just as well, if not better, if they had stopped at home.

Many clerks have left for Canada during the past few years, and many more will no doubt follow them there, and in view of the conflicting views which are held as to the prospects for bank clerks in Canada, it is desirable that the advantages and disadvantages should be placed before those who may be thinking of going to that country. To many in England it must often have been a matter for surprise that the Canadian banks should be unable to staff their branches with Canadians, but the fact is that the Canadian does not settle down easily to banking. He is more happy-go-lucky and restless than his English brother. Hence, men from England and Scotland are preferred to him by the Canadian banks, in most cases, as being better educated, steadier and more conscientious in the performance of their duties. A Canadian university student informed an English bank clerk who joined one of the Canadian banks not very long ago that, when a Canadian had failed at everything else out there, he went into a bank, and that the worst class of Canadians was to be found in the banks. The salary offered to those willing to proceed to Canada naturally varies with the experience which each applicant has gained. If a bank clerk has had three or four years' experience in English or Scotch banking, he should insist on receiving $700 a year to commence, and, in view of the difficulty which the Canadian banks experience in getting suitable men, he will be almost certain to obtain this amount. Less experienced clerks can readily obtain $500 a year. The increases of salary when in Canada vary from $50 to $150—the average being about $100—and are given yearly for several consecutive years. It may even be said that the tendency is toward the higher sum mentioned, the banks having to be as generous as possible in order to prevent their clerks from leaving their service. An efficient man can almost reckon on his salary being increased yearly until he is in receipt of a salary of $1,500 a year. As regards marriage, most of the banks have a fixed minimum salary on which a clerk is allowed to enter that state; in one bank the minimum is $1,000, in another it is $1,200. Most of the clerks in the banks are under forty years of age. A few years' experience at a branch fits a clerk for a branch managership, and, in fact, by the time a clerk reaches the age of thirty, he will either have become a branch manager or have given up banking altogether.

Another important matter to consider is the cost of living. It is said that a clerk can live comfortably on $500 a year in Toronto or in any city in Ontario, less being required in the country towns. From Winnipeg westward, living is more expensive, and special allowances varying, from $200 to $300, are made to those who proceed there. Good board and lodging cost $5 a week in Toronto; outside the city the cost is less. Some clerks rent rooms at $2 a week and take all their meals at the restaurants. Board and lodging may hence be put down at $250 a year. Clothing would cost $100 at the outside—a good suit of clothes costs $25; boots cost $5 a pair; but neither the clothes nor the boots are as good as those obtainable in England at the same price; shirts, collars and ties cost about 25 per cent more than in England. Washing may be taken at $30 a year. Car fares may be put down at $25 a year, where necessary. Cigarettes cost about twice as much as they do in England; pipe tobacco costs about the same as in England, while smokeable cigars can be had for 2c. upwards. From these details it is evident that it is impossible for any one living in Toronto, for instance, to save anything out of a salary of $500 a year, though it would be possible to do so in some of the up-country villages. The clerk with $700 a year should be able to save something, but whatever he saves will not be more than he will require to meet the cost of taking a holiday in England, should he so wish at the end of two or three years. Apart from this, there are many who help to support their parents, and in such cases a holiday at home must be a more or less remote pleasure—for several years, at any rate.

A year or so ago a young bank clerk went to Canada. In a letter received in reply to an inquiry as to whether he liked the change, he stated that he did not regret having gone to Canada, but added that, had he foreseen all that he now knows, he would have had some hesitation in accepting the post which was offered to him. When asked whether he would recommend bank clerks to go to Canada, he said that he found it difficult to reply. He "would hardly like to recommend others to go," though he "would not advise them definitely to stop at home." Canada, he thinks, as a growing country, offers as good, if not better, prospects as other colonies, and he would impress on those who decide to go the possibility of their being able to better their position by leaving banking for other pursuits, such changes taking place more frequently in Canada than in England.

Any bank clerk who has the opportunity of going abroad ought to consider, not the immediate present, but the future. He should ask himself this question, "Shall I be better off in twenty years' time by going abroad or by staying at home?" If he is energetic, devoted to his work and determined to succeed, he will, we believe, do just as well in this country as elsewhere. If he can feel that he has every reason to expect that he will be receiving even £250 a year by the time he is forty, he would be well advised to remain at home rather than proceed abroad. No doubt, if he stops in England, it is very unlikely that he will ever receive a salary such as is paid to bank managers in the East, but he will enjoy much better health than do his friends in India and China—an advantage which cannot be measured in money. If home prospects are compared with those prevailing in Canada, it is obvious that the possibility of receiving $1,500 or so a year, even by the time a man is thirty, is not very alluring when one takes into account, on the one hand, the salaries paid to efficient men at home, and, on the other hand, the severance of home ties, the increased cost of living, and the climatic conditions of Canada. It would, therefore, seem that, if a bank clerk intends to remain in banking employment, he would be well advised not to go to Canada; but if he merely wishes to enter a Canadian bank in order to get to Canada, and has no intention of stopping in its service for more than a few years, he will find such an institution very useful in that the employment which it affords enables him to keep himself until he finds some more congenial and lucrative occupation.

A charter has been issued to the First National Bank of Chino, Cal., capital $25,000, a conversion of the Chino State Bank.

NEW BANKS ORGANIZED

In the time which elapsed from December 6, 1911, to September 5, 1912, forty-five state banks were organized in Illinois, with combined capital of $3,305,000. The bank with the largest capital was the Mercantile Trust and Savings of Chicago, organized June 24, 1912, with a capital of $250,000. Eight of the forty-five new institutions are located in Chicago, viz.: Lawndale State, West Englewood Bank, Franklin Trust and Savings, Lincoln State Savings, Mercantile Trust and Savings, Hyde Park State, and State Bank of Italy. Each is capitalized at $200,000, with the exception of the Mercantile Trust and Savings. Some of the more important down-state banks are: Paxton State, with capital of $100,000, and Union State Savings at Kewanee, with a like amount. Two Chicago suburban banks, each with capital of $100,000, were organized.—Suburban Trust and Savings of Oak Park and State Bank of Oak Park. There were 598 state banks in existence on September 5th.

STATE SAVINGS BANK DIVIDEND

George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., state superintendent of banks, has announced the payment of a third dividend to creditors of the State Savings Bank of New York, which closed its doors on December 1st last, following the discovery of a defalcation by John Pucci, the teller.

Two dividends covering 15 per cent in each instance have been paid the creditors, and the present dividend, which is for an additional 10 per cent, provides for a disbursement of $16,330. The additional payment will bring a total of $72,536 which has been paid the creditors of the institution. There were filed with the state banking department claims of 1,007 creditors, amounting to $181,352.

MICHIGAN BANKS MAKE FINE SHOWING

Lansing, Mich.—State Banking Commissioner Doyle has made public his report of the 429 state banks and trust companies operating in the state, at the close of business September 4th. The banks and trust companies show a gain of $6,487,695.34 in aggregate business since the report of June 14, 1912. This is considered one of the most remarkable showings ever made by state banks and trust companies, for the time stated, in the history of the state.

State banks show an increase in loans since the report of June 14, 1912, of $8,417,310.48, and an increase in deposits for the same period of $6,004,461.47. The total reserve maintained by Michigan state banks and trust companies on September 4, 1912, was $63,810,562.93, or 19.82 per cent. The total cash reserve amounted to $21,870,672.44, or 6.79 per cent. The total reserve carried by Michigan state banks is $12,945,496.61 more than the requirements of the banking law.

"THE HERO AND THE MAN"

From the press of A. C. McClurg & Co. of this city has come a new, compelling western novel. "The Hero and the Man," by L. Curry Morton, takes the reader to the northwest country, shows him how the towns and the country districts are building up under the skilful manipulations of promoters, and how the trail of the political gangster is over every part of the country. The heroine is a young lady who writes remarkable novels, for which she finds it difficult to procure heroes. She makes a small fortune with her first novel, after the fashion of the ladies of fiction, and goes to a small city in the Northwest to spend the summer with an old aunt. Here she meets the most prominent citizen of the town, who is the manager of the land investment and improvement company. He is a fine specimen of American manhood, and the heroine, after struggling with her paper heroes all summer, finally decides that a real man is better than a hero. The ending is as happy as the plot is ingenuous. The whole romance is pleasing and elevating.

NEW BOOK FROM RAND-McNALLY COMPANY

"David Dunne" is the title of a splendid new story by Belle Kanaris Maniates. It is a most unusual plot. There are not many men who, handicapped by being the son of a convict, could attain the governorship of a state. David Dunne accomplished it and won the love of an attractive and beautiful girl as well. But he was no ordinary man as you'll soon see when reading this splendid, big novel that sparkles with humor and throbs with pathos. Published by the Rand-McNally Co., Chicago.

Books on Banking, Finance and Economics

Credit. By J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, of the Department of Political Economy, University of Chicago. Postpaid, 53c.

The nature of credit and its effect on prices have long been a subject of disagreement among economists. Its basis is commonly assumed to be money or bank reserves.

Essentials of Business Law. By FRANCIS M. BURDICK, LL. D., Professor of Law in Columbia University. 12mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

This book shows how the rules of law governing the commonest business transactions have been developed, and it tells what they are to-day. Technical law terms have been discarded as far as possible, and when they are used they are so explained and illustrated as to be easily understood. The principles of law are simplified and expressed in clear, lucid everyday speech.

Foreign Exchange. Tables converting foreign money into United States money, and United States money into foreign money at all commercial rates of exchange used in financial transactions between the United States and foreign countries. All about foreign exchange, including various forms of foreign commercial paper and terms, abbreviations, etc. For banks, bankers, steamship agents, importers, exporters and manufacturers. Cloth, $5.00.

Government Regulation of Railway Rates. By HUGO R. MEYER. A Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Postpaid, $1.50 net.

Investment Bonds. By F. LOWNHAUPT. Postpaid, $1.90. Prospective investors who wish to make advantageous use of their money will do well to take notice of this volume. The author does not theorize, but tells only plain facts of the relation of the bond to its issuing corporation, and of the general investment aspect of the instrument.

Money and Credit. By WILBUR ALDRICH. Postpaid, $1.37. This volume contains much valuable information and much sound discussion on money and credit.

The Banking and Currency Problems in the United States. By VICTOR MORAWETZ. The author takes up the problem of the national monetary commission, appointed by congress, and discusses the means of providing a permanent safeguard against money stringencies and panics. Postpaid, $1.10.

The Principles of Money and Banking. By CHARLES A. CONANT. It is a new and complete exposition of its subject. Two volumes. Postpaid, $4.25.

The Pitfalls of Speculation. By THOMAS GIBSON. Postpaid, $1.20.

A book dealing exclusively with marginal speculation, and analyzing in a clear and simple manner the causes of failure in speculation, with a suggestion as to the remedies.

The Use of Loan Credit in Modern Business. By THORSTEIN B. VEBLEN. Postpaid, 28c.

The Investors' Catechism. By M. M. REYNOLDS. Cloth, by mail, $1.10.

"Investors' Catechism." Contains all that it is essential for the beginner to know, and opens the way for a thorough study of the whole subject of investment. The author has for the sake of clearness and simplicity adopted a catechetical style which is somewhat novel in this sort of literature.

PROSPEROUS COLORADO BANKS

Chicago banking acquaintances of G. F. Trotter, assistant cashier of the First National of Pueblo, Colo., are in receipt of statements showing that splendid institution with deposits of $7,726,000. The First National of Rocky Ford, an affiliated institution, shows deposits of nearly $200,000.

The "Star" paid him some very high compliments. Among other things it said:

"ABBOTT pleaded with his confrères to stop the present method of wildcat banks and not allow every little fly-by-night huckster to hang out a sign stating 'this is a bank,' and thus invite deposits. Abbott is a good man, and one beloved by the gods, and we hope that he will persevere in his efforts until he brings a reform about in these ungodly financiers and continues to keep his lamp set upon a hill where the rays irradiate the surrounding bailiwick."

THORNTON COOKE of Kansas City, in recounting the things which impressed him at the Detroit convention, gave the highest batting average to Joseph Chapman and his special session on agricultural education.

NOW if "the farmer's friend" wishes to do the square thing he will give Thornton a heavy actor's part on the Conference program at the K. C. meeting next year. We believe in reciprocity.

JOHN J. LARGE, Sioux City, was in Chicago Monday, returning to "the job" after a week's stay in New York on business. Says the new shows are fine.

WITH the bank merger off his hands, President R. T. Forbes of the First National and of the Commercial Club, St. Joseph, Mo., is going out after a million dollar industrial fund. Already the club has brought three important new industries to St. Joseph and they like the game.

FORBES is out for the appointment of an agricultural expert for Buchanan county under the state law. We're betting he gets one.

HE was an evil-minded person who led astray the usually correct New York "Financier" and the always amiable "American Banker" of the same city on what actually happened at the Peoria convention of the Illinois Bankers Association.

TO correct the errors in chief made by these two papers it again can be stated that the private bankers did not secede or withdraw from the organization, and that Charles G. Dawes was not present and consequently had no part in the proceedings of the convention.

THE Chicago Private Bankers Association, with one hundred members, is totally distinct and separate from the Country Private Bankers Association of Illinois, with three hundred members. The Chicago association is the one which is in favor of supervision and the country organization is the one opposed to it.

THE situation may be a little confusing to those at a distance, but home people know all about it. There has been no split in the Illinois ranks. These paragraphs are printed mainly to correct erroneous impressions which have gone out about prevailing conditions in Illinois.

THE Old Colony Trust Company of Boston will be justified in putting on airs during the big A. B. A. convention in that city next year. The bank, owing to a recent increase, now has capital stock outstanding to the amount of six millions, with a surplus of eight millions. The profits to shareholders in this sterling institution have been very large.

A HUGE plaster cast of the new Continental and Commercial National Bank building has been set up in the present banking room of that institution. It fully is as large as a teller's cage and when illuminated from the inside gives a very fair representation of what the new building will be when erected. The plaster cast is upon a large square pedestal surrounded by a brass railing, which is intended to keep the cast free from those who wish to register with a "finger print."

THEY are having quite a time in Baltimore trying to change the constitution of the clearing house, which permits members to extend free collection privileges to customers whose accounts are older than 1897.

THIS provision resembles very much the law which was passed in Pennsylvania to put private bankers under state supervision. Those in business "in one place continuously for seven years" are exempted from filing a bond covering their deposits.

THEY have an unusual bank situation at Morenaville, La. In constructing a new levee at that point it became necessary to destroy the new building of the Avoyelles Bank and Trust Company. An exact duplicate of the present building is being erected on another lot at public expense. The bank authorities did not resist the destruction of their building under the circumstances.

BANKING COMMISSIONER T. J. SMITH has notified state banks in Kentucky that investments in stock in other corporations in the nature of speculations must be disposed of. The banks may hold stock temporarily as collateral only.

MINNEAPOLIS Chamber of Commerce is said to have disciplined a member who attempted to secure additional deposits for his bank by agreeing to divert grain from a line of elevators to certain grain houses. They have a very stringent rule against such deals in Minneapolis.

LIBERTY NATIONAL of New York has been rearranging its officers' quarters, and the results are artistic and satisfactory. President Prosser has had the wall removed which separated his office from the general banking room, so that all of the officers now are in full view of the customers of the bank.

PRESIDENT PROSSER has been making a tour of the Southwest country, and, according to interviews given out, returned a full believer in the soundness of economic and banking conditions. He commented particularly upon the fact that southwest banks in many localities are buying commercial paper, which heretofore has been an unknown transaction at this season of the year.

KELSEY S. CHASE, bank superintendent in Minnesota, is said to be contemplating the establishment of a credit bureau in connection with his department. It would operate along similar lines to that established by Commissioner Van Tuyl of New York. The new department would handle the credit information for 760 state banks.

J. FLETCHER FARRELL has announced it as his belief that present prosperous conditions are to continue throughout 1913. You can lay your bets accordingly!

KANSAS BANKERS ASSOCIATION has gone upon record as endorsing entirely the four years' administration of the state banking department by Commissioner J. N. Dolley. This was brought about by a pernicious political attempt on the part of a few state senators to belittle the accomplishments of Mr. Dolley.

NEARLY every state bankers association in the Union has endorsed Mr. Dolley's "Blue-Sky" proposals, and in several states the new Kansas law on that subject has been adopted practically as prepared by the commissioner.

THE case of Theodore Roosevelt against the Republican Party for divorce will be tried Nov. 5th. The charge is non-support.

E. D. DURHAM, banker, farmer and general uplifter, finally has become a canning magnate. Rumor has it that a corn canning factory which was taken over down at Onarga, by its creditors—one of whom Durham was which—has proven to be a gold mine.

IT has netted around $75,000 per year in profits for the past three years. Explains why E. D. has hung out the busy signal at convention time. In time the Durham brand of corn ought to be quite as popular as a certain brand of smoking material.

THEY are advertising a stove over in Indiana which they say "radiates the heat out and down, every part of the floor receiving direct heat waves." Probably this is the original of the "hot air" producers.

FRED ELLSWORTH should get next to the fellow who publicited (new word) this wonderful invention. He could do wonders with a bank ad.

OUT at Winfield, Kan., the First National has been celebrating its fortieth anniversary. It kept open house all day in its splendid new banking room, which was appropriately decorated for the occasion. Refreshments were served. The First has capital and surplus of $200,000 and deposits of nearly three-quarters of a million. W. C. Robinson is president; R. H. Bradley, cashier, and H. E. Cooper, assistant cashier. The patrons of the bank were invited to bring their entire families, and it is said that most of them did.

AT Mason City, Ia., a change has been in the official line-up of the Iowa State Bank. Recently this institution increased its capital from $50,000 to $75,000. J. T. Pickard, who was cashier, has been promoted to the presidency in place of N. C. Kottchell, retired. Mr. Kottchell had administered the affairs of the bank for twelve years.

THE other new officers of the Iowa State are Dr. W. E. Long, who will be vice-president, and H. T. Fuller, cashier. President Pickard, it will be remembered, is a former Illinois banker, and all of his friends will be glad to know that he has made good in Mason City.

NATIONAL CITY BANK of Ottawa, Ill., which has one of the handsomest bank buildings to be found in the state, has installed a chiming clock, which appears to be the talk of the town. It does the Westminster, Reveille and Cathedral peals in clear, vibrant tones that may be heard out upon the street. The young people of the city, and notably the school children, have been much interested in the new installation.

THOMAS D. CATLIN, an honored ex-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, is president of this bank, and Albert F. Schoch and Charles P. Taylor are vice-presidents, Philip G. Schoch is cashier, while James P. Catlin and Edward C. Allen are assistant cashiers. The bank has issued a booklet on "chimes," and the tales they tell, quoting all of the famous inscriptions on great bells of the world, and including a number of popular poems on the subject. The National City has capital of $100,000 and surplus of $225,000.

FRANK D. BRUNDAGE has sent out some humorous postal cards of scenes in and around the mines at Scranton, Pa., where he is recuperating. He hopes to be in the ring again in a few weeks.

MEMBERS of the American Bankers Association from all over the country are sending in remonstrances to a certain well-known Chicago daily newspaper for continuing to print objectionable advertisements. The following is a sample of those objected to:

"SAVINGS Bank Depositors—Liberal prices will be paid for accurate lists of savings bank depositors. Replies will be treated in strictest confidence. Address C. B. 297—"

IT is conceivable that such advertising slips into a big, metropolitan daily without examination and inspection. It is not to be believed that the owners of such a paper would allow the publication of offers of bribery to clerks for the betrayal of their employers' business secrets?

THERE probably is no statute in Illinois for reaching either the publisher or the advertiser for thus publically offering a bribe to clerks in savings banks. The savings bank business is regarded as a trust and absolutely confidential. The better banks in Chicago refuse information about depositors, even to members of the same family. It is quite likely that promoters or salesmen of "Blue-Sky" investment securities are behind the advertising. There should be no difficulty in securing an agreement between the principal publications to refuse such advertising.

THE attention of the "administration committee" is called to a syllabus of lectures issued by the United States School for Secretaries, located at 509 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The course treats of "secretarial training," and they guarantee to equip a secretary so as to insure "efficiency, self-reliance, concentration and the study habit."

IF the committee does not have funds in hand, we should like to start a subscription so as to obtain a free scholarship, for the head master guarantees that "it is impossible for a man or a woman to complete the course of study without improving materially." To quote this distinguished professor further, "All secretaries must be business-like and methodical."

IT is the aim of this wonderful instructor to have his pupils "imagine themselves to be secretaries, and actually perform the duties of a secretary." Of course, after graduation the imagination could be dispensed with. Herr Professor guarantees that where a secretary "does not have habits of punctuality and does not show characteristics of cheerfulness and tactfulness, earnestness and enthusiasm in his work," that all of these good qualities shall be imparted. He even guarantees that "bad habits may be overcome."

"THE fact of the matter is," says the lecturer, "that of the men and women who are really capable, 99 per cent, as soon as they reach a salary of $3,000 a year, acquire a disease called 'swelled head.' They imagine to have reached such a salary they must have learned everything worth learning, and what they do not know isn't worth knowing."

WE have a full copy of Prof. McEwen's lecture on secretarial training, from which all of the foregoing quotations are taken. Anyone interested in the subject beyond these extracts can procure copies from the professor at his address noted above. CASHIER.

NATIONAL BANKS DECREASE EXCESSIVE LOANS

As a result of the warning issued by Comptroller Murray, national banks have been decreasing excessive loans. The call of September 4th showed that but 526 of a total of 7,397 banks had granted loans above the amount allowed by law, a percentage of .71 of 1 per cent, while in June the proportion was 1.15 per cent.

DELEGATES TO DRY FARMING CONGRESS

W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National, Spokane, Wash., B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National, Champaign, Ill., and J. W. Wheeler, vice-president Capital National, St. Paul, have been appointed as delegates to represent the A. B. A. at the seventh International Dry Farming Congress, to be held at Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada, October 19th to 26th. The congress will consist of nine sectional conventions, as follows: Conferences on soils, tillage methods and machinery; crops and crop breeding; agricultural forestry; livestock and dairying; agricultural education; farm management; scientific research; agricultural colleges and experiment stations, and international congress of farm women. A large number of prominent men will deliver addresses. Among those who have accepted the invitation to speak are James J. Hill, W. C. Brown, president of the New York Central Lines, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific, and Governor Edwin L. Norris of Montana. This will be the world's greatest gathering of farmers, and they will predominate on the program. Every nation in the world is interested and has been invited by the government of Canada to send delegates. The congress will be formally opened by the Duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada, for the government of Great Britain, and the Hon. James Wilson, secretary of agriculture of the United States, as the personal representative of President Taft.

OGDEN AVENUE STATE BANK

Chicago is to have a new bank to be known as the Ogden Avenue State Bank. At a stockholders' meeting recently held, directors were elected as follows: Benjamin J. Glaser, Clyde C. Amsler, Arthur C. Amsler, Michael H. Keefe and William F. Ryan. The directors then elected the following officers: Benjamin J. Glaser, president; Clyde C. Amsler, first vice-president; Michael H. Keefe, second vice-president; Arthur C. Amsler, cashier; Frank R. Curda, assistant cashier. The new institution will take over the business of the Glaser Savings Bank about November 1st, and will occupy the quarters of the latter institution until such time as its new building at 3616-18 Ogden Avenue is completed. The new bank will be capitalized at $200,000.

EXAMINATION FOR RHODES SCHOLARSHIP

A qualifying examination of all candidates for the Oxford Rhodes scholarship will be held October 15th and 16th in the office of President A. W. Harris at the Northwestern University Building, corner of Lake and Dearborn Streets, Chicago. Applicants will be examined in Latin, Greek and mathematics, and only those who pass in at least Latin and Greek will be eligible for a scholarship. From those candidates who pass this examination a scholar will be selected for Illinois, who will begin work at Oxford in 1913. The candidate must be an unmarried male citizen of the United States with at least five years' domicile; must by October 1, 1913, have passed his nineteenth, but not his twenty-fifth birthday, and have completed at least his sophomore year at some recognized degree-granting university or college. A Rhodes scholar is appointed for a period of three years and receives the sum of fifteen hundred dollars each year.

Candidates are expected to send written application to President Edmund J. James, University of Illinois, Urbana. All candidates will register in person between eight and ten p. m., Monday, October 14th, at the place of examination.

Indiana Conven- tion

Indiana bankers held their sixteenth annual convention on Wednesday and Thursday of this week in the auditorium of the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis. The sessions were largely and enthusiastically attended. Numerous representatives of banks in territory contiguous to Indiana were in attendance.

The convention was divided into four sessions, the first of which opened at ten o'clock Wednesday morning, being called to order by President Earl S. Gwin, president of the Second National, New Albany. After the singing of "America," the Rev. M. L. Haines, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, delivered the invocation. Alfred Potts welcomed the delegates and visitors in place of former Vice-President Fairbanks who was unable to be present. President Gwin then delivered his annual address, which will be found elsewhere in this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER. Reports then were heard from the secretary, treasurer and group chairmen.

Secretary Andrew Smith, vice-president of the Indiana National, Indianapolis, reported that the membership of the association has increased during the past year to the extent of fifty-two. The total membership is 803 out of 916 banks. It was regretted that 113 of the banks of the state do not see their way clear to avail themselves of the benefits of membership in the association. The dues of the association are merely nominal, and there is not an investment made by any bank in the state yielding anywhere near the profits that the dues invested in the Indiana Bankers Association are producing. Group 6 has 108 members and 6 non-members; Group 4, 106 members and 7 non-members; Group 7 has 68 members and 9 non-members. Other groups in the state have all the way from 10 to 25 non-members.

Nineteen banks were dropped from the membership roll for non-payment of dues. Much good has been accomplished by the protective department, and burglaries, forgeries, etc., have diminished considerably during the past year. President Gwin has appointed a committee, the purpose of which is to work for passage by the legislature of a negotiable instrument act and a "Blue Sky" law similar to that now in force in Kansas.

Treasurer Hugo C. Rothert, cashier of the Huntingburg Bank, reported the receipt of $7,533.87, and the expenditure of $5,905.55, leaving a balance on hand of $1,628.32. For the protective fund the total receipts amounted to $2,788.83, and the disbursements to $1,258.38, leaving a balance on hand of $1,530.45.

Roger W. Babson, of Wellesley Hills, Mass., in an address which he delivered, stated that many banks do not receive the undivided attention of their officers, directors and employees; that frequently they are engaged in other lines of business, a state of affairs which is bound to operate detrimentally to the interests of the bank. He suggested as a remedy that salaries be sufficiently large to insure this

ILLINOIS TRUST ELECTS CASHIER

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank held on Thursday of this week, Joseph I. Cooper was elected cashier of the bank to succeed the late B. M. Chattell. He entered the employ of the Illinois Trust twenty-eight years ago as a messenger boy. He was advanced to the position of assistant cashier several years ago, and has been in charge of the collateral loan department for some time.

D. R. FORGAN RETURNS FROM NEW YORK

D. R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of this city, returned this week from a trip to New York. He says that money is in active demand, but that he does not anticipate any stringency, and that in Chicago and the Middle West generally business is not manifesting much interest in the outcome of the political situation.

CHICAGO BANKERS ATTEND INDIANA CONVENTION

Among Chicago bankers who left this week to attend the sessions of the Indiana bankers' convention were the following: Addison Corneau, of the Central Trust; W. W. Lampert, of the Continental and Commercial; J. G. Wakefield, of the Corn Exchange National; G. H. Wilson, of the Fort Dearborn National; J. F. Hagey and W. Dunscombe, of the First National; A. Coen and W. S. Nitz, of the Colonial Trust; Charles Fasset, of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, and G. A. Ryther, of the Live Stock Exchange National.

INVESTMENT BANKERS ASSOCIATION IN NEW QUARTERS

The Investment Bankers Association of America, of which George B. Caldwell, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, is president, and Frederick R. Fenton, of Devitt, Tremble & Co., Chicago, is secretary, is now in its new offices at 111 West Monroe Street.

NORTHERN TRUST BUYER OF COMMERCIAL PAPER

Announcement is made that the Northern Trust Company of this city has been investing its slack funds in high grade commercial paper. Formerly the bank made loans only on collateral. Byron L. Smith, is president, says that the departure has proven quite satisfactory.

CONTINENTAL STOCK AT HIGH FIGURE

Stock of the Continental and Commercial National Bank showed considerable strength during the past week, sales having been made at as high as $310 per share.

GEORGE M. REYNOLDS ON VACATION

George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial National, is in Atlantic City, where he will remain until November 1st.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

HARRY G. LINDOW, a well-known bond salesman, has gone with the Hanchett Bond Co., in the New York Life Building. The firm specializes in municipals.

THE administrative committee which met on Monday timed it nicely to be in at the Cub-Sox finish.

J. H. INGWERSEN, president of the Peoples Trust and Savings Bank at Clinton, Ia., says it looks like a Wilson delegation to him. The republican vote in Iowa will divide almost even, as it now appears.

D. R. FORGAN told the New York inter-viewers last week: "Conditions in our section are good, but I would hardly call business booming, except in the case of steel and one or two other industries. Generally speaking, however, the volume of all kinds of business being transacted is highly satisfactory. I find a slight tendency among business men to begin to hold back, lest tariff revision under Wilson, if he should be elected, might prove a disturbing feature."

CENTRAL NATIONAL, St. Louis, has suspended dividends pending the building up of the surplus account.

IF James J. Hill sets out to improve the deposits of his newly acquired bank as he set out to improve farming conditions in the Northwest—well, Minneapolis boys "had better watch out."

G. DERNIT is a down-state private banker who is suspected of profanity every time he gives his name over the long distance.

HENRY W. YATES, dean of the Omaha bankers, is an out-and-out Wilson man. He has been voting republican for four presidential elections. He says the country is full of men who will welcome the chance to return to the democratic fold this year.

DAVENPORT has a new savings bank—"The Northwest Savings." Iowa is in the business of starting new banks to care for her crop money. Nothing like her present prosperity in years.

BANKERS out there all buying six-cylinder cars.

W. D. VINCENT of Spokane has been named as a "dry" farmer delegate to Lethbridge. That doesn't mean that it's a prohibitionist meeting, however.

GEOERGE WOODRUFF is "back in Joliet."

EVERY other calling has been holding a "cost congress" but the busy banker. There may yet be banks which do not know what deposits cost them. Some employees are costly, too. Far beyond the pay-roll figures.

GEOERGE M. REYNOLDS has gone to Atlantic City for a two-weeks' outing.

WHEN you first read about the Chicago city council going to supervise private banking you probably thought it a joke. But it wasn't.

BACKED by a legal opinion, the council has named a committee to investigate and prepare a plan. W. T. Abbott, of the Central Trust, who drew up the Dawes committee report, likely will be called into consultation.

H. S. ZIMMERMAN and W. B. Lewis, of Mellon National, Pittsburgh, have been in New York attending a reunion of their table-mates on the Panama trip, taken after the New Orleans trip last year.

DID you notice it? The "round robin" monthly had another painfully little squeak in its last issue about the council action at Detroit. There are issues and things which are dead and don't know it.

THE A. B. A. administrative committee will very likely meet in St. Louis next month instead of in New York, as has been usual. This will be convenient to Mr. Huttig as well as to Chairman Davis, of Cincinnati, and Vice-President Arthur Reynolds, of Des Moines. Important business will come up. General Secretary Farnsworth will attend, of course.

FORGOT to tell you above that G. M. Reynolds' address at Atlantic City is care of The Marlborough-Blenheim. You might want to send him a picture postal or to tell him of the arrival of your new baby.

MACFADDEN is to be out with his new-born "North Dakota Banker" shortly. As an editor he is said to bear his honors modestly, and this will give you a near view of what a fine fellow he is. He writes:

"I WANT to thank you for the 'kind words' with reference to the proposed 'North Dakota Banker,' and want to assure you that without THE CHICAGO BANKER and a pair of shears the 'North Dakota Banker' would not get very far. I have put you on our mailing list and the first issue will come along very soon."

A THREE-COLUMN picture of "J. Medill McCormick entering the hospital" is among the small afflictions of the Chicago dailies. Do you wonder at crime?

THEN the "moose" papers and enthusiasts tell us "it was newspaper abuse which caused the shooting at Milwaukee." The man who did it says he shot the Colonel "because he (the Colonel) called the President a thief" in all of his public addresses. Different angles of view.

MISS FRANCES JENKINS OLCOTT, whose long experience in children's libraries has established her reputation as an authority, is preparing a book which will be called "The Children's Reading." Though written most concisely, Miss Olcott finds that the work will be much longer than at first planned, and its publication will be delayed until some time in November. The publishers, Houghton Mifflin Company, are enthusiastic about the material in the book and believe it will fill a great need to parents, librarians and teachers.

S. W. STRAUS & CO., of Chicago, have leased the entire fifth floor of the "One Wall Street" building for a term of years. The location is ideal. The building is directly on the corner of Wall Street and Broadway, opposite Trinity, New York, and distant only two blocks from the United States subtreasury. It is close on one hand to the great monied institutions of Wall and Nassau streets, and on the other, to the great tide of traffic that constantly surges up and down Broadway.

President Earl S. Gwin to Indiana Bankers

Great activity has been shown in the work of the association during the past year and the results are gratifying. The membership has increased. The protective department, constantly growing in importance, has many notable achievements to its credit. New fields of endeavor, calculated to broaden the scope of our work and strengthen the influence of the association and its members, have been taken up. This will be discussed more fully later and our secretary's report will detail the events of the past year.

I could not fully review the year's work without expressing my admiration for the loyalty, energy and efficiency of our genial secretary. No one has done more for the success of this association than Andrew Smith. In handling the routine work and details of the office, Miss McDaniel, assistant secretary, has shown signal ability and is entitled to much credit. Mr. Webster, our employed detective, has been thorough in his work and shown remarkable skill in running down criminals and securing their conviction.

Group Meetings

It was my privilege to attend all the meetings of the eight groups this year. The attendance, the interest and enthusiasm of those present was gratifying indeed. In these group meetings where neighbors whose problems and interests are similar meet, the best work of the association can be accomplished. I hope to see this group feature grow in favor until every bank in Indiana is a member of the association.

Tribute to Lindsey and Martin

Within the year two of our prominent members have passed away. Chas. T. Lindsey died suddenly, at his home in South Bend, soon after our last convention. He was one of the organizers and the second president of the association. His deep interest in the work of the association continued to his death. Never absent from a convention, and always an earnest worker, we loved and relied upon him.

Frank Martin, unanimously chosen vice-president last year, would have been advanced to the presidency at this meeting. Always active in the work of the association, he would have adorned the office and justified the confidence reposed in him. Taken in the prime of life, young, filled with energy and with a bright future, his death was indeed a calamity.

The banking fraternity has suffered a distinct loss in the death of each of these gentlemen and the committee on resolutions is asked to prepare, and present at the proper time, suitable resolutions of respect to be adopted and spread upon our minutes.

At Indianapolis convention he pays high compliments to secretary Andrew Smith and his assistant. Credits group system with good influence. Approves agricultural development work. Tells why bankers have lost influence with legislature. Wants monetary legislation on non-partisan lines

Agricultural Development

This association has grown steadily and from time to time has added features to its work that have been of practical benefit to banks and bankers of Indiana until now it is one of the largest and most important associations in the country. It has served the banks of this state well, and few realize the good it is really accomplishing. There is nothing in the history of this association that requires an apology; on the contrary, its record is one of which to be proud. Yet, we are coming to realize that our work has been somewhat too selfish. Your council of administration is of the opinion that the time has come when we should enlarge the scope of our work and undertake things that will justify existence from the standpoint of the public. That it should, as an organization, manifest an interest in the commercial and agricultural affairs of the state. With this in view, a committee was appointed on agricultural development. This subject is occupying the attention of most progressive state associations. The work along this line undertaken by the Illinois association has attracted wide attention. We are to be favored at this meeting with an address by B. F. Harris, ex-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, who is one of the best informed men in this country on the subject.

Your association was represented by Mr. Bonner, of Greensburg, at the second annual convention of Bankers Committees on Agricultural Development and Education, held in Minneapolis in August. While not entering upon this movement as early as some associations, it is our aim to place Indiana in the front rank in this great work, and I am informed by Mr. Chapman that Indiana gave a good account of itself at the Minneapolis meeting. A report of the committee will be submitted to the convention this afternoon. As evidence of the belief of the officers of your association in the importance of this question, an entire session of this convention is given over to a discussion of the subject. May I urge upon all of you to attend this session and in so far as possible take part in the discussion, led by Mr. Chapman of Minneapolis, that will follow Mr. Harris' address.

Furthermore, a resolution will be presented amending the constitution by providing for a standing committee upon agricultural development and education. This amendment has the unanimous endorsement of the council of administration and I sincerely hope will be adopted by the convention.

Legislation

The biennial session of the Indiana legislature begins next January. Bankers have two important interests in legislation: First—the prevention of enactment of vicious laws, adversely affecting banking interests. Second—in securing the enactment of such laws as will tend to improve conditions and raise the standards of banking, and other laws in the interest of the general welfare of our citizens. Endorsement of legislation by our association should be an aid to the adoption of right measures, but unfortunately the contrary is true. It is a crying shame that a sentiment prevails throughout the state of Indiana and manifests itself in the legislature that the mere fact of the banks favoring certain bills means their certain death. As a matter of fact, the standing of the bankers and the bankers association in this state should be such that they would be consulted and their advice sought in matters of legislation affecting banking and commercial interests. This is true in Missouri where the association works hand in hand with the legislature.

It is unhappily true that our bankers too often take a purely selfish view of public matters. And it is not to be wondered that their influence amounts to little or worse in the halls of legislation when their actions on certain occasions are considered. For instance, the position taken by a large number of banks on the question of the Public Depository law was indefensible. In this they showed clearly, as they have in other important questions affecting the public welfare, that their motives were mercenary and selfish. If the banker is to occupy the influential position to which he is entitled he must take a broader view of things and think from a higher level.

With a view to anticipating and correcting public opinion, a legislative committee has been appointed to consider in advance such measures as should be advocated by our association. It is the judgment of this committee that we should not undertake too large a program nor confine our activities to measures in which the bankers are directly interested. A circular letter to every bank in the state sets forth the views of this committee and mentions two bills in particular which should receive the endorsement of the bankers; namely, the negotiable instruments bill, and a bill that will be known as the "Blue Sky Law," patterned after the Kansas law which has attracted so much favorable attention and comment.

We bankers can do much toward dissipating the prejudice that exists to a far greater extent than it should, by devoting some time and attention to measures of this kind and to legislation on the subject of agriculture, good roads, etc. Let the farmer and the merchant understand that we are interested in the things in which they are vitally interested. Let us establish a closer relationship between the farmer and the merchant with the bank.

Monetary Legislation

We are still in the fight for monetary legislation. While perhaps not all clear as to the plan, every thinking banker in this country recognizes the necessity for remedial legislation that will tend to modernize and render more efficient our present antiquated and unscientific banking and currency system which has so poorly served the commercial interests of this great nation. The subject is particularly important at this time. There is every evidence that we are entering upon an era of great prosperity. The banking and currency system of this country is not ready for the expansion of business which now seems near at hand. If business begins to expand rapidly we may find ourselves in the grip of a most tremendous crisis. It is highly important that merchants, farmers and manufacturers should begin to study this question and seriously consider its importance as relating to their welfare and prosperity. Unfortunately, outside of the economists and a few bankers, there is nobody who has given the subject sufficient study to expound it intelligently.

I quite agree with an eminent citizen who said recently in a public address, "The country is jealous of the bankers—I think jealous of some bankers with just cause—and it won't trust them or take their advice. Nobody believes in economists." The work of the National Citizens League along the line of educating the public without advocating or endorsing any particular plan, studiously avoiding the injection of party politics into the question, is most commendable and has better prospects of securing results than any movement yet undertaken. They have wisely organized outside of the banking fraternity and are properly styled "Citizens League."

Having little faith in the influence of the banker in legislative matters and recognizing that the advocacy of a currency measure by bankers does not tend to popularize the movement, I believe that the duty that falls upon us in this important matter is for each individual banker to quietly and earnestly talk with his friends and clients at home; show the merchant, manufacturer and farmer that their interests are more vitally affected than are the banks. Get them interested and ask them to talk to their representative in congress. When congress realizes that the public is interested in this subject, something will be accomplished. They cannot withstand the general demand for legislation when the demand comes from all sections and from all parties. When this and kindred questions shall have been definitely and rightly settled, then, and not until then, will the life of the banker be ideal.

ILLINOIS POSTAL BANKS LEAD

Illinois postal savings banks lead those in all other states in the per capita amount of deposits, which is about $96. There has been deposited by 20,000 persons, $1,922,000. In Chicago, where three-fifths of the depositors of the state reside, the average deposit is $101.

A NEW NOVEL BY "M. F."

"M. F." author of "The Journal of a Recluse," has brought out another story entitled "Kirstie," and published by the Thomas P. Crowell Company, New York. It is his second attempt in the field of fiction and shows the same skilled treatment and reserve power which made the first story famous. This story of a charming woman, who attracts to herself the love of two men, but whose own love is given to the one who is already bound by ties of marriage, is suited for novel readers who enjoy keen character studies as well as an interesting plot. The heroine is a trained nurse, whose professional engagements bring her into close contact with a young doctor. The girl falls desperately in love with the man, but the latter, more sophisticated and worldly wise, though really returning the girl's love, seeks out for himself a wealthy wife. The course of time and irony of fate take the girl as a nurse to the house of the young doctor and his wife. Years, alas! have not cooled the ardor of their passion, but, on the contrary, increased it. It is here that the real story begins, with the working out of complications due to the peculiarities of the quite oblivious wife and the entrance on the scene of another wooer of Kirstie, the nurse. The latter's successful resistance to the temptations held out by her almost overpowering love, the discovery by the wronged wife of her husband's feeling for another woman, and the unraveling of tangled threads in the lives of several minor characters form a fascinating romance. The course of the story carries the heroine from Chicago to Quebec and thence abroad. Especially entertaining are the descriptions of Italian scenes.

BANK SUPERVISION COMMITTEE APPOINTED

The judiciary committee of the Chicago city council has appointed a sub-committee consisting of Aldermen Hazen, Mayer and McInerney, the purpose being to investigate and report on private banks in Chicago, looking to the passage of an ordinance placing them under the supervision and control of the city. Bankers will be called before this sub-committee. An opinion recently was rendered by the corporation counsel in which the belief was expressed that the city has power to exercise this control.

undivided attention, and advocated the charging of a premium in the case of loans which are of a somewhat doubtful character, which would enable the banks to pay larger salaries. He believes that this premium should vary all the way from 1 to 3 per cent on a sixty-day loan.

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to agricultural subjects. B. F. Harris, ex-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, delivered an address on this subject, and Joseph Chapman, Jr., of Minneapolis, led a general discussion along these lines.

Thursday morning addresses were delivered by E. St. Elmo Lewis of the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, whose subject was "Advertising to the Man in the Mirror;" Harry A. Wheeler, vice-president of the Union Trust Company of Chicago, on a central bureau of information, and Dick Miller, of Miller & Co., Indianapolis, on the Kansas "Blue Sky" law. Mr. Miller's remarks will be found in full elsewhere in this number.

The trust company section held its meeting at two o'clock on Thursday. Invocation was delivered by the Rev. Joshua Stansfield, D.D., pastor of Meridian Street M. E. Church. President Joseph E. Kelley, cashier of the Peoples Bank and Trust Company, Mt. Vernon, told of the remarkable growth of trust companies and of the useful service they are rendering the public. This growth and development, however, has not been brought about without encountering opposition. Mr. Kelley stated it as his opinion that the general banking business which is being conducted successfully by trust companies in the smaller cities is absolutely essential to their existence, as there is not sufficient trust business to support them in the smaller places. He stated that the laws of the state are such as to insure absolute safety to the public. W. H. O'Brien, auditor of the state of Indiana, told of some observations on bank examinations, and the Hon. Robert W. Bonyne, of Denver, talked on banking reform. The entertainment provided by the local bankers was of the highest order, and was greatly enjoyed by those in attendance. Wednesday evening a theatre party was given for the delegates and visitors, and on Thursday evening an informal group dinner for ladies and gentlemen was held at the German House, followed by high class vaudeville. The entertainment committee consisted of Messrs. Stalnaker, Quick and Shepard, of Indianapolis, and W. G. Gude, of Lafayette. These gentlemen are to be congratulated for the efficient work which they did.

Secretary Smith and the program committee deserve great praise for what they did towards making the convention an unqualified success.

Impressive and Instructive Address by Mr. Harris

B. F. Harris, ex-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, who has been quite active in the movement for improved agricultural methods and conditions, and in the education of the youth along these lines, and who has made addresses on these subjects at several of the important bankers' conventions held this year, talked along the same lines at Indianapolis. Quoting an ancient Chinese philosopher, he likened the welfare of the people to a great tree with agriculture as its roots, and pointed out the potential influence which it bears on the economic and social development of the people. He believes that our system of development, however, is all wrong and that we are building from the top down. In banking, for instance, we have established a wonderful system of units, but the system is weak when the stress comes, because we have no logical currency system to make the tremendous banking assets—reserves and credits—mobile and available. In the matter of education, we have good colleges and universities, but comparatively few avail themselves of the opportunities and privileges which they afford. The agricultural processes employed by our farmers are not such as to insure the best results, and during recent years our products have increased in price but not in quantity. The American farmer is at a standstill, and until such time as a readjustment of methods and conditions is made, the country will be compelled to submit to the present unsatisfactory state of affairs. An important factor in the much-talked-of "high cost of living," is the fact that the country's demand greatly exceeds the supply, which is attributed to the astonishing increase in our urban population and a corresponding decrease in the rural population, the unscientific methods of farming and the lack of education along these lines. Our imports are increasing to an alarming extent. We export our natural resources and then buy them back in finished form at greatly increased prices, a practice which cannot but act detrimentally to our welfare and prosperity. During the past fifteen years the cost of living in this country has increased 40 per cent, while abroad it has advanced but 13 per cent. He believes that too much time and energy are devoted to grain farming and that more attention should be paid to the raising of live stock and to dairying. Then, again, we have an inadequate system of financing the farmer. Some steps should be taken to remedy this trouble by adopting in the United States some of the European systems of agricultural credit, so far as they are applicable to our needs. The lack of education in the United States is so marked as to be appalling. Statistics show that but one out of three pupils finishes the eighth grade; but one in five enters the high school and only one in thirty finishes the course. A great many of the American youths of to-day are not prepared to take their places as contributors to the country's welfare and prosperity. By the establishment of education along agricultural and vocational lines, this condition would be obviated and the general prosperity and welfare of our people greatly enhanced. Mr. Harris told of the work which is being done in Illinois in this respect, and of the prominent part which the Illinois Bankers Association has taken in the movement. Efforts are being made to have our legislature enact such remedial educational legislation as will be calculated better to promote our ability as producers, and enable the state to turn out citizens who will be well equipped to aid the country in its fight for the acquisition of commercial supremacy. Mr. Harris also told of the urgent need for good roads and of their great value, not only to the farmer, but to the banker and the general public as well. He believes that the present road laws of the state of Illinois are grossly inadequate and antiquated, and that they should be revised. He advocated federal, state and local aid in the building of improved roads.

Joseph Chapman Addresses Convention

Joseph Chapman of Minneapolis congratulated the bankers on the consolidated rural school system, and advocated making the teaching of agriculture in rural schools compulsory and that more emphasis should be placed on efforts for efficiency in the home. G. I. Christie of the agricultural school of Purdue University blamed the school system for the tendency on the part of the boys and girls to leave the farms and go to the cities.

E. St. Elmo Lewis Talks on Advertising

E. St. Elmo Lewis, advertising manager of the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, Detroit, gave the bankers a practical talk on advertising. He said that the banker who undertakes to interest the small dealer in banking is not only of more use to the community but also increases his own business materially.

Among the Entertainment Features

dent of the Fletcher-American, Indianapolis, was the host at a dinner at the Columbia Club for the representatives of the larger banks in territory contiguous to Indiana.

There were about 500 bankers present at the convention and everything went off according to schedule.

LITTLE ROCK CLEARINGS UP

Advices received from Little Rock, Ark., are to the effect that bank clearings in that city reached a high-water mark this week in $840,388 for one day. According to Manager Pollock, this is the highest figure ever reached since the organization of the Little Rock Clearing House Association eight years ago. The large increase is attributed to the receipts of cotton, which for the past few days of the present season show 31,000 bales in that city, as against 16,000 for the corresponding period of last season. The highest figure ever reached before was when the report of the Clearing House Association for one day was about $600,000.

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL FOR CHICAGO

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, general superintendent of schools, Chicago, has been requested by the board of education to ascertain through her offices whether or not there exists a demand for an agricultural school in Chicago and to report to the board the result of her investigation. It is proposed to locate the school on the quarter section of land owned by the board of education at 48th Avenue and 12th Street. The purpose is to promote interest in agriculture among the children and ultimately to reduce the increased cost of living. It is believed that the report will recommend the establishment of such a school.

At its convention in Indianapolis this week the Indiana Bankers Association elected the following officers for the ensuing year: J. L. McCulloch of Marion, president; M. S. Sonntag of Evansville, vice-president; Andrew Smith of Indianapolis, secretary; Claude S. Kitterman of Cambridge City, treasurer. The trust company section elected officers as follows: President, B. C. Bowman of Muncie; first vice-president, W. P. Breen of Fort Wayne; second vice-president, B. F. Thiebaud, Connersville; secretary, E. H. Forry, Indianapolis; treasurer, Fred K. Shepard of Indianapolis. Members of the executive committee for three years were elected as follows: Samuel Leeper, South Bend; Ross H. Wallace, Indianapolis and E. E. Farmer, Bedford.

Resolutions Adopted

Resolutions were adopted providing for the appointment of a committee on agricultural and vocational training and favoring an amendment to the national banking law which will permit banks to loan money on mortgages.

BYRON L. SMITH RETURNS FROM EAST

Byron L. Smith, president of the Northern Trust Company of this city, recently has returned from a motor trip through the New England states.

LOANS BEING MADE AT 6 PER CENT

Edmund D. Hulbert, vice-president of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company, says that most of the loans being made now are at 6 per cent, although there is some attractive commercial paper going at $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. The crop movement is being handled without any difficulty. Mr. Hulbert says that the money outlook is a comfortable one.

CHICAGO'S VISITORS

CAPITAL ONE MILLION DOLLARS

ILLINOIS BANKING NEWS

By C. C. Burford

The annual meeting of the Building Association League of Illinois, recently held in Chicago, was attended by a large number of building and loan secretaries and other officers from down-state. This phase of the banking business is a most important one, and many Illinois banks are very closely identified with the associations in their home communities. In some towns almost every bank is the depository of a building association and the banks are as a rule very closely interested in the success of their work.

The local associations, that is, those which loan their money on real estate in the home community at a very conservative valuation and protected by mortgage, holding of abstracts and insurance, are doing great good for the laboring and other employed people of the towns. Besides, the opportunity is offered for persons of small investing ability to make weekly or monthly payments into a sound proposition, and in almost every community there are many men who have secured their start in the world in some phase of the work of a local building and loan association. Maturing time, or the season when the stock of the associations close, is a most important time in the financial life of many Illinois communities, and there are many transactions which are always awaiting the maturing of stock in the home building and loan associations.

Death of Moline Banker

Former Judge John M. Gould, one of the pioneer bankers of Moline, is dead. Mr. Gould was one of the earliest citizens of Moline and was a former associate of John Deere, the millionaire plow manufacturer. Mr. Gould was ninety years of age and his death was a result of apoplexy. He organized the first bank in Moline and was its president for thirty-seven years. He came to Moline in 1848, and during the succeeding decades witnessed economic changes in the city and state which were almost miraculous. Mr. Gould was an honored citizen of Moline and his death, removing an old-time banker of the pioneer days, is most keenly regretted by the younger bankers and business men of the Tri-Cities.

New Bank in Southern Illinois Town

Willisville, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, northwest of Murphysboro, is to have its first bank this fall, the Farmers and Citizens Bank to begin business very soon.

Peoria Gets Another Railroad

Peoria, which has already an unusually large number of railroads entering the city, will have a new line when a branch of the Frisco, known as the Eastern Illinois and Peoria railroad, is completed from St. Elmo into that city. The new line will be a northern extension of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois and will give the Frisco system a Peoria entrance. Grading of the new road will be started within a few weeks.

Death of William Leisy of Peoria

Bankers who attended the Illinois Bankers Association convention recently held in Peoria will be interested in the death of William Leisy, a prominent Peoria brewer, business, and sporting man, inasmuch as he was one of the owners of the Jefferson Hotel where the headquarters of the convention were maintained, and also a part owner of the Orpheum Theatre where the program of the convention was carried out.

State Aid Asked for Roads

Jesse Taylor of Ohio, who addressed the recent convention of the Illinois Bankers Association at Peoria on the question of good roads, and State Engineer Johnson of Springfield were the principal speakers at the Illinois branch of the Ocean-to-Ocean Good Roads Association which held its annual meeting at Highland, near East St. Louis. Resolutions were adopted indorsing the rebuilding of the old historic National Road across the state, and demanding state aid in the building of country roads.

Large Mortgage Filed

The Chicago and Alton Railroad Company has filed in the recorder's office in each county traversed by its lines in Illinois a copy of a $20,000,000 mortgage covering all the property of the company and secured by twenty-year gold bonds maturing July 1, 1933. The mortgage is in favor of the United States Mortgage and Trust Company and E. E. Swinney, trustee.

Merritt and Koplin Grow

I. E. Merritt, president of the Hoopeston National, and well known to Illinois bankers, and Mark R. Koplin, cashier of the same bank, report a steady increase in the deposits of that institution, which now total $419,011. The bank started business as a national institution June 1, 1909, and there has been a satisfactory increase in deposits since that date. Messrs. Merritt and Koplin are both national and private bankers, as they own and operate private banks at Buckley and Danforth, in Iroquois county, as well as managing a national institution in Hoopeston. Mr. Koplin's father was a pioneer Illinois private banker at Night Shift in First of Joliet

The First National of Joliet, having a large transit department, has been using a night shift for a number of months with the greatest of satisfaction. The night force handles most of the transit items, the letters being held open until time for their proper trains and then mailed direct at the railroad stations. The night force also opens all incoming bank mail and when the day force arrives the mountain of inbound and outbound transit items has been already handled. The First of Joliet is making a specialty of bank accounts and there are an increasing number of banks in Illinois and adjoining states which use that institution as a clearing-point.

Illinois Railroad Ordered Sold

Judge Humphrey, presiding in the United States district court at Springfield, has signed a decree ordering the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis railroad to be sold by a special master-in-chancery at the freight house in Springfield, some time before January 1, 1913, the exact date to be decided later. The Equitable Trust Company holds $2,000,000 of second mortgage bonds of the railroad, and the Sangamon Loan and Trust Company of Springfield is acting as trustee in the case. The case was brought by the Equitable Trust Company.

The road will be purchased by a new company, representing the former bondholders, and a plan of reorganization is being worked out which will reduce the indebtedness of the road. The Colonial Trust Company of New York holds a first mortgage on the road for $4,400,000. The road taps a rich portion of Illinois, and with reorganization will doubtless become a paying property.

Honor and Thrift Rewarded

William B. McKinley, president of the Illinois Traction Company, and candidate for re-election as congressman in the nineteenth Illinois district, has presented $13,000 to the trustees of the University of Illinois to be used as a nucleus of a loan fund for needy students. For fifteen years Mr. McKinley has made personal loans to worthy University of Illinois students, and in that time, without secured notes, has not lost one cent of either principal or interest. No security will be required for these new loans other than a record for honesty and thrift on the part of the student. A high testimonial is thus paid to many of the future citizens of the nation who can complete their education on money borrowed on their own credit, which is nothing more than their individual merit and honesty.

Illinois Notes

Diller S. Myers, of the Pontiac State Bank, was recently married to Miss Ann Louise Allen of that city.

Down-state railroads report greatly increased freight traffic, September being much larger than the corresponding month in 1911, while August, 1912, was a record-breaker. The Illinois Central and the Big Four lines report very heavy traffic, and the various railroads over the state are busily engaged in getting grain cars in shape to move the tremendous corn crop which is soon to be gathered.

The Illinois Savings and Trust Company, mortgage bankers of Bloomington, is doing a large and rapidly increasing business in various banking lines, although a commercial banking business is not transacted. Farm and city loans, abstracts of title, insurance and savings banking are among the activities of the company, which was organized about a year ago. C. M. Harlan is the president and H. W. Mason is the cashier.

The deposits in the postal savings bank of Decatur for the fiscal year just closed reached a total of $9,603.

The Central Illinois Traction Company of Mattoon has certified to the secretary of state for an increase in its capital stock from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. A few weeks ago the capital was raised from $250,000 to the former amount, and there are rumors that the company will consolidate many electric power plants in the central part of the state.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad is aiding in promoting the agricultural resources of the state in offering $200 to be used in awarding premiums to winners in contests for fall and spring agricultural work in those sections of Illinois traversed by their lines. The work is carried on under the auspices of the National Boys and Girls Club movement.

The Swedish-American State Bank is being organized by men associated with the Sheridan Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago. The new bank will have capital of $200,000 and a surplus of $20,000, the stock being offered to the investing public at $110 a share. The bank will be located at the corner of North Clark Street and Balmoral Avenue, Chicago.

CHICAGO BANK ADOPTS FINGER PRINT SYSTEM

Peoples Stockyards State Bank of this city has adopted the Flak finger print system of identification. The impression of the three middle fingers of the depositor is made on the back of the filing card kept by the bank. By this system forgeries are rendered practically impossible, as no two finger prints out of seven million are alike. It will prove especially valuable in the case of illiterate persons. The argument advanced in favor of its adoption is that signatures change, while finger prints do not. This method of identification has been endorsed by the American Bankers Association. It was first installed in New York in the German Savings Bank of Brooklyn, and nine other banks of that city are using it, while in Albany it is in use by every bank in the city. P. A. Flak of New York City, originator of the system, has installed it in more than fifty-two banks throughout the country in two years. Mr. Flak expects to install it in several other Chicago banks before he leaves the city.

MILWAUKEE

WISCONSIN

That Milwaukee is on a fair way to increasing its importance as a grain center is indicated by recent compilations of Secretary Harry A. Plumb of the Chamber of Commerce, which show grain handled through the exchange during September to be 1,159,560 bushels in excess of that handled in September, 1911. During September, 1912, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road carried 4,423,670 bushels, as against 3,846,520 bushels the year before, while the Chicago and North Western road carried 2,693,630 bushels, as compared with 1,941,930 last year. Reasons advanced for the increase are readjustment of freight rates to meet competition with northern great lake ports and improvement in cross lake routes from this city.

Capt. Robert W. Mueller Retires From Banking

Capt. Robert W. Mueller, dean of Milwaukee bank clerks, severed a forty-years' connection with Milwaukee banks this week by retiring as paying teller of the First National. Mr. Mueller entered the German Exchange Bank in 1871, and later was associated with the Bank of Commerce and Merchants Exchange Bank. When the latter was absorbed by the First National he became a member of the staff of the purchasing institution in whose employ he remained. Capt. Mueller was as prominent in military circles in Milwaukee as in his profession, having captained Troop A, Wisconsin National Guard, for the past twelve years, during which time he rounded the organization into one of the crack troupes of the National Guard. His retirement from this office as well as from the bank went into effect this week. He leaves for California, where he will spend the winter, returning to Milwaukee next June.

At a farewell banquet given in his honor at the Hotel Pfister, by officers and fellow employees of the First National, Capt. Mueller was presented with a watch chain and fob, set with diamonds. The speakers included President Fred Vogel, Jr.; Henry Kloes, cashier; A. W. Bogk and Oscar Kasten, assistant cashiers; R. H. Bechler, Alexander Wall, George Doehler, Ira Parker, Ernest Conrad, Harold Dreher, James E. Moore, John E. Jones, and Rudolph Pfeil. Members of Troop A were hosts at a farewell banquet in the armory Saturday night.

Purchase Bonds

The First Savings and Trust Company, Milwaukee, and the Harris Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago, have jointly purchased $220,000, par value, of Milwaukee county, 4½ per cent bonds, dated October 12, 1912, and maturing each year from 1913 to 1932.

Death of Former Wisconsin Banker

News of the death of Sherburn Merrill Smith, former Milwaukee banker, by accidental shooting in Wendell, Idaho, was received in Milwaukee this week. Mr. Smith was the grandson of former Governor William E. Smith, and was employed in the Marshall and Ilsey Bank for several years prior to 1909, when he went west to recuperate his health. At the time of his death he was president of the Wendell State Bank, whose employ he entered shortly after going west, as cashier. No details of the accident have been learned as yet.

Purchase Burlington Company

The North American Company, owners of the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light Company, increased its Wisconsin holdings this week by the purchase of the Burlington Electric Light and Power Company at Burlington, Wis. The newly acquired property will be operated in connection with the Milwaukee concern.

Wisconsin Central Has Prosperous Year

The past year has been the most successful in the history of the Wisconsin Central road, according to the report made by the directors to the stockholders at the annual meeting of the Soo line subsidiary in Milwaukee this week. The gross earnings were $26,684,240.93; operating expenses, $16,223,291.02; and net earnings, $10,460,949.91, notwithstanding the fact that the grain crop last season was much below an average yield. The average mileage operated was 3,773.37, an increase of 49.03 miles. No changes were made in the directorate.

Otto H. Falk, receiver, also reports that overhead, administration, and selling expenses have been reduced by an average of about $40,000 a month.

Celebrates Thirtieth Year with Bank

H. D. L. Adkins this week celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of his entering the service of the First National Bank of Elkhorn, of which he is now cashier. During that time he has held every position in the bank, from that of messenger to his present office, and has worked under three presidents, C. W. Wiswell, J. L. Edwards and C. P. Greene. He has seen the bank's deposits grow from $165,000 in 1882 to $550,000 in 1912. Henry Adkins, Mr. Adkins' grandfather, was one of the bank's first officers, becoming cashier on its organization in 1865.

Wisconsin Notes

The State Bank of Elkhorn has purchased property in the center of the downtown business section, upon which it will erect a new banking house next year.

Calvin S. Schwenker of La Crosse has been appointed state bank examiner by State Banking Commissioner A. E. Kuolt.

The incorporation of the following banks was authorized by the banking commissioner this week. Farmers and Merchants Bank of Greenwood, capital $30,000; president, Charles Cornelius; cashier, John Huntzicker; Bank of Siren, capital, $10,000; president, Harry D. Baker; cashier, J. E. Spangberg.

A report emanates from Racine that a $300,000 loan and trust company is in process of organization in that city, capital stock to be held by local business men.

Detectives in the employ of the Wisconsin Bankers Association are investigating the recent robbery of the Bank of Wauzeka, the first robbery of the kind reported to the association this year. Safeblowers secured $1,000 and made their escape.

A private bank of Escanaba, Mich., known as the Bank of D. Hammell & Son, and consisting of David Hammell, Appleton, Wis., and W. F. Hammell, Gladstone, Mich., has made voluntary assignment, naming I. N. Bushong, general manager of the Northwestern Coopersage Lumber Company, as assignee.

St. Louis

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, Oct. 17th.—The past week was marked with a continued excellent demand for credits from all sources in the St. Louis market. Shipments of currency to Arkansas were very heavy, but the movement north of the currency shipment zone indicates nearing of the end of the movement. Another feature of the week's banking operations was the return of goodly sums from Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. This repayment represents mainly cotton loans, and its earliness is a surprise to the local banking fraternity, and in a measure a disappointment. There are certain bankers who did not expect the first money back from Texas before October 20th, and some placed the date at October 30th, so that the premature arrival of funds is upsetting calculations in some degree. One bank president expressed the belief that as a result there would be a return of much easier money before the first of the year, as reserves will be larger, and competition among lenders greater. On the other hand, it is maintained that the increased commercial demand and borrowing by railroads will more than offset the return flow, and that no appreciable lowering in rates will occur until logically due in the late winter. This latter view is sincerely hoped for, and seems reasonable. There were offerings of commercial paper from the East throughout the week, and there were numerous excellent names bearing 6 per cent. The local demand holds up in splendid shape, and bids fair to continue to do so for some weeks to come. Wholesale houses and manufacturers are out with most optimistic estimates of fall business. There is no doubt that certain lines, notably dry goods, shoes and hardware, will show heavier totals than ever before. Country orders in many instances are being enlarged, and the government crop report has gone far to stimulate the return of confidence in all directions. Clearings are showing up fairly well, though it is likely the total for October will fall slightly under the corresponding period a year ago, but the year's total will surpass all previous records. Relative to the return flow from the Southwest there is this to say: This first materialization is largely representative of forced first sales of products, that portion with which planters pay their pressing and current debts, while the disposition to hold back will probably bring the average time of the movement down to the time expected. Cotton in certain localities will be held, and broomcorn, maize and other crops will be kept in the country for higher prices, though the arrival of said higher prices is extremely problematical.

Kenefick is Optimistic

William Kenefick, president of the Missouri,

Oklahoma and Gulf Railway, who passed through St. Louis this week, says that no one in the territory fed by his road is pessimistic. "Railroads in the Southwest were never busier," he said, "business was never more brisk and the outlook never more promising. The cotton crop in the Southwest, particularly in Oklahoma, is way ahead of last year. The recent spell of warm weather has rounded out the largest yield of that staple in the new state's history. Compresses are running full time and all the available space is piled high with bales awaiting shipment. The railroads lack cars sufficient to handle the traffic. In addition to the heavy cotton crop traffic, coal is in big demand and the movement abnormally heavy. Our inhabitants are so busy they haven't time for politics. Never before in my experience have business men paid so little attention to politics. The foundation is laid by the present crop season for a long era of activity, and we are certainly going to have our share of it in the Southwest."

Off to Group Meetings

The season of group meetings is at hand, and St. Louis banks intend to be more largely represented at the various gatherings than ever before. Early in the week, representatives of fourteen local banks and trust companies, accompanied by bankers from Chicago and other cities, departed in a special car over the Missouri Pacific for Kansas City, St. Joseph, Hannibal and Brookfield to attend meetings of groups of the Missouri Bankers Association at those points. The Kansas City meeting was held on Wednesday, the Hannibal meeting on Thursday, and the Brookfield meeting on Friday. The car was scheduled to return to St. Louis Saturday and be taken out again next week for the following meetings: Jefferson City, October 22d; Lexington, October 23d; Eldorado Springs, October 24th; Springfield, October 29th; Neosho, October 30th and Charleston, November 8th.

Among those forming the itinerant party are: R. R. Calkins, St. Joseph, president; J. B. Jenkins, Moberly, vice-president, and W. F. Keyser, Sedalia, secretary of the Missouri Bankers Association; R. S. Hawes, vice-president Third National; E. B. Clare-Avery, Merchants Laclede National; A. O. Wilson, vice-president State National; E. C. Stewart, M. A. Taylor, Boatmens Bank; L. W. Fricke, R. W. Stumpe, E. G. Stockton, J. F. Farrell, W. B. Taylor, George R. Baker, and C. L. Boye, all of St. Louis; R. E. Gamble, W. L. McKee, W. A. Jackson, R. F. Newhall, Chicago; J. Thralls, Clement Chase, C. C. Jones, and C. C. Jordan, Kansas City.

To Feature Agricultural Movement

W. C. Gordon, of Marshall, Mo., chairman of the Committee on Agricultural Development of the Missouri Bankers Association, will speak at all the group meetings in behalf of the movement which has to do with the increase in farm yields of the state. This committee, since its formation at the last convention at Springfield, has worked wonders, and has the co-operation of farmers and agriculturists throughout the state. Mr. Gordon is prepared to present something in the form of definite plans, which his committee, in conjunction with the agricultural department of the Missouri State University, has worked out. Bankers throughout Missouri have entered enthusiastically into the movement, which will doubtless be productive of material benefits in the near future. Besides plans for specific production of crops, the committee is working on a system for facilitating the financing of farms and farm operations.

Project an Active Winter

The local chapter has planned a winter of great activity, with education the keynote in the program. As an indication of its confidence and appreciation of the work being done by the St. Louis Chapter, the St. Louis Clearing House Association has made a donation of $500 toward its treasury fund. This will be used in forwarding the work. A goodly number of new members has been enrolled since the last meeting, which with visitors, made Tuesday's gathering one of the largest and most successful in the history of the chapter.

Love Feast for Moser

The St. Louis Chapter of the American Institute of Banking opened up its season's activities on Tuesday night with a sort of love feast for Byron W. German-American Bank Considerable interest in local financial circles centers upon the successor of William P. Kennett, former president of that institution, who died last week. Mr. Kennett had been head of the bank since 1910, at which time he was promoted from the vice-presidency. He was a native of St. Louis, and received his education in St. Louis public schools and Washington University. Prior to his connection with the German-American Bank he was a member of the firm of Francis Brother & Company.

Oklahoma Yegg Captured

Advices from Oklahoma City are to the effect that for the third time within the last three years the State Bank of Prue, Oklahoma, was robbed this week. On the last occasion, a masked robber walked in at 9 o'clock in the morning and compelled J. H. Danner to hand over $2,000 of the bank's cash. The robber did not fare as well as the others, however, as he was seen leaving the town, by a farmer whose horse he had previously "borrowed." The farmer went in pursuit with a shotgun, and after a race of eight miles, the thief was overtaken and captured. When caught, the robber still had the $2,000 in his pockets.

NEW OFFICIALS FOR SAN ANTONIO BANK

State Bank and Trust Company of San Antonio, Texas, announces under date of October 1st, the appointment of George D. Campbell, formerly state bank examiner, as cashier, succeeding J. H. Hailie, who has been advanced to the position of vice-president. W. W. Collier, the former vice-president, has been obliged to retire on account of illness.

"A FINANCIAL COURTSHIP"

Frank West Rollins, president of E. H. Rollins and Sons, with offices in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles, is the author of a little book entitled, "A Financial Courtship," the purpose of which is to initiate women into some of the mysteries of finance, and in which a plea is made for conservative investment. The story is of two sisters left alone in the world by the death of their father, provision being made for their maintenance and support by life insurance to the extent of $50,000 and the house in which they lived. As is so often the case, they were absolutely ignorant of matters pertaining to financial affairs, and to add to their perplexity, had no male relative or friend to whom they could go for advice and assistance. However, they finally thought of a lawyer in their town who had large interests, and with whom Mary, the younger sister, had a slight acquaintance. The lawyer proved to be quite willing to render assistance, probably as a result of a more than usual interest which he felt in the younger girl. It finally was arranged that Mr. Stanley, the attorney, was to call at the residence of his prospective pupils, and to impart to them some of the fundamental information relating to investments. In the course of instruction the promiscuous use of the word "bank" by unscrupulous individuals and the sale of "Blue Sky" securities by fake promoters is sharply criticized. Investments for women were rated in the following order: First, municipal bonds; second, first mortgage corporation bonds; third, real estate mortgages; fourth, state bonds; fifth, government bonds, and sixth, high-grade dividend-paying stocks. It was pointed out that very little skill and judgment are required in the purchase of the first, as they generally are safe for the reason that the credit of municipalities is carefully guarded by the courts. The second class, however, requires more care and study, and inquiry and investigation should be made of the character and stability of the corporation issuing the bonds. It also is desirable to consider the diversity of its business field. The third class requires the skill and experience of a good business man; the fourth calls for a study of the present debt and past history of the state; the fifth requires no skill, simply money, and the sixth, careful study of the corporation, history, present status and future prospects. Government bonds are not recommended as an investment for the reason that they fluctuate tremendously at times, and in addition the income yielded is quite small when compared with some other forms of investment. They are classed as "the height of luxury in investment, the pate de foie gras of the world of wealth," and the belief expressed that they are decidedly ill-adapted to the needs of men and women who live on their income. In purchasing municipal bonds it is desirable to ascertain whether or not the object for which they are issued is one which will benefit all the people alike or only a certain portion of them. The following is found in regard to stocks: "My advice would be either to buy the most conservative, best-established, high-priced stocks, or let stocks alone. Undoubtedly the safest course is for a woman to confine herself to bonds and mortgages. She stands less risk of loss, for she is nearer the base of the financial pyramid. While she will not share in the great advances, she does not take the risk of the big losses." Speaking of investments in real estate, the author says: "It is well to keep in mind that although well located land may appreciate in value, the buildings on it constantly depreciate in value unless money is expended on their upkeep. Consequently a real estate investment as a whole will depreciate in value, unless the increase in land value at least equals the depreciation of physical property thereon constructed."

The whole story is clearly and lucidly told; the phraseology is such that even a child could understand, and the work of Mr. Rollins will form a valuable contribution to financial literature. As might be expected, the course of lessons culminates in the marriage of the attorney to Mary, the younger sister.

During September twenty national banks were licensed to do business. Combined capital amounts to $1,030,000. This makes a total of 7,422 national banks with an aggregate capital of $1,056,775,435.

GROWTH OF MONOPOLISTIC TRUSTS

The growth of monopolistic combinations in recent years has been so appalling as to call for drastic corrective measures. Many trusts and pools are grossly overcapitalized, a very large proportion of the excess being water. By this means they are enabled to represent to the public that they are making a small 6 or 7 per cent on their capital, whereas they really are earning a much larger dividend. The country needs an administration which will do more than institute prosecutions; it wants an administration which will carry to a conclusion all suits which may be started, and which will drive all monopolies and illegal combinations out of business and keep them out. Before election, candidates for office are very profuse with their promises to the people, but after they are elected they seem to have a slight change of heart, develop habits of procrastination and lose some of the enthusiasm and aggressiveness which were so prominent when they were running for office.

When Theodore Roosevelt, "the panacea for all the country's ills," first succeeded to the presidency, there were comparatively few illegal trusts in existence. When he turned the reins of government over to his successor there were thousands, and they have been growing in number ever since. Surely it may be doubted if he is the man to remedy the situation now? How could he render disinterested service to the country when he accepts campaign contributions from such men as Morgan, Perkins, Frick, Munsey and others? The country wants a man who will not be trying to serve two masters,—one who genuinely has the best interests of the people at heart and one who will do something more than talk. The people in this world who are worth while are those who produce results.

The Sherman anti-trust law was not placed on the statute books as a joke; its purpose is to stamp out monopolistic corporations. The value of a law is measured by the degree of compliance. If the law of this country is to mean anything and is to be respected, it must be enforced strictly, and every violator, be he large or small, should be subjected to its penalty. No manufacturer of harvesters should have immunity and no steel combine should be above the law.

PRIVATES INCORPORATING RAPIDLY

It was in 1907 that agitation in the state of Illinois for universal bank supervision first began to attract attention. Previous to that time numerous far-seeing private bankers had converted their institutions into state or national banks. Some of them did so for the reason that they felt apprehensive about the public attitude toward unsupervised banking. Others became incorporated that they might the better and more safely transmit the management of the bank in a more stable form to sons or other heirs. In a few cases incorporation became a matter of business on account of strong rivalry in the same or nearby towns. For the past two years the agitation in favor of bank supervision has been carried on very systematically under the leadership of a number of prominent bankers throughout the state. B. F. Harris as president of the Illinois Bankers Association did all that lay within his power to put that organization on record as favoring bank supervision. We are not ready to believe that it failed entirely on its merits as a question, but that many persons voted against supervision who actually believe in it, and many of whom are connected with incorporated banks. A large number of the better class of private bankers believe that state supervision is bound to come, and they wish that it may come about, not at the hands of their fellow-bankers nor through the action of the state association to which they have been contributing members, but rather that it should come about as the act of the legislature, after a careful investigation of the subject and the holding of public hearings where all may appear who are interested. Following is a complete list of private banks which have been converted to state institutions since 1907. It is a long list and shows conclusively that progress has been made even without compulsory or drastic legislation.

APPROVES AGRICULTURAL CREDIT PLAN

President Taft, in a letter addressed to the governors of the various states, expresses it as his opinion that the recommendations contained in reports submitted by Ambassador Myron T. Herrick and others engaged in the study of European methods of financing the farmer, are adaptable to the needs of the United States. He favors the co-operative credit plan as set forth in the organization of the Raiffeisen banks of Germany, but believes that the establishment and conduct of such banks are matters for state control. He also suggests land-mortgage banks under state charters and the formation of co-operative mortgage-bond societies along the lines of the Landschaften of Germany, provided that their organization and operation can be governed by uniform state legislation; also the establishment of national land-mortgage banks under government supervision, with the power to guarantee and market the guaranteed debenture bonds of the state land-mortgage banks or co-operative societies.

The president expresses it as his belief that one of the causes of the high cost of living is the large expense the farmer is compelled to incur in producing his crops. With commissions and renewal charges, the average rate of interest paid by the farmers of this country is $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, as compared with from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent paid by the French and German farmers. Governors are invited to confer with the president at Washington at the next annual conference of governors, for the purpose of considering the adoption in the United States of an agricultural credit system.

GOVERNOR DENEEN'S REPLY

Governor Deneen is the latest addition to the Ananias Club. It is charged by the governor that Mr. Roosevelt conceded to him that the contest claims of but thirty-four of the seventy-eight alleged stolen delegates to the Chicago convention were bona fide. Of course, if the colonel were to admit this to be true, he would not have much standing with the people, so he characteristically calls Governor Deneen a prevaricator. The motion relating to the seventy-eight delegates was introduced by Governor Hadley. Mr. Deneen simply offered a resolution recommending that the motion be referred to the committee on credentials and that none of the delegates whose right to a seat in the convention was questioned by the motion be allowed to vote on the selection of members of the credentials committee. Neither Governor Deneen nor anybody else is placed in a "dilemma," for Governor Hadley in presenting the motion stated that he did not know whether or not the charges contained therein were true, but that they should be passed upon by the convention. In an address made by the ex-president on June 20th to his delegates and advisers, and which is quoted by Deneen in his reply, it is quite apparent that the colonel had reference to the motion which he had asked the governor to make and which related to but thirty-four delegates, but which he did not know had been changed on the convention floor by his managers.

It is difficult to see where Governor Deneen has done anything to merit the abuse which has been heaped upon him by Mr. Roosevelt. He simply introduced an amendment to the motion relating to the seventy-eight delegates, and refused to change Governor Hadley's motion without first consulting with him. His reply to the colonel carries conviction in every line. He uses the logic of a trained attorney, fully armed with the facts and has placed the colonel in a truly indefensible position. The episode will make Governor Deneen thousands of votes.

PIERSON QUILTS IRVING NATIONAL

New York, Oct. 15th.—Lewis E. Pierson has resigned as president of the Irving National Bank to enter the firm of Austin, Nichols & Co., wholesale grocers. Mr. Pierson, however, will continue a director of the bank and be chairman of its executive committee. Mr. Pierson is a director of the Broadway Trust Company and a trustee of the Irving Savings institution. The Irving National Bank, during his connection with it since 1898, has grown from an institution of $2,000,000 resources to one with resources totaling over $50,000,000.

Austin, Nichols & Co. announce that Mr. Pierson has taken the interest of Thomas W. Ormiston in their firm. Mr. Ormiston, on account of ill health, is retiring from business after thirty-three years of active life with this house. The members of the firm of Austin, Nichols & Co. are: James E. Nichols (special partner); Thomas W. Ormiston, Thomas M. McCarthy, Harry Balfe, Walter B. Timms, James C. Mahlen and Louis C. Owens. The firm is the largest wholesale grocery house in the country. It will shortly move to the Brooklyn waterfront in order to improve its shipping facilities.

DOHERTY OFFERS NEW UTILITY COMPANY STOCK

Henry L. Doherty & Co. are offering $10,000,000 preferred stock of the Utilities Improvement Company, on the basis of $1,000 preferred and $400 common stock for $1,000 in cash. This is the new company which this firm has just organized and has a total capitalization of $40,000,000, of which amount $25,000,000 is 6 per cent cumulative preferred and $15,000,000 common stock. The amount to be outstanding at once of each issue is $10,000,000. The firm announces that one-half of the present $10,000,000 offering is being taken by the same London interests who a short time ago purchased the preferred stock of the Cities Service Company and stock of the Consolidated Cities Light, Power and Traction Company. It will be recalled that, when Messrs. Doherty & Co. offered the stocks of the above-mentioned companies, they were largely oversubscribed.

The new company has been formed to take over the following properties: Toledo Light and Railways Company (Ohio); Danbury and Bethel Gas and Electric Light Company (Ct.); Brantford Gas Company, Limited (Ontario); Woodstock Gas Company, Limited (Ontario); Athens Railway and Electric Company (Georgia); Coshocton District Gas and Fuel Company (Ohio); Bartlesville Gas Electric and Railway Company (Okla.); Empire Gas and Fuel Company (Kan., Mo. and Okla.); $2,800,000 6-year 7 per cent notes of the Southwestern Reserve Gas Company.

According to compilations by Doherty & Co., the new company in 1913 will earn 6.2 per cent on its common stock; in 1914, 8.2 per cent, and in 1915, 10.7 per cent. It is proposed to pay 2 per cent dividends on the common stock during the first year, which rate will be increased 1 per cent per annum until 6 per cent a year is paid.

MEDIA (ILL.) STATE BANK

Media (Ill.) State Bank is in the heart of a purely agricultural and stock raising country. At the last call of the state auditor this bank showed capital and surplus of $100,000 and deposits of around $200,000. C. R. Pendarvis, cashier, served on the committee on agricultural and vocational education last year and is greatly interested in improving the wagon roads of Illinois. The Henderson county district is in the level black prairie section and experiences heavy roads during the bad season.

Andrew Russel Bankers Favorite for State Treasurer

"If you know of a thing that will darken the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy,
That will wipe out a smile, or the least way annoy
A fellow, or cause any gladness to cloy,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it."

who understand such things say that he gave a wonderfully successful and competent administration of that office.

The verse which appears above is one of three printed on the reverse side of Mr. Russel's campaign cards. It gives a fair idea of his personal character and throws some light ticket, as well as by the state ticket headed by Governor Charles S. Deneen.

There is a reason, of course, why Mr. Russel's administration of the treasurer's office was so clean and successful. He has been a prosperous banker for more than two-thirds of his life-time. He was born in Jacksonville, June 17, 1856, and secured his education in the Jacksonville public school, at a Jacksonville business college and later at the Illinois College. At the present time he is chairman of the board of trustees for Illinois College, and takes great interest in educational matters, both in his home city and in the state at large.

A little more about his banking career will recall his special fitness for the position which he now seeks—treasurer of the state of Illinois—to bankers. He was but eighteen years of age when he entered the old Jacksonville National Bank as a bookkeeper. He served in practically every capacity in that institution during the seventeen years which he remained with it. He left its service to become a partner in the well-known firm of Dunlap, Russel & Co. This banking firm prospered until it became necessary in order for it better to fill its field to merge its business with that of another bank. Accordingly, the control of the Ayers National of Jacksonville was purchased, and Mr. Russel now is its vice-president. The Ayers National now is completing a beautiful seven-story building and will move into its new quarters about December 1st. It then will have what probably will be the finest banking room in the state, outside of Chicago.
As soon as the National is located in its new building, the business of Dunlap, Russel & Co. will be taken over and joined with that of the national bank.

It may be said that Mr. Russel has the "treasurer habit." His own city elected him treasurer for five terms. As long as he was willing to accept the position, the election went by default in his favor. He has served as chairman of the state board of pardons under Governors Yates and Deneen for six years.
He was treasurer of the state of Illinois from 1908 to 1910 and made a splendid record, having given the office his personal attention, bringing to bear upon the administration of its affairs his long banking experience. It is said about Springfield that Mr. Russel is one of the best public officers the state ever has had. He is genial and approachable and his motto in life is, and always has been, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Mr. Russel is a Scotch-Presbyterian, and whether or not he is entitled to a Scotch-Irish pedigree or simply Scotch, is a matter of little consequence. His father was a native of Scotland, while his mother was born in Sangamon county, this state. However much bankers of the state may disagree in other political matters, they will be found practically solid for Mr. Russel's election to the state treasurership. Naturally, his friends expect him to lead the voting, since he will get the full, regular, republican vote and the votes of thousands who will support either Funk or Dunne on the opposition tickets for governor.

The office of state treasurer requires a man skilled in finance and of known executive ability. Special fitness is the demand of the bankers of the state for the state treasurership. Members of the Illinois Bankers Association will line up for Andrew Russel, one of its ex-presidents, on election day—November 5th.

ANDREW RUSSEL
Jacksonville, Illinois

There probably is not another banker in the state of Illinois who could contend successfully with Andrew Russel in a popularity contest. Three times he has carried the Illinois state primaries by overwhelming majorities.
In the first instance he was deprived of the nomination which he had earned by political complications. The second time he was triumphantly elected state treasurer, and those on his wonderful popularity, not only with bankers, but with the general public. He never has a hard word to say of anyone.

When he was deprived of the fruits of his victory at the state primary for the treasurership, he fell into line and loyally supported the ticket. This year, in spite of all threats and badgering by newspapers and progressives, he has stood valiantly by the national republican

PURCHASES CONTROLLING INTEREST IN CONTINENTAL TRUST

Col. William E. Hughes, millionaire banker and cattleman, who makes his home in St. Louis, but who has large interests in Colorado, recently has purchased from John W. Springer the controlling interest in the Continental Trust Company of Denver. Col. Hughes formerly held the control of this same institution but sold out to Mr. Springer and others about four years ago. The Continental Trust is capitalized at $300,000. Col. Hughes is well known in the banking world, having formerly been president of the Union Trust Company of St. Louis. He still has large holdings in that institution. He also has banking interests in Texas and is the chief stockholder in the Continental Cattle Company, one of the largest institutions of its kind in the West, with a capital of three millions.

On November 1st Mr. Springer will retire from the presidency and Col. Hughes will become the active head of the Continental Trust. No other change in the list of officers has been announced. Allan F. Ayers, vice-president and secretary, will remain in general charge of the institution and F. G. Spencer, vice-president, will remain in charge of the trust department.

Mr. Springer will first take a rest and then will devote his time to his other interests, which are quite large. He has been prominently identified with Denver banking affairs, being one of the founders of the Continental Trust and instrumental in the formation of the Federal Trust and Savings and Capitol National Banks.

SUBSCRIBES TO FUND FOR EDUCATION OF FARMERS

Samuel W. Allerton, capitalist and farmer, at a banquet of the American Meat Packers Association held in the Congress Hotel on Tuesday of this week, subscribed $1,000 as the nucleus of a fund to be devoted to the education of farmers in Illinois and surrounding states. He stated that it is necessary to increase the production of cattle throughout the United States, and that by the adoption of more scientific methods this can be accomplished, and, in addition, the crop production can be increased.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE

At the St. Louis session of the National Education Association this year a special committee was created of the department of superintendents of the N. E. A. This committee was appointed to further the interests of home and school relations of young people. Special work is to be taken up as to the unification of the boys' and girls' club work of the United States. The committee is gathering information now so as to be able to report to those interested what has been done and what is being done in all lines of boys' and girls' club work. Another item is to find a medium of communication for information relative to this work to people who are interested. The third object relates to arranging for courses for work and study in which the boys and girls of all the states may unite. It is not intended that these courses shall interfere with the work they are doing locally, but they are to have some specific, general regulation, which if met by the young people in any particular force will entitle such members to participate in national prize winning contests, exhibits and other matters which may be arranged. The interests of the various state bankers' organizations in the matter of agricultural development and education, as well as the work of "Farmer Joe" Chapman's committee of the A. B. A., touches the vital matter of proper guidance of the young people in the agricultural districts, and they should join with the committee of the N. E. A. in furthering their plans.

Almost of as much interest as the presidential campaign to the people of Missouri is the state campaign now at its height on the issue of whether Missouri shall adopt the single tax system by constitutional amendment. Although the submission of the amendment was provided for more than a year ago it was not until very recently that the matter caused any considerable amount of comment. But now the state is seething with zealous partisans for and against the amendment. The Bull Moose party which has a state ticket in the field is favoring the single tax issue, while the Republicans are opposing it. As yet the Democrats have taken little part in the controversy, but most of the Democratic candidates are opposed to single tax. The single taxers were in the field first and had made quite a campaign before organized opposition developed. Now the farmers have organized a protective association to oppose single tax and the Republican candidates are preaching anti-single tax all over the state. As a rule, the people of the cities are in favor of it, while a majority of the farmers are opposed to it. It is set forth by the opposition that under a single tax system the farmers would bear the heaviest burdens of taxation, as a land tax would naturally accrue to the farm lands, while the city dwellers would escape a large part of their present tax responsibilities. The bankers of Missouri naturally are deeply interested in the outcome of this unique campaign and it is believed that they are uniformly opposed to it.

Group 4 Holds Meeting in Kansas City

The first of the Missouri group meetings for the season was held in Kansas City Tuesday, October 15th, when the members of Group 4 gathered for a business session. The meeting was held in the auditorium of the Commercial Club and the visiting bankers were given an automobile ride over Kansas City's boulevards and a luncheon by way of special entertainment. W. C. Gordon, cashier of the Farmers Savings Bank of Marshall, Mo., read a paper on "The Needs and the Opportunity," which related to the relationship between the banker and the farmer. Mr. Gordon is chairman of the committee on agriculture and good roads development of the Missouri State Bankers Association. Judge James E. Goodrich, of the Kansas City circuit court, discussed "The Country Banker." C. A. Davis, cashier of the Jackson County Bank of Independence, Mo., reported on Jackson county, and Frank Hamilton, assistant cashier of the Commercial Bank of Liberty, represented Clay county. These reports dealt with the financial conditions of the two counties and the report for the entire group was made by Frank Crowley, cashier of the Kearney Bank of Kearney, Mo. The address of welcome was delivered by P. W. Goebel, president of the Kansas City Clearing House Association, which was responded to by A. M. Ott, president of the Christman-Sawyer Banking Company of Independence. The meeting was very well attended and was delightful in every way.

Group 11 to Meet at Springfield

Bankers of Springfield, Mo., are making unusual preparations for the entertainment of visiting financiers during the meeting of Group 11, Missouri Bankers Association, in that city, October 29th. A special train from St. Louis bearing twenty-five or thirty bankers, and a special train from Kansas City with even more guests, will swell the number of financiers at Springfield to not less than 225. The St. Louis and Kansas City trains will go from Springfield to Neosho, Mo., where, on the following day, Group 10 will hold its annual meeting. At Springfield, S. E. Trimble, cashier of the Union National Bank of that city, will deliver an address on "The Banker's Part in Agricultural Development." R. R. Calkins, of St. Joseph, Mo., president of the Missouri State Bankers Association, will make an address. The Springfield Clearing House Association has named the following members as an entertainment committee: W. B. Sandford, H. B. McDaniel, Bert Gardner and Ernest Ferguson. Group 11 has as its officers: W. J. McGhee, of Houston, Chairman, and F. H. Wright, of Springfield, secretary.

Ask Protection Against Robberies

Not since the stirring days of the James, the Younger, and the Dalton gangs, has there been such a real period of terror among the small banks of Arkansas, Missouri and Oklahoma as now exists. Bankers in all of the smaller towns of this section are demanding adequate protection, and W. B. Harrison, secretary of the Oklahoma State Bankers Association, has appealed to Governor Cruce of that state for such rewards as will stimulate the local authorities to action. In his letter to the governor, Secretary Harrison says: "Attacks upon Oklahoma banks by professional bank burglars have become so frequent that the name of the state is being brought into disrepute as a resort of criminals of this class. Four burglaries have occurred this week: at Douglas and Kremlin on Monday, at Keystone on Wednesday, and Council Hiss to-day (Saturday). In all, more than $20,000 has been secured by these robbers from Oklahoma banks within ninety days. During the same period there have been several train robberies and numerous blowings of safes in private places of business. In behalf of the bankers of Oklahoma residing in small towns where there is practically no protection from these outlaws. I request you to offer a reward on the part of the state commensurate with the offenses committed and that you use any other authority at your disposal to rid the state of these criminals." Since that appeal was made the State Bank of Prue, Okla., was robbed of $2,000, and the Farmers Bank of Bogard, Mo., was entered and $2,800 in bills was taken from a demolished safe. Perhaps the boldest escapade of the gang was in holding up a passenger train of the Kansas City Southern Railway, near Mena, Ark., the night of October 11th. The express messenger, Merrill Burgett, distinguished himself for unusual heroism. Although dynamite was used to blow open his car, he battled with the bandits until his ammunition was exhausted. Then he was pounced upon and terribly beaten, but will recover. His resistance prevented the robbers from getting into the express safe. Governor Cruce has said that he has no authority to offer a reward, but, the banking board may do so out of the guaranty fund. A significant feature of the situation is that, while bank robberies are of very frequent occurrence all along the southeast borders of Kansas, no Kansas banks have been broken into recently. It is believed that the law in Kansas providing much more severe punishments for bank robbery is the cause of the immunity thus far enjoyed in that state.

For Release of Flack

Application has been made in the Kansas supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus for the release of John A. Flack from jail in Abilene, Kan., now under arrest for the embezzlement of about $75,000 from the defunct Abilene State Bank. Flack was arrested in New York August 27th, and was brought back to Kansas. He was arraigned on the charge of forging a note for $2,000 and was held for trial, giving bond for his appearance. While he was out at liberty he was again arrested on other charges growing out of the bank's failure, and the efforts of Flack's attorneys are directed toward quashing all actions except that upon which Flack was extradited from New York. There are ten separate charges against Flack, all of which, with a single exception, will be quashed if the writ is issued.

Kansas Blue Sky Law Extolled at Indianapolis

During the last half-century the matchless natural resources of this country have been opened up, disgorging a richness of possession undreamed of in other ages. The men who were fortunate enough to get in on the ground floor in this development have, by the growth of our civilization, accumulated vast fortunes. Some of these men, "growing fat by what they fed upon," have entered the realms of politics and have succeeded in securing for themselves advantages in legislation which, by a system of protection, has added to their wealth, a positive gift, in addition to what the natural growth of our country has given them. We have thus seen created in this country a class of "Newly Rich," the like of which has never been known in any country on the globe.

As the natural resources have developed, and the country has grown by leaps and bounds, industrial centers have sprung up. The needs of the people in those centers and the necessity of communication between different cities has created a demand for public utilities, railroads and traction facilities. This has been another marvelous field for the creation of the newly rich. In many different industrial lines, men have secured from the government a monopoly on an idea controlling the creation of an article demanded by the public. This has been a lucrative field for the creation of the newly rich.

While this accumulation of great wealth by the comparative few has been, in most cases, perfectly logical and legitimate, it has, nevertheless, had a marked moral effect upon the minds of the people and has brought us face to face with problems which will require the deepest thought of most sincere, unselfish, thinking men to solve.

This accumulation of great wealth by the comparative few and their ostentation in their profligate, lavish expenditures, has had a tendency with the general public to make the luxuries of yesterday the necessities of to-day. The standard of living has gradually advanced. The well-to-do citizen is inclined to want to live after the fashion of the newly rich. The man of modest income is ambitious to maintain a standard equal to the well-to-do, and so on down the line.

Boys in the quiet country seats have been told, over and over again, the stories of men in industrial centers who have started with nothing and ended with vast landed estates, or rolled in the wealth obtained from a bonanza mine, or, finally, became kings in the railroad, traction, or public service world. A proud, indulgent parent has said, "My boy shall not be compelled to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow as I have done. He shall be given a chance to become a captain of industry." Thus encouraged, the boy leaves the farm and goes to the city to begin the life-and-death struggle to build for himself a standard of living equal to the newly rich. And yet we wonder why the cost of living is so high. In the face of all this, we must suffer insult to our intelligence every four years by being told by a band of hired stump-speakers, that the Eagle, the Rooster, or the Bull Moose,

The eloquent Dick Miller goes after the Eagle, the Rooster and the Bull Moose for fake election promises to reduce the cost of living. Too many have runabout pocket books and six-cylinder appetites. Tells of Blue Sky abuses in Indiana. Proposes a modified form of the Dolley plan. Gives legitimate investment bankers view point stand for a reduction in the price of the necessities of life.

These ambitious, money-seeking young men have not come from the farm alone. From the homes of mechanics, merchants, and all classes of modest business men, the ranks of this army of young fighters for advantage in the business world have been recruited.

In this mad scramble to get into the class of great money-makers, many have been legitimately successful, for we still claim for our country the distinction of being a land of real opportunity. In the struggle many have fallen. They have not, however, lost the appetite for the luxuries which great wealth would bring them. They are possessed of a Brush Runabout pocketbook and a six-cylinder Winton Six appetite. They have viewed the promised land of riches, and while they have given up fighting legitimately to reach the goal, they refuse to surrender. They have become monomaniacs on the subject of acquiring wealth. They have forgotten the ethics of their first principle of business. Their motto is, Win! win! at all hazards!

After this fashion we have seen created in this country a distinct class, which we are pleased to call, in polite language, "financial parasites." If we chose to be brutal in our expression, we would call them high-toned grafters, a class of men who take from those who have and do not care whether they give anything in return for it or not.

While naturally a comparative few men have become immensely rich in this country, those in the more lowly walks of life have been reasonably prosperous. The aggregate savings accounts of the country have grown to enormous proportions. The money-savers of the country constitute a class which we are pleased to call the "investing public." You, gentlemen, occupy a peculiar position relative to the investing public. You are in a sense the trustee for the investor, but, unfortunately, in many cases without full power to act.

I think it very important that this subject be thoroughly discussed before you. It is up to you to aid in every possible way any movement which would give greater protection to your depositor, which would conserve his savings so they might be turned into channels of public upbuilding rather than into channels of absolute dissipation.

It is not necessary for me to tell you gentlemen how this class of financial parasites, in the state of Indiana, have preyed upon the investing public, your depositor. The most usual method employed by the high-toned grafter is the incorporation of a company, and the sale of certificates of stock in that company. Most usually these companies are organized under the laws of a foreign state, but, gentlemen, we have had, as you know, during the last few years, some glowing examples of corporations in our own state, where the financial parasite has succeeded in getting from your investor something for nothing.

In a general way, we may say the promoter of these corporations capitalizes an idea for a business, rather than the substance, and, therefore, gives your depositor, in the form of certificates of stock, nothing more than blue sky, and many times it is not as good as our October blue sky. When we say they have capitalized the idea of a business, we mean they have taken some wonderfully rich industry, where men, because of favorable conditions, have made great fortunes. They have taken the idea of that great money-making enterprise and have made it the basis of an incorporation. Reasoning with the investor by analogy, they hypnotize him with the idea of the business, and the probability of great gain, and thus unload gilded certificates of stock which many times are not worth the paper on which they are written. This corporate method of transacting business has been of natural growth, following along in the path of the development of our wonderful riches.

The promoter of legitimate enterprises, by the organization of a corporation, and by distributing stock widely with the investing public, has probably done as much for the upbuilding of this country as any other class of citizens. We have no fault to find with corporate business, big or little. We have no fault to find with the promoter of legitimate

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

Ballooning is a favorite pastime of Twin City bankers, such as are not on the inside in the present mysterious negotiations in bank stocks. This means that the financial men are up in the air. They profess not to know exactly what the outcome is to be, but one reading their private thoughts would get something like this: "Having built an empire and a great railroad, and having acquired great iron ore interests in Minnesota, to say nothing of other properties in the Northwest, J. J. Hill has decided to cap the climax of his career by establishing in St. Paul a tremendous banking institution and a trust company. To accomplish this, having acquired the Second National, he will combine it with the First National and bring the Northwestern Trust Company into line, and increase the capital and surplus, if deemed wise. In this bank he can carry accounts of the three 'Hill' roads, his mining interests, personal accounts, and can also attract the deposits of other large investors." This theory is said to be the bird's-eye view of the balloonists. Early this week the outlook was for an absorption of the Northwestern Trust Company by the First. More than 1,500 out of 2,000 shares comprising the stock of the trust company have been obtained for sale at $250. The First has bought a tract of land adjoining the bank which is said to be a means of protecting the bank against intrusion of inharmoniously built structures. The combined capital of the banks would be $1,400,000, while the combined resources would be about $16,000,000. The total deposits of the two institutions would be between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 to start with.

North Dakota Bank Merger

The Merchants National, Fargo, N. D., will take over the business of the Fargo Commercial Bank and the institution will be known as the Merchants National Commercial Bank. N. A. Lewis is president of the Merchants, O. H. Barnes, vice-president, and S. S. Lyon, cashier. Of the Commercial, the officers are: President, F. S. Gardner; vice-president, W. C. McFadden; cashier, M. A. Baldwin. The latter bank was established about five years ago.

Crops in Canada

Reports from Winnipeg are to the effect that the Canadian Bank of Commerce, after a comprehensive and systematic examination of crop conditions in western Canada, estimates the wheat yield at 196,000,000 bushels; oats, 224,500,000 bushels; barley, 49,600,000 bushels, and flax, 12,900,000 bushels. The total value of the grain crops to the producer is estimated by the bank at $208,000,000, of which wheat at 62 cents totals $121,520,000; oats at 25 cents, $56,125,000; barley at 33 cents, $16,533,000, and flax at $1.10, $14,190,000.

Death of Preston Banker

Banker thirty years at Preston, Minn., 78 years old, Judge Henry Rogers Wells died October 14th at Ocean Park Heights, California, where he went two years ago from Minneapolis. He leaves two sons, W. R. Wells, Fresno, Cal.; Harry Wells, Chicago.

W. J. Kommers in Minneapolis

W. J. Kommers, assistant cashier of the Old National, Spokane, said in Minneapolis that Washington, which has the biggest crops in its history, has great business activity. He added: "Conditions that prevail in Minneapolis are felt in Spokane, and everybody is looking for a splendid year in 1913. Winter wheat of the new crop seeded this fall is already four or five inches above the ground, indicating an early start and a good yield next year."

Wealth Per Capita

Another of a series of maps prepared in the office of Kelsey S. Chase, state bank examiner, shows how much everyone in Minnesota should have in money to get his share of the bank deposits in his county. The department has considered both state and national banks.

Ramsey and Hennepin counties, containing St. Paul and Minneapolis, have the highest deposits, but Brown county has the greatest per capita deposits. The amount is $234.48 and in Martin county $222.68. In Ramsey it is $134.01 and in Hennepin $158.43.

$20,000,000 More of Credits Taxed

The Minnesota tax commission reports the 1912 assessment on moneys and credits at $135,155,794, something like $20,000,000 uncovered since 1911. Hennepin county furnishes 60 per cent of the increase for 1912, or $12,692,376. Carver county, a small part of the state, shows the greatest per cent increase. Hennepin, Ramsey and St. Louis counties, containing the three large cities, furnish more than $79,000,000 in the aggregate of $135,000,000.

New Bank at Lakefield

The Farmers State of Lakefield, Minn., has been incorporated at $25,000. This may be increased to $100,000. Incorporators are: Ferdinand Klindt, James Rost, Hohn Hagerston, Lakefield; William Greig, St. Paul; J. G. Branch, Chariton, Iowa.

Depositors to be Paid

The German-American State, Witten, S. D., which closed its doors four weeks ago by direction of Examiner J. L. Wingfield of Mitchell, has been taken over by the other banks of the place, the banks guaranteeing payment of depositors. The bank failed by taking over a hardware business which was a drag. It had $5,000 deposits, owed $4,000 and had $310 in cash.

Prosperity for Minneapolis

Hugo Schmidt, assistant manager Deutsche Bank, Berlin, has been studying the Northwestern trade territory, in which the bank is interested. He was accompanied by his secretary, Count Edward Melatto. Talking with bank presidents he said: "Minneapolis is beautiful, and this is a beautiful spot (the Mini-

Classes in Law of Negotiable Instruments

The law of negotiable instruments is to be studied this season at the interior educational institution of the Northwestern National. The classes were formed about three years ago to add to the efficiency of the clerks. Heads of fifteen departments gave their services free as tutors. The classes are held afternoons or evenings. Business law has been taught three years and penmanship last year. The educational committee is H. C. Libby, J. C. Thompson and A. V. Gardner. "We believe the new system will enable the men to get away earlier and systematize things," said Joseph Chapman, vice-president.

Northwest Notes

W. H. Dunwoody, chairman of the Northwestern National, has been re-elected director in the Great Northern road.

Reports from Fargo are to the effect that more than $225,000 is pouring into the North Dakota city banks in grain drafts. One bank received $125,000 in one day and the others made up the quota. In spite of the scarcity of labor few threshing machines are reported idle.

EASY TO TRY OR BUY A BRANDT

The Brandt Automatic Cashier Company of Chicago has an "easy to try or buy" plan for bankers. The company will send one of their famous automatic change makers on a "Rental Order." The bank can rent a brand-new Brandt by the month or by six months, keep it on rental until they wish to return or buy it. If kept until the rental pays for it, the machine belongs to the bank. Write in for new literature by Elbert Hubbard. Brandt Automatic Cashier Co., 727 So. Dearborn Street, Chicago.

FIRST NATIONAL OF PITTSBURGH INCREASES CAPITAL

At a special meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh, the increase in the capital stock from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 was authorized. Stockholders will be permitted to subscribe for the new stock at $175 a share. The sale of the stock will net the bank $1,750,000 cash. Of this amount $70,000 will be added to surplus account.

BOSTON BANK MERGER

It is proposed to consolidate the Merchants and State National banks of Boston to form a bank of some $25,000,000 deposits, making it the fourth largest national bank in the city. It is understood that the State National is to be liquidated, and following liquidation stockholders will be given an opportunity to take stock in the Merchants on the basis of one share of Merchants, at $300 a share, for every share of State.

larger centers using this gas are Kansas City, Joplin, Mo., St. Joseph, Mo., Topeka, Kan., Wichita, Kan., and Hutchinson. The fight on the company has culminated in a receivership and the twelve-million-dollar corporation is now in the hands of the federal court. The receivers are Conway F. Holmes, vice-president of the Pioneer Trust Company of Kansas City; George Sharritt, of Topeka; and Eugene Mackey, of Pittsburgh, Pa., president of the Kansas Natural Gas Company. The receivers have qualified and are now making an investigation to establish the exact status of the natural gas supply. Upon this investigation depends the company's franchises in practically all of the distributing centers. It is rumored that the object of the federal receivership was to forestall a number of independent suits.

Central West Notes

E. F. Swinney, president of the First National of Kansas City, has returned from New York where he confesses he loitered several days to see the New York end of the world's series.

E. M. Spicer, under five-year sentence for defalcation of the funds of the Bank of Shelton, Neb., has been taken to the federal prison at Leavenworth.

The report of the treasurer of the Oklahoma state banking board shows there is in cash to the guaranty fund's credit $110,829, of which $85,175 was collected through the last assessment.

It is now believed to be certain that the next meeting of the Kansas Bankers Association will be held in Hutchinson and the Hutchinson bankers now are making plans for the event.

The Chappel State Bank of Chappel, Neb., has been organized with a capital stock of $15,000. The officers are: Henry G. Wiegand, president; Henry C. Peterson, vice-president, and William E. Roudebush, cashier.

Governor Hadley of Missouri has issued a pardon to restore citizenship to Thomas M. Bently, who was convicted of forgery while cashier of the Peoples Bank of Salisbury, Mo., and under sentence to two years in the penitentiary, being paroled by the court.

Jackson, cashier of the Commercial National of Chicago; Frank Newhall, assistant cashier of the First National, Chicago; J. Fletcher Farrell, vice-president of the Fort Dearborn National; C. L. Boyle, assistant cashier of the Mechanics-American National, St. Louis; Franklin L. Johnson, assistant cashier of the Mercantile National, St. Louis, and W. B. Taylor, of the Boatmens National, St. Louis, were among the visitors who attended the group meeting in Kansas City last Tuesday.

A third bank is being organized in Jacksonville, Texas, under the name of the Farmers State Bank and Trust Company, with a paid-up capital of $50,000.

C. G. Cochran, president of the First National Bank of Plainville, Kan., with Mrs. Cochran, has been visiting their son, F. C. Cochran, vice-president of the Fidelity Trust Company of Kansas City.

J. M. T. Johnston, president of the National Reserve Bank of Kansas City, spoke before the meeting of Group 2 at Brookfield, Mo., October 18th, on "A Forecast of the Financial Situation."

Following is the bonded indebtedness in Nebraska to October 1, 1912 (except the cities of Omaha, South Omaha and Lincoln). There is no state indebtedness:

County bonds	$3,601,500.00
Precinct bonds	327,500.00
City and village bonds	6,002,212.62
School district bonds	6,010,653.80
Drainage district bonds	382,964.33

Total$16,234,830.75

The following out-of-town bankers visited the Kansas City financial district last week: J. P. Cook, president of the Oklahoma State Bank, Enid, Okla.; E. E. Enloe, president of the Morehead State Bank, Morehead, Kan.; George Guernsey, vice-president of the Commercial National Bank, Independence, Kan.; T. E. Brown, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank and Trust Company, and W. H. Mosher, director in the same bank at De Queen, Ark.; Thad. D. Carver, president of the Peoples Bank of Pratt, Kan.

TEXAS CORN CROP LARGER

It is estimated that this year's corn production in Texas is approximately 135,000,000 bushels, which is an increase of about 10,000,000 bushels over the yield of 1911. The corn acreage in Texas this year was about 11,250,000 acres, which is an increase of about 10 per cent. The quality of the corn is said to be better than that of any previous season for several years.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Oct. 14th.—Added to the already bright business outlook in Spokane comes announcement that excavation for the $2,000,000 Davenport hotel begins October 14th, and will be prosecuted vigorously during the winter, giving employment to a small army of workmen. The successful financing of this big project by Spokane men, together with news that actual work begins immediately, affords a decidedly bright supplementary tone to the situation brought about by splendid cereal and fruit crops in the Spokane country. The financing of this big project, having for its object the building of a hotel that will rank with the finest in America, is considered a recognition of the stability of Spokane business conditions. Specifications for the hotel are now being assembled, the steel in New York, the mechanical and engineering in Portland, and other specifications in Spokane.

Bids Soon to Be In

All the large railroad contractors in Spokane, many of the prominent St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Chicago contractors and several from coast cities, have been notified by Chief Engineer W. L. Darling of the Northern Pacific railroad that bids will soon be called for on the $3,000,000 Northern Pacific grade separation job in Spokane. A dozen Spokane firms will bid on this big contract, which, it is estimated by Alex M. Lupfer, engineer in charge of the work, will take about two years to complete. Estimates are now being prepared by Porter Brothers, P. Welch, Twohy Brothers, Bates & Rogers, Jones & Onserud, Smith & Company, and M. C. Murphy of Spokane and by Guthrie & McDougal of St. Paul. The Northern Pacific grade separation will begin as soon as the contract is let. One firm will be awarded the general contract.

Rain Beneficial to Wheat

The last month's rains mean many dollars in added returns to farmers of the Palouse and Big Bend countries, tributary to Spokane. Fall wheat is greatly improved thereby and seeding conditions for grain yet to be sown are bettered materially. Thomas H. Brewer, president of the Fidelity National, reports that farmers are sowing a record amount of fall wheat.

Will Erect Large Saw Mill

W. H. Graham of Berkeley, Cal., is in Spokane endeavoring to make financial arrangements for the erection of a large sawmill, a shingle mill and a pulp mill in Lincoln county, Montana, where he has under contract from the government 75,000 acres of timber land. Mr. Graham says there are about 700,000,000 feet of merchantable timber on the land, including spruce, white pine and cedar.

Prosperity General

James C. Cunningham, vice-president and general manager of the Union Trust and Savings Bank, on his return from an extended eastern trip, said: "Freight cars are all in use, wheels are turning and prosperity is general throughout the country. Everywhere people are talking about the good crops. The demand for bonds and securities is not as strong as it has been, owing to a stiffer demand for money."

Railroad Progressing Rapidly

Tracklaying on the new line of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Company, a Harriman line, is proceeding at the rate of a mile and a half a day north and south of the Palouse river, and will reach Spokane about December 1, announced President J. D. Farrell during a Spokane visit. The company will build a big bridge in Spokane across the Spokane river at Monroe Street, plans for which are being drawn. Mr. Farrell reported a general business revival in the Spokane country.

Banking Notes

The state of Washington has $9,431,141 of its six chief permanent funds invested in interest-bearing securities and has $488,879 additional permanent funds on hand for investment, but bids now out or accepted probably will call for all of this latter amount. In the last quarter the state board of finance bought $344,550 in bonds, and in the year bought $906,050. Bonds were paid off in the quarter aggregating $78,900, and in the year to the amount of $277,680. As compared with a year ago, the permanent funds hold in bonds and cash an increase of $790,882. The board of finance has invested $239,000 of state accident fund reserves in interest-bearing securities.

W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National of Spokane, will represent the American Bankers Association at the International Dry Farming Congress, in Lethbridge, Alberta, next week, delivering an address on the subject, "Why the Banker Favors Better Farming Methods." Mr. Vincent is a member of the executive council of the Bankers Association.

Charles Isecke, president of the Bank of Asotin, Wash., and a pioneer banker of southeastern Washington, died October 6th. He had lived in Asotin county since 1877.

At the end of the first year's business of the Spokane postal savings bank, the names of 453 depositors appeared on the books with a total of $50,318 to their credit. The Spokane bank was established October 7, 1911, in the Federal Building. On August 1, 1912, five subsidiary postal savings banks were opened in Spokane at the five sub-stations of the Spokane postoffice.

BANK DEPOSITS GROW IN TEXAS

Within the period of a year the national banks of Texas, outside of those in the six reserve cities, have increased their individual deposits $16,995,980; their loans and discounts have increased $11,297,147; their surplus funds $605,588, and the amount of lawful money in the banks was $366,855 more on September 4, 1912, than on September 1, 1911. This showing is made with an increase of but two national banks.

ANSWERING ROOSEVELT AND THE HEAD WAITER

Recently Colonel Roosevelt addressed a number of serious (?) questions to Governor Wilson through Ex-senator Beveridge at Cincinnati. The colonel says he got the facts about the New Jersey laws and the constitution from a head waiter who used to live in the state. Think that over. The Beveridge-Roosevelt-head waiter questions concerned Governor Wilson's enforcement of the corporation laws of New Jersey, and asked why the Standard Oil Company and the American Tobacco Company had not been prosecuted in the state in which they were organized.

Governor Wilson's telegram was as follows:

"I authorize you to say that the Republican majority in the legislature made revision of corporation laws impossible and no New Jersey official could prosecute or propose dissolution for breach of the federal statutes."

Governor Wilson's telegram puts the matter squarely up to the Republican legislature of New Jersey. You see the head waiter misled the colonel.

THE SECRET OF LONESOME COVE

Samuel Hopkins Adams is out in a new mystery story which will take a banker's mind off the red column and keep it off. The new book is from the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, which stands for its high character. The title is "The Secret of Lonesome Cove," and it remains a skillfully guarded one to the last word almost. There is a murder and it is shrouded in mystery at Lonesome Cove, on the New England coast. It would spoil the prospective reader's interest to detail the plot, which is well constructed. Suffice to say that Sedgwick, the artist, is suspected and cleared, that he finds his lady love and that the astrologer's tale is one of the most exciting in current fiction. Over plot and counterplot stands dominant the figure of the professor. Schlager, Elder Dennett, Dr. Breed, Lawyer Bain, Gansett Joe, the half-negro, half-Indian; Sedgwick, the artist; the fair Marjorie, whom he marries; Alexander Blair, the millionaire, are all well drawn characters. The professor's idea of a room hung with white sheets to think in, is unique. He smokes a long, thin clay pipe, but after he shaves his whiskers and starts in on the case in earnest, he attires himself in unimpeachable elegance. "The white serge suit was freshly pressed. His lavender silk hose, descending without a wrinkle under his buckskin shoes, accorded with a silk tie and lavender striped shirt. A soft white hat covered his eyes against the sun glare. To put a point against to this foppishness, a narrow silk ribbon, also pure white, depended from his lapel buttonhole, suggested an eyeglass in his pocket." Of course this monocle is a powerful magnifying glass to aid the professor in his Sherlock Holmes work, in which he is a past master, solving the great mystery and bringing the story to a happy conclusion.

Los Angeles

The Citizens Trust and Savings Bank has opened for business in its remodeled quarters on Broadway, and from 8 A. M. until 10 P. M. of every week day savings deposits will be received and checking accounts conducted. The safety deposit vaults will be open also every hour of the bank's business day. Only one other Los Angeles banking institution, the All Night and Day Bank, is doing business outside of the usual banking hours. R. M. Andrews, assistant to Orra E. Monnette, announces that they are planning to take care of a new field of financial development in upper Broadway among merchants and fraternal organizations, a large part of whose business is conducted in the evening hours.

C. D. Graham and F. E. Graham have sold their stock in the First National of Claremont and have retired from the board of directors. A. M. Chaffey of Los Angeles has purchased these holdings and has been elected president to succeed C. D. Graham. Mr. Chaffey is prominent in financial circles in Southern California and brings to the bank a valuable experience and a wide influence.

A charter has been issued by the treasury department to the San Fernando National Bank, San Fernando, Cal.; capital, $25,000.

OREGON BANKS SHOW GROWTH

Salem, Ore.—Will Wright, superintendent of banks, has compiled a comparative statement showing the condition of all banks as of September 4, 1912, and September 1, 1911. State, savings, private and foreign banks show a growth of $4,707,977 in total resources, during the year, the figures being $73,043,715, as against $68,335,738. National banks have total resources of $85,141,739, as against $79,895,510, a gain of $5,246,229.

A WHIRLWIND WESTERN STORY

Caroline Lockhart, who wrote "Me-Smith," is out in a real western story—"The Lady Doc"—which is good fiction and funny as can be. It is the story of a western town in the making. Emma Harpe, the title character, is one of those anomalous creatures wholly devoid of any womanly attribute and without regard for the ethics of her profession except in so far as she counts upon other physicians to use them to protect her malpractice against its deserved exposure and punishment.

Indeed, she shamelessly acknowledges that she is practicing solely for what there is in it for herself; human suffering, life, and death matter not at all, nor do they touch her heart. By a coincidence, not strange considering the youth of the West at the supposed time of the story, the unsavory reputation accompanying her departure from one town did not follow her to Crowheart. There she immediately set to work to identify herself so intimately with the private affairs of some of the residents as to have an effective club always ready for use against them should they ever become recalcitrant.

From this point the reader's interest is divided between "The Lady Doc," with her devilish machinations, and the development, social and commercial, of the town of Crowheart. A compelling story results, one so absorbing that hours slip by unnoticed until the end is reached. The title character has the strange fascination of the hideous and gruesome, and to her Essie Tisdale, her victim, gentle, merry-hearted and possessed of a mind far above her surroundings, offers a strong contrast. Crabbed must be the heart to which this pretty girl does not appeal. There is much more to the novel, very much more, and the business dealings and struggles, and the unbecoming social bickerings are narrated with the same unrelenting, convincing truth that makes the characterizations so compelling.

TO EDUCATE THE FARMERS

Columbia, Oct. 14th.—Farmers' institutes will be held throughout Missouri this fall and winter by the state board of agriculture until March 15th. In the past, institutes have been held at any towns that suited the convenience of the speakers, but this year a new plan will be tried. The state has been divided into six districts, and each district will be given four weeks' time. This will be divided into two periods of two weeks each, so as to suit the convenience of the people of each district. It is expected that the institutes this year will furnish instruction on agricultural subjects to 100,000 farmers.

Des Moines, Oct. 16th.—Iowa bankers are exultant over the showing made in the last report for the state and savings banks and trust companies as compiled by the state insurance department. This report shows an increase in deposits of $9,107,146 for the period ending September 11th, as compared with the preceding call of June 29th. The increase for the year, as compared with August 30, 1911, is $35,108,076.95. The total as shown by this last report is $287,866,651.15. Surely that is a showing of which Iowa bankers may well feel proud. The capital stock shows an increase over the preceding call, of $333,500. The statement shows forty-one new banks in Iowa during the year, and fifteen new ones since the report of June 29th. This makes 1,031 of them now in the state.

An interesting comparison has been made of the latest statement and one issued June 30, 1898, by State Auditor McCarthy. In 1891 there were 381 state and savings banks; now there are 1,031 with two new ones added last week. The deposits were then $59,336,000, as compared to over $287,000,000 now. The capital was then $16,447,000; now it is $36,315,800. The banks then owned real estate of $3,841,000; now they own $10,118,000. In that report fourteen years ago, the auditor boasted of an increase in deposits over the preceding year, of $13,893,000. In those days there were 172 savings banks; now there are 732. There were 209 state banks, now there are 284. There are now 15 trust companies. The gain in deposits of over $35,000,000, as shown by the latest report, is greater than the total deposits were twenty years ago. This is truly evidence that Iowa is making money. For while Iowa has the unenviable distinction of being the only state in the union which lost in population between the years 1900 and 1910, her bank deposits have increased four times over.

Tax Commission's Report

The Iowa temporary tax commission has made its long expected report, and, as was anticipated, some interesting references are made to the present bank laws of the state. To give the report in detail is of course impossible, but among the provisions of most interest to bankers may be mentioned the following: Permanent state tax commission; separation of local and state taxes, the former to be used in counties and the latter to come from railroad and corporation assessments and general state revenue; change of present system of taxation on one-fourth valuation to full valuation; change of taxation of bank stocks from 80 per cent valuation to full valuation; change of assessment of bank surplus and undivided profits, putting them under the moneys and credits law.

The commission holds on the recommendations particularly relating to banks that the present law has a tendency to reduce bank surpluses and undivided profits, and removes a protection from the public which the latter should enjoy. The report is voluminous, but contains many interesting features. This report will come up before the legislature this winter and its provisions will then be thoroughly threshed out. Governor Carroll is expected to make some recommendations as to the various clauses in his annual message.

Counterfeit $10 Bill

Des Moines bankers have issued a warning against a spurious ten dollar bill which appeared in Des Moines last week. It is a ten dollar gold certificate, plate number C86, series 1907, signed by Vernon, registrar of the treasury and Lee McClung, treasurer of the United States. The Iowa National of Des Moines was the first institution to discover the bill and made haste to acquaint the people of Des Moines of the presence of the counterfeit.

Industrial Investment Company Huge Success

The Greater Davenport Committee is disposing of additional stock in the Davenport Industrial Investment Co. to the amount of $75,000. This concern was organized some months ago largely as an experiment, and for the purpose of inducing factories to locate in Davenport. It was voted to capitalize at $300,000. Not all of this was sold, but the amount disposed of totaled $133,700, of which $13,370 was in cash and $120,330 in credit. The movement has been an entire success. And now more of the stock is being sold and the members of the Greater Davenport Committee are enthusiastic. It is stated that many other cities are adopting the method and, as a result, Davenport is getting the factories, and in addition much first-class advertising.

C. L. Van Nostrand Issues Statement

President C. L. Van Nostrand of the Iowa League of Commercial Clubs has issued another statement relative to the program for the state convention at Sioux City, and the interest bankers should take in the meetings. Whether this latest statement is an explanation or an apology, one cannot tell, but it is interesting and this is what he says:

"The impression has gone forth that our committee has in mind banking reforms and regulation of banks, currency measures, etc.,

CHICAGO NATIONAL BANKS SHOW GAIN IN DEPOSITS

According to figures prepared by Comptroller of the Currency Murray, Chicago national banks, at the call of September 4th, showed a gain in deposits of $1,078,613.31 as compared with the call of June 4th. There was a loss in loans of $12,717,070.27 and in cash of $8,035,555.34.

which is erroneous. The actual business of the committee is to promote surety in commercial paper and to discuss credits. In this matter our bankers can be of great help to us. Money occupies the relative position of a measuring device in a dry goods store. They do business with credits, or to be more explicit, over 95 per cent of the business done in the United States is done with credits—drafts, checks, bills of exchange, notes of hand, secured and unsecured, and about every form of credit known in the commercial world. The other 5 per cent is done with money. Now it is the intention of the Iowa business man to protect Iowa credits above any other credits on the market. There are no men better qualified to assist in this than our bankers, hence we look to the bankers for assistance rather than criticism, and those of them who understand our desire are coming forward with all the aid in their power and are endeavoring to place Iowa credits in so firm a position that money panics will not affect this state."

Fire in Mail Box

A peculiar fire occurred in the mail box at the bottom of the mail chute in the Black Hawk National building at Waterloo. In the box were numerous checks, one for $9,000, and one ten dollar bill, real money, being consumed. It appears that someone dropped a lighted match down the mail chute. The strong draft fanned the flame and the smoke was detected in the eighth story. The fire was extinguished by use of the fire protection devices maintained by the building.

Interviews with Bankers

Two questions pertaining to banking have been utilized in filling space in the Iowa newspapers recently. One has been whether the Iowa banks will need aid from the government in handling the crops. The other is whether Iowa banks will establish laundries in connection with the institutions, for the purpose of cleaning up the bills. And it might also be said that interviews with bankers upon whether or not they believe smaller sized bills will be of advantage, have been quite prominent in the newspapers of the state. When news grows dull, the bankers are always to be depended upon to furnish copy and it might be observed in passing that this sort of copy is decidedly interesting and popular.

Bankers Club Holds Election

The Des Moines Bankers Club held its annual election at the first of its monthly sessions last week. Amos O. Hauge of the Iowa Trust and Savings was elected president. George A. Pearsall of the Citizens National was elected vice-president. Fred Risser of the Central State was elected secretary and treasurer. The executive committee members are B. A. Lockwood of the Citizens National and D. J. Van Liew of the Capital City State. Plans for the coming season include speakers from outside of the state on questions of especial interest to the members of the club. The club will follow its policy of meeting once a month.

Iowa Banking Notes

Robbers continue to prowl around northwestern Iowa. One of the successful Iowa robberies was at Gilletts Grove, where $1,041 was secured. The gang is thought to be making headquarters at Minneapolis, Sioux City or Sioux Falls.

Stephen Blaine was sentenced to fifteen years for forgery, by Judge Clarke sitting in court at Mason City.

Invitations have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wellsager for an observance of their golden wedding anniversary at the Des Moines Golf and Country Club October 26th. Mr. Wellsager is one of the oldest bankers in Des Moines and has been prominently identified with local finances for many years.

The Farmers Saving at Vining is a new institution which has filed articles with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $12,000. The incorporators include Veniel Hurt, Paul Konba, John Kotorsky, E. M. Kupka, George Lamb, John Haddock, James Duhachek and F. Gundak.

Fred E. Stewart, secretary of the Farmers Loan and Trust of Waterloo, was married last week to Miss Edna P. Conner of that same city. The ceremony was performed at the home of relatives in Spokane.

The Farmers Savings at Robinson has filed articles with the secretary of state and will commence business as soon as the charter is issued.

Mrs. M. E. Griswold, vice-president of the Farmers Savings at Manson, and her sister, Mrs. Anna Funk, have returned from a three months' trip in Europe.

C. L. Herring, president of the Herring Motor Car Co. of Des Moines, has been elected director of the Des Moines National to succeed W. S. Regur, who formerly resided in Des Moines. Mr. Herring is a prominent stockholder in the bank and one of the most successful automobile men in the Middle West.

Albert Tymerson, one of the hustling young bankers of the state, has been chosen president of the Truesdale Savings at Truesdale.

Sioux City

By JOHN J. BIDDISON.

Money is easy, and both clearings and deposits are steadily mounting. The winter season is approaching with Sioux City territory in tiptop condition to meet it. While politics is the topic of conversation, it has not been allowed to interfere with the business of those who have any business worth attending to, and the common run of people hereabouts rather expect the sun to stick to its course, even if the worst should come, and Taft, T. R., or Wilson should be elected. The worst, it being understood, being whichever of the candidates mentioned happens to be most in disfavor. In general, it might be said of Sioux City bankers that they are not alarmed at the prospect of defeat for the Republican party. In fact, some of the best known are outspoken as Democrats or Bull Moosers. G. R. Whitmer, president of the National Bank of Commerce, is chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee. But for the fact that some of them do not think their connection with it helps the cause, several of this city might be given places on the roll of the Progressive party.

But as to the serious affairs of the banking business, the outlook is most encouraging. The farmers reaped bountiful harvests of small grain and are not yet done threshing. They have sold enough, however, that they have money in their pockets and more in the vaults, and trade therefore is good. Corn husking has hardly started, but a tiptop yield is assured, and some new deposit records should be shown by the Sioux City banks before next summer. This has been a wonderful summer just closing for the building trade, and activity will continue as long as weather permits. Winter then will probably catch some work unfinished. The healthy growth of the city seems to warrant the optimism of those who have built ahead of their businesses.

F. W. Haynes on Trial

By an unexpected turn of the wheel of fortune, F. W. Haynes, former cashier of the Rudd Bank, Rudd, Ia., is now defending himself at law on a charge of misappropriation of funds to the amount of $13,000. Two directors of the bank said uncomplimentary things about him which resulted in the filing of suits against them alleging slander. The court was persuaded to have an expert examination of the bank books to ascertain the truth or falsity of the statements that had been made derogatory to the character of Haynes. The report made by the expert resulted in the withdrawal of Haynes' suit and the filing of an action against him. He has entered a plea of not guilty.

Rob Iowa Bank

Robbers broke into the State Bank of Gillett Grove, Ia., last week, blew the safe and escaped with $1,040 in cash. A posse of citizens traced the band as far as Calumet, to which point they had gone by motor car, but there the trail was lost.

South Dakota Bank Robbed

A running fight with bandits that resulted in their escape followed a raid on the Owanka State Bank at Owanka, S. D., 35 miles east of Rapid City, last week. Five explosions were necessary to open the safe, from which $1,400 was taken, and the whole town was aroused. Sentinels held the citizens at bay until the loot was taken out. Cashier F. B. Stiles emptied the contents of a rifle at four men as they left the bank, leaped on their horses and escaped in the darkness, but his shots were apparently ineffective. Fifty men took up the trail and caught up with the bandits in the Black Hills but could not take them.

KNAUTH NACHOD & KÜHNE

K. N. & K. in their market letter say: "There is reason to expect a much better bond market with the turn of the year. A large amount of capital is awaiting investment in the United States, and with the passing of the presidential election and the conclusion of the year-end settlements it is fair to assume that investors will reinvest a considerable portion of the funds which they have accumulated this year and last. During the next calendar year some $200,000,000 of short term notes will mature, and the chances are that most of these will be provided for through the sale of bonds. Some of the largest maturities have been already arranged for, so that no new financing will be required."

The capital stock of the Vallejo (Cal.) Commercial Bank has been increased from $100,000 to $150,000, this action having been decided upon at a special meeting of the stockholders September 21st.

enterprises, but we do insist that the time has come when we must distinguish between the promoter who capitalizes the idea of a business for stock-jobbing purposes only, and the promoter who capitalizes the substance of a business with the substantial hope and reasonable expectation of ultimately making it of real value to the holders of the stock, and making it a real factor in the business community.

It is estimated by Postmaster-General Hitchcock that $150,000,000 a year is taken from this investing public by get-rich-quick swindlers. Ninety per cent of this, I dare say, is obtained by the sale of certificates of stock. If 150,000,000 a year is levied as a tax on the investor by the get-rich-quick mail order houses, what can you imagine is the toll exacted in the different states by personal solicitation.

This has grown to be a real problem in this country, gentlemen. In this problem you occupy a most important position. Do you realize that our public carriers, the railroads, are now in need of $1,000,000,000 to build up their properties to a standard sufficient to meet the demands of the shipping public? And do you realize that it is now almost impossible to float an issue of bonds on the best railroad properties in the world? Why is this? The fundamental reason, I believe, is to be found in the minds of the general investing public—a sort of mania to get a greater income on idle capital, that a higher standing of living may be maintained, and as a counterpart to this mania in the minds of the public is the fact that we tolerate and permit to thrive these financial parasites referred to heretofore. These high-toned grafters, offering bastard securities, have seized the spirit of the times and feed upon it like sea gulls on a disabled fish.

It is not an uncommon thing, when we offer seasoned securities in the market, to have a widow tell us, "I must have a bigger income on my money." And it is not an uncommon thing to pick up a paper a few months later and read the name of that same widow as one of the victims of some get-rich-quick swindler. We admit the general public ought to aspire to better living, but it must come in an orderly fashion, and cannot come by patronizing the investment houses and agents who organize corporations and distribute certificates of stock for revenue only. What are we going to do about it? You say, Educate the public not to buy wildcat securities. Not in a thousand years. So long as human nature remains as it is, men and women will innocently give their all for the possibility of great gain if the opportunity presents itself. You may say to me, If the investor is foolish enough to buy such rubbish, let him alone; it is none of our business. To you who think after that fashion, let me say this: If you do not care for the weak-minded individual who suffers from such schemes, remember, you need that money for legitimate enterprises in your community, and it is your duty as an American citizen to help in every way possible to conserve the people's savings for the general upbuilding of the public.

Let me ask you this question: Did we let the Louisiana Lottery alone? Do we permit open books on horse-races? Do we leave these avenues open to sap the slender savings of the poorly paid clerk, bookkeeper, or servant? No!

I remember twenty years ago, I went to Bloomington to enter Indiana University. I wore a Prince Albert coat, pompadour hair, a Fedora hat, side-burns, and quilted tie. The county fair was on that week. Being lonesome and a little homesick, I went out. I guess someone saw me coming. I had $22 in my pocket, the most money I had ever had at any one time in my life. A new-fledged comrade induced me to try to earn enough with that $22 to pay my expenses in college for one year by investing it in red, white and blue chips belonging to a fellow they called "Hyronemous." The fairground was three miles from town. I walked in that night. Have we left those open gambling temptations free to rob such idiots as I was at that time? No, we have driven that kind of a parasite out of business by legislation. Now, why not begin on the parasite a little higher up? My mind is absolutely fixed on the proposition that we must protect the weak-minded vacillating investing public from the siren songs of these smooth-tongued, Get-Rich-Quick Wallingfords—and we must do it by legislation.

Up to this time the responsibility of this address has not weighed heavily on my shoulders, but I am now beginning to groan under the load. A young man got married. He had always admired an old-fashioned clock which belonged to his uncle. The uncle gave it to him as a wedding gift. The young man would not let the transfer company haul it. He went over to his uncle's one morning just at break of day and started to carry the clock to his cozy little flat. The clock was heavy and it proved to be quite a burden. It was necessary for him to rest quite often. While he was setting the clock down at one of these resting spells, a fellow who had been out all night fighting with "John Barleycorn" came up. He said: "Excuse me, mister, for putting in (hic), but don't you (hic) think it would be more convenient (hic) to carry a watch?"

I firmly believe it would have been much more convenient for me had I engaged to discuss a subject of less weight. It is always easy for a speaker to tell an audience something it already knows. It is one of the arts of the orator to make his expressions reflectors of the truths which abide in the minds of his audience. It is indeed easy to point out defects in our industrial and economic life as I have attempted up to this time. The world is full of good preachers, men who eloquently tell us wherein we have sinned. The agitator, the muck-raker, the preacher, are all useful elements in society, but what we need most of all is now and then a good teacher, the man who can direct us in the proper channels so we can avoid the unfortunate conditions pointed out by the preacher, the agitator and the muck-raker.

What we are now interested in is a program of legislation which will be applied to the state of Indiana. A program of legislation which, while not interfering with legitimate exchange of securities, and not retarding the progress of laudable business enterprises, will drive out from our midst the get-rich-quick promoters who organize companies and sell stock for revenue only.

By the courtesy of your state organization you have received a copy of the "Blue Sky Law" of the state of Kansas, which was passed by that state for the purpose of correcting such evils as I have pointed out to you here in a general way. The law has been in force since March 10, 1911, and, we are told, has been reasonably successful. It would indeed be a relief to me, and no doubt would be to you, if I could dismiss this subject right here. If I could say, The Blue Sky law of Kansas is just what we need in Indiana. Let us re-write it in our statute books and let the executioners do their duty. Owing to the complexity of our form of government each state is, in a sense, a government of its own. Its citizenship and industrial life is peculiar to its own geographical boundaries. It may naturally happen, therefore, what is a good law for the state of Kansas is not a good law for the state of Indiana.

The Kansas Blue Sky law requires every investment company, whether organized under the laws of the state of Kansas or any other state, to file in the office of the state bank commissioner a statement showing in full detail the plan upon which it proposes to transact business. A copy of all contracts, bonds, or other investments, which it proposes to make with or sell to its contributors, also a statement showing the name and location of the investment company, and an itemized account of its actual financial condition, and the amount of its property and the amount of its liabilities, and such other information as may be required. These statements are to be made under oath, by a proper official.

After an examination of such documents, the bank commissioner may in his discretion grant a license to the vendor, to offer securities to the public. Each individual agent operating under the direction of the licensed investment company must apply to the state official for a license. It is a highly punishable offense for anyone to offer a security in the state of Kansas who has not complied with the above outlined provisions. The state, by this statute, demands of each investment company that it file with the commissioner of banks a balance sheet each six months, setting out in detail the assets and liabilities of the company. The bank commissioner is the supreme judicial officer. From his decision no appeal can be taken.

Certain institutions and certain securities are exempt from the provisions of the statute, viz.: state and national banks, trust companies, real estate mortgage companies dealing in real estate mortgage notes, building and loan associations, and corporations not organized for profit. The securities exempted are: Bonds of the United States, State of Kansas or some municipality of the state of Kansas, and notes secured by mortgage on property in the state of Kansas. The purpose and intent of this Blue Sky law of Kansas is most admirable and I have no doubt but that in the state of Kansas its operation is most satisfactory, but is it applicable to the state of Indiana?

Kansas is purely an agricultural state. Her corporate industries are not highly developed. Her needs of financing big enterprises at home are reduced to a minimum. The general investing public has not formed the habit of purchasing seasoned securities through big houses of issue, or brokers of local standing. In the enactment of such a sweeping law, therefore, there could be no great shock to legitimate enterprises. In other words—Kansas did not burn the barn to catch a horse-thief on the inside. Conditions are entirely different here in the state of Indiana. We are just as anxious as is the state of Kansas to wipe out the infamous practice of marketing worthless securities, but we must do it in a different way. I do not believe we want to rush pell-mell into this Blue Sky law legislation, following the states of Kansas and Oregon just because it sounds well and we think the people would like to read it in our statute books.

In the state of Indiana there is a legitimate line of investment business carried on by domestic and foreign investment companies of high standing, which under the provisions of the Kansas law would, because of the extreme restriction, be greatly shocked, if not reduced to a minimum. It is not necessary for me to tell you the effect of such a condition. Suppose every investing state in the Union would pass such a law. How would you loan your idle funds? How would the great industries of this country secure the funds to improve their properties to meet the demands of an exacting public?

The legitimate investment houses of this country have always been the means whereby idle, unloanable funds in one community have been taken to other communities where they have served a real industrial purpose. This is a consummation devoutly to be wished. I think there are a number of weak places in the Kansas law, as applicable to the state of Indiana, but the real weakness is the fact that it makes it as hard for a legitimate broker or investment banker to sell a seasoned security as it does for a promoter to sell a security which has no standing at all, except the possibility of its management in the future. In fact, the restrictions are so onerous on the investment broker, that it would either drive him out of business, or because of lack of enforcement would drive the law out of business, and thus no one would profit by it.

If, gentlemen of the convention, I seem to defend an honorable business, with which I

Books on Banking, Finance and Economics

Credit. By J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, of the Department of Political Economy, University of Chicago. Postpaid, 53c.

The nature of credit and its effect on prices have long been a subject of disagreement among economists. Its basis is commonly assumed to be money or bank reserves.

Essentials of Business Law. By FRANCIS M. BURDICK, LL. D., Professor of Law in Columbia University. 12mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

This book shows how the rules of law governing the commonest business transactions have been developed, and it tells what they are to-day. Technical law terms have been discarded as far as possible, and when they are used they are so explained and illustrated as to be easily understood. The principles of law are simplified and expressed in clear, lucid everyday speech.

Foreign Exchange. Tables converting foreign money into United States money, and United States money into foreign money at all commercial rates of exchange used in financial transactions between the United States and foreign countries. All about foreign exchange, including various forms of foreign commercial paper and terms, abbreviations, etc. For banks, bankers, steamship agents, importers, exporters and manufacturers. Cloth, $5.00.

Government Regulation of Railway Rates. By HUGO R. MEYER. A Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Postpaid, $1.60 net.

Investment Bonds. By F. LOWNHAUPT. Postpaid, $1.90. Prospective investors who wish to make advantageous use of their money will do well to take notice of this volume. The author does not theorize, but tells only plain facts of the relation of the bond to its issuing corporation, and of the general investment aspect of the instrument.

Money and Credit. By WILBUR ALDRICH. Postpaid, $1.37. This volume contains much valuable information and much sound discussion on money and credit.

The Banking and Currency Problems in the United States. By VICTOR MORAWETZ. The author takes up the problem of the national monetary commission, appointed by congress, and discusses the means of providing a permanent safeguard against money stringencies and panics. Postpaid, $1.10.

The Principles of Money and Banking. By CHARLES A. CONANT. It is a new and complete exposition of its subject. Two volumes. Postpaid, $4.25.

The Pitfalls of Speculation. By THOMAS GIBSON. Postpaid, $1.20. A book dealing exclusively with marginal speculation, and analyzing in a clear and simple manner the causes of failure in speculation, with a suggestion as to the remedies.

The Use of Loan Credit in Modern Business. By THORSTEIN B. VEBLEN. Postpaid, 28c.

The Investors' Catechism. By M. M. REYNOLDS. Cloth, by mail, $1.10.

"Investors' Catechism." Contains all that it is essential for the beginner to know, and opens the way for a thorough study of the whole subject of investment. The author has for the sake of clearness and simplicity adopted a catechetical style which is somewhat novel in this sort of literature.

state of Indiana. Compel every investment company or agent, domestic or foreign, proposing to offer for sale securities which promise the investor an income yield in excess of say, six per cent, to take out a license from the state banking department or the proper state official, whoever he may be. Require the applicant for such license to file with the proper official, balance sheets and income he proposes offering securities, also a statement covering the properties on which the operation of the business. The public officer should have power to require authentication of all statements by approved public accountants. Such detailed examination to be at the expense of the applicant for license. The state official in granting or refusing a license should take into consideration the reputation of the vendor, his general moral character, his rating as to integrity and uprightness in business affairs, rather than his personal wealth. The state official should have power to demand under oath a statement showing the amount of commissions to be paid by the company to the principal and agents selling the securities, and the amount of fees to be paid for organization purposes. It shall be within the power of the proper state official on his own motion, at any time he feels the interest of the public demands, to revoke a license. He shall be given power to apply to the proper court for a receiver for any enterprise, securities on which were sold by a licensee, when in his judgment the investing public would be benefited. It should be declared a felony for any one to market or attempt to market securities without first taking out a license where by inference or inuendo the investor is led to believe the purchase of the security will bring to him an income either in rate of interest or increase of market value greater than the fixed legal rate of six per cent.

When application is made to sell a security on a property, a statement of whose assets and liabilities, etc., appears in financial manuals of recognized standing, the state officer may take such statements as final if rendered within one year from the time of application. In the organization of new companies, subscribers to stock in amounts of $5,000 or over, should be permitted to file waivers, thus avoiding delays in the organization of many legitimate enterprises, and at the same time protect the small investor who is usually unschooled in business undertakings. I offer this plan, gentlemen, because I am a progressive, a conservative progressive. I do not believe you can reform the whole business of marketing securities in one session of a legislature as Kansas has tried to do and as Oregon is attempting in its present referendum vote on the subject. By making it a highly punishable offense for one to offer a security which promises more than a reasonable income without first taking out a license, the small investor is protected and the fertile field of the wildcat promoter is destroyed.

By this method I believe we will take one good long stride toward ridding our state of the infamous practice of financial parasites who sell securities for revenue only.

CHICAGO AUTHOR'S NEW BOOK

Clara Louise Burnham, the well-known Chicago writer, has given her admirers new cause for delight in "The Inner Flame." It is the story of a young mining engineer of strong artistic tendencies—his struggles and final success. Part of the scene is laid in New York, and Casco Bay figures delightfully, as in other of Mrs. Burnham's stories. This is her twenty-first novel, and many will say it is her best. This new tale is the sort of book which mothers and aunts are looking for for their young relatives who are casting longing eyes toward the "best sellers," many of which are doubtfully strong meat for them, and it is as well a book which must charm older readers who care for honest hopes, cherished ambitions, and the unspoiled freshness of youth. It is the pleasant story of a boy with artistic ability, chained to his father's profession, that of mining engineer in the West, because of lack of money to study art. An unknown aunt, an unsuccessful artist, leaves him at her death a small competence and he hastens to New York to begin his dreams. His experiences there, his manly way of standing by the people who have helped him, his bravely merry way of meeting the situations semi-poverty forces upon him—on every page he is the most attractive and jolly young man met for many a day.

There are some other nice young people, two attractive girls, and a young fop all thrown together in intimate social fashion, and the regeneration of the latter and the pairing off of the four, furnish situations delightfully fresh and interesting. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

MARY ROBERTS RHINEHART'S NEW BOOK

If you have been to a sanitarium or rest cure you will all the more promptly appreciate "Where There's a Will There's a Way," by Miss Rhinehart, the writer of much acceptable fiction. It isn't one of the heavies, and makes no attempt to settle the social problem. "Where There's a Will" is a story of the light-some sort, the kind one can read or let alone without material gain or loss, either way. It has a certain practical value, however, in that it shows up the peculiar methods of some modern sanitariums, the various "treatments" prescribed, the manner of handling patients, the "doping" of the waters, etc., etc. Also the humors, whims and eccentricities of the patients are described, and their pitiful gullibility in many instances. Altogether it is a good account of such an institution, managed as some of them are.

Minnie, the red-headed spring house girl, whose business is to look after the welfare of patients, tells the story in her own way, and a sprightly way it is. She is the heroine of the love affair, though she is too modest to admit it. There is no tragedy. It is all comedy, not uproarious, but entertaining. The book is published by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis.

Let me propose this tentative plan of procedure for legislation on this subject in the stood a most vituperative campaign, nothing else matters.

AT last, at last! The U. S. government has decided to accept certified checks for customs dues. This will be good news in Peoria, which has internal revenue receipts larger than those of any other whole state. The old plan compelled the Peoria banks to keep wads of cash on hand.

THE U. S. is the slowest coach in the van in matters financial. Now, the doors of the subtreasuries should be opened, and the millions of idle money which they contain put to some good use in the good banks of the country. Why not?

NOW Editor Hooke is mixed up on Illinois affairs. His excellent paper says that "Hezekiah G. Henry will continue to lead the fight for state supervision." Hez. is chairman of the private bankers' committee of the Illinois association.

ANOTHER one. The "Age" has John D. Phillips down as "president of the Chicago-Illinois Private Bankers Association." Uncle Phillips, besides running a Sunday school and owning a few race horses (all winners), is the real president of the Illinois Bankers Association. Mr. Phillips, according to the "Age," is "opposed" to supervision, while Henry is "one of its most ardent advocates," etc.

WE do this just to keep peace in the family down where they all keep crape on the picture of the "round robin," which was only crippled at Briarcliff, but which was deeply interred at Detroit.

"WE are sorry to report" that Philip Hoffman, private banker in St. Louis, "kept no books for the last four years," and consequently was unable (in court) to explain what became of his $60,000 in deposits.

ALSO that Tripp Bros., private bankers of Indianapolis and North Vernon (in court), report $140,000 "invested" in Mexico. The Union Trust, Chicago, has been enjoined from disposing of any of Tripp Bros.' securities which it may hold.

ABILL is being prepared and will be introduced into the next session of the state legislature of Ohio to compel savings institutions doing business in the state to issue a bond to the state for an amount equal to their total deposits, thereby insuring depositors against loss.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made informally by Hayes & Co., who have for several years operated the private banking institution known as the Clinton Bank at Clinton, N. Y., that on and after January 1, 1913, the business will be converted into a national bank.

THE administrative committee—Phillips, Montgomery and Aisthorpe—of the Illinois association held its first formal meeting in Chicago headquarters on Monday.

THEY didn't accept, but neither did they allow the withdrawal of Crampton's brain-storm resignation. Mr. Phillips felt in a measure bound by his letter to Crampton where he qualified his prompt acceptance by the phrase "if you are still of the same mind." Then he got a pre-dated withdrawal.

THE committee will refer the resignation to the mid-year meeting of the council, "unless something happens" in the meantime, such as neglect of, or disobedience of orders, in which case the committee will promptly accept and end the fiasco.

NONE of "the innovations" were passed upon by the committee. All were turned down. "Get busy," was the chief advice offered. The administrative committee is in no mind to temporize nor to condone "breaks." The general good of the whole membership is the watchword. No salary promises were made. The ice is very, very thin.

ACOUPLE of counterfeiters sold their outfit the other day, saying that nowadays a dollar buys so little there's nothing in the business. They have bought a farm.

COMPTROLLER MURRAY thought so well of a paper read by Herbert E. Johnson, examiner for Michigan, at the Chicago district meeting, that he has had it sent out in pamphlet form. It treats of "The Law and Bank Examinations." Copies can be had by addressing the comptroller's office.

"WILL I get back, when I need it, the money I am depositing in this bank?" says Mr. Johnson, is asked by every man, woman and child, by right, and the only answer is persistent, competent examination and supervision.

MR. JOHNSON says that Murray should hang a sign up over the door of the comptroller's office saying, "The examiner who loses a bank through neglect and inefficiency shall enter here no more."

HE believes the chiefest weakness of the present law is the fee system. The country examiner does not receive proper compensation.

NATURALLY, any examination which does not disclose the actual condition of a bank and the value of its "paper" is a failure. Lack of time and small pay are the known shortcomings of the system.

IN Michigan district there are 96 national banks, and the income of the examiner's office from fees, for twice-a-year examinations, is $4,560. The state banks for the same service would pay $11,500, and the rate is only one-hundredth of one per cent on footings when above the minimum fee.

BBETTER pay would get better men into the government service, and better pay and better men would give more certain results—more efficient examinations.

THEY say that James J. Hill, not being satisfied with having put the new depot in St. Paul, and with his proposed big banking combine is further plotting to put his burg back on the map by transplanting Joseph Chapman from Minneapolis.

THE "old man" will be hard to head off if he means it. Arthur Rogers says he'll not stand for it. And we kick, also.

THEN there's Lewis E. Pierson, with visions of a great fortune, quitting the banking business in New York to become a grocer. Will wonders never cease?

THE firm into which Pierson has gone as the "financial and managing partner," is one of the largest on earth, easily the largest in America. Whatever comes of it, Lewis E. Pierson will continue to be the "friendliest spot" New York holds out to western bankers.

EVERY bank in Illinois is to receive a copy of the proceedings book of the "Second Annual Conference of the Bankers Committees on Agricultural Development and Education" which was held in Minneapolis and St. Paul, August 7th and 8th this year.

IT will be remembered that President George M. Reynolds of the Continental and Commercial National attended the conference, not as a delegate, but as an interested listener. The addresses of James J. Hill, Edward Rumely, E. C. Cooley, the university presidents, the teachers of agriculture, impressed him greatly.

ON his way back to Chicago he kept referring to the forthcoming proceedings book as the greatest text book possible to compile on better farming and better educational methods.

NOW that copies are available, he has ordered a supply for every bank in Illinois with the compliments of his great bank.

HE hopes bankers will read the valuable book and will talk its contents to the farmer and to the teacher alike; to the business man and the local editor.

IT is a fine spirit that leads such big, busy men as Mr. Reynolds to put a powerful shoulder to the wheel. We fancy Joseph Chapman will be greatly pleased.

PRESIDENT GWIN, down at the Indianapolis convention, was big enough to follow after the Detroit convention plan, and to have his chairman of the committee on agriculture preside at his "agricultural session."

HE had the goods, too. President Joseph Chapman of the "Conference" was there to "lead the experience meeting" and B. F. Harris got off a regular Janeadams-Outlook uplift talk, quoting scriptural and progressive injunctions to beat the band.

IT was a fine meeting and in the better farming line Indiana hopes to rank with her already better schools system. CASHIER.

NATIONAL BANKERS DISQUALIFIED

Three of the Taft electors in Illinois have been compelled to resign because they either are directors or officers of national banks. The law prohibits any person holding any position of "trust or honor" under the federal government from serving as elector, and this phrase has been held to apply to persons officially connected with national banks. The bankers disqualified are William Grote of Elgin, John Y. Whiteman of Biggsville, and Everett W. Wilson of Pekin.

LIST OF POSTOFFICES

Chicago and Cook county bankers, by addressing D. A. Campbell, postmaster, can secure a printed alphabetical list of postoffices and towns, and local names of towns not having postoffices in Cook county, which shows both the township and the office of supply. This little pamphlet will be of decided advantage to the men in the transit departments and will assist materially in the routing of items to and from outlying banks.

NEW BANK AT ROCHESTER, ILL.

A new bank to be known as the State Bank of Rochester, Ill., recently has been organized at that place. It is capitalized at $25,000 and takes over the business of Brown & Co. The incorporators are F. B. Harcourt, Thomas Thornton, Dr. J. M. Bell and others.

GERMAN BANKS REFUSE TO ENTER SYNDICATE

Fear that the proposed petroleum monopoly under the auspices of the German government was a one-sided agreement unduly favoring the interests of the Deutsche Bank, was the cause of the refusal of several other banks to enter the syndicate.

State Supervision

The Chicago city council went on record Tuesday night of this week as being unanimously in favor of state supervision of private banking. The committee which had been appointed to draft an ordinance for the city council in reality reported the draft of a bill to be offered for passage in the legislature at Springfield. The bill as prepared gives the state absolute control over private banks and was referred to the committee on state legislation with a recommendation that every possible effort be made to have it passed at the coming session. There are many provisions for the safety of the money of depositors. Ten thousand dollars cash capital will be required and the usual reports must be made to the state auditor. The bank shall issue certificates of stock and must publish a list of officers. Its accounts are to be audited by state representatives every twelve months and depositors are to have a first lien on the assets. Loans to bank officials are limited to 30 per cent of the bank's assets, and there are other regulations mentioned in the bill.

It was explained by Alderman Cermak that the draft was made by the corporation counsel, who gave it as his final opinion that the city does not possess sufficient power to regulate strictly private banks. The committee and the corporation counsel decided it was advisable to have the state legislature act upon the matter rather than to have it passed by the city council. There was no opposition to the measure and it was handed to the committee on state legislation by a unanimous vote.

The draft of the bill introduced in the city council on Tuesday evening, by Ald. Cermak was taken from the Indiana statute on the same subject,

It applies to every partnership, firm or individual transacting a banking business within the state, or using the word "bank." The minimum capital stock permitted is $10,000, which may be increased by an agreement in writing signed by the partners or shareholders of two-thirds of its capital stock. Each partnership, firm or individual engaged in such business is required to make a statement to the state auditor, which statement shall include the name of the bank; a copy of the articles of copartnership and agreement, if a copartnership, under which the business of the bank is to be conducted, which shall be executed and acknowledged by all of the parties interested therein, and at least one of whom shall be at all times a resident of the state of Illinois. If a banking business is being or is to be transacted or carried on by an individual, such individual shall at all times, while in such banking business, be a resident of the state of Illinois. The statement also must show the state, county, and town in which the bank is located, the amount of capital paid into the business and to be kept and maintained at all times in the business; that the aggregate responsibility and net worth of the individual members of such firm or partnership or individual is equal to an amount at least double the amount of the capital paid into such bank and the names of the officers who are to manage the business must be published.

RETURNS FROM MISSOURI

J. Fletcher Farrell, vice-president of the Fort Dearborn National of this city, has returned from a trip to Missouri, where he attended the group meetings held there last week. When interviewed this week Mr. Farrell said:

"The group meetings which I attended were very successfully conducted. A large number of bankers were present, Illinois being well represented in the attendance. The entertainment afforded by the Missouri bankers was of the highest order of excellence, their hospitality being most gratifying to those who were so fortunate as to participate in it. Groups 1 and 6 held a joint meeting at Hannibal on October 17th, and the members of both groups were out in force.

"Business conditions in Missouri are very good, and there is increased activity in all lines. Crops this year are fine and their marketing will be reflected in increased prosperity. The banks are in a flourishing condition; deposits are well up and loans are being made at good rates. No difficulty has been experienced by the banks in financing the crop movement. Missourians are greatly encouraged by the present favorable conditions and are very optimistic as to the future. The indications are that Missouri will go democratic this year by a large majority. However, the political situation is not having any appreciable effect upon business conditions."

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

BANKERS CLUB of Chicago held its opening meeting and banquet for the season at the Blackstone on Saturday night. William A. Heath is the new president and presided at the speaker's table.

THE orator of the evening was B. F. Harris, of Champaign, who was accompanied to the dinner by Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., which gave the occasion a rather "progressive" aspect. Mr. Harris spoke very eloquently and feelingly and was listened to attentively.

ANDREW RUSSEL, republican candidate for state treasurer, was among those in attendance from down the state, and expressed himself as delighted with Mr. Harris' talk. It was his opinion that he "did himself proud."

BANKERS are very human after all, and hundreds of inquiries have been directed to this office since the publication of the announcement of the retirement of Lewis E. Pierson from the presidency of the Irving National of New York. Many of them want to know the "real reason," and others are curious to know "why he quit."

ONE persistent inquirer wanted to know "who was after him," and was very indignant until he was quite well assured that Mr. Pierson had retired of his own motion and much against the will and desires of his directors.

WILLIAM A. TILDEN, president of the Fort Dearborn National of this city, is a director in the Irving. It is quite well known that he made several trips to New York and remained several days each time, which usually is much against his notion of profitably employing his time. His sole purpose was to induce Mr. Pierson, if possible, to remain with the Irving. You can take Mr. Tilden's word for it that he was only one of a board, every member of whom felt exactly the same way about it.

THE story goes that the partnership which Mr. Pierson has acquired has profited its former owner in the past five years something like a million, six hundred thousand. If you had a chance to attach yourself to a position of this kind, what would you do? Go to it, most likely!

THE Irving National under Mr. Pierson's administration has grown from two to fifty millions or more. It has moved progressively from a back street in the commercial district to one of the most prominent locations in the city of New York. Stockholders have received increased dividends and a number of cash and stock disbursements, making their participation in the Irving very profitable. It is likely that, having made a lot of money for other people, Mr. Pierson could not resist the opportunity of making a bunch of it for himself. He is one of the youngest men ever elected to the presidency of the American Bankers Association, and it is not saying anything against any of the others to comment upon his unrivaled popularity with the members. He has a winning personality and a sense of justice far beyond the common.

HE has authorized an invitation to be extended to his banker-friends throughout the West to call upon him at the new job, when they happen to be in New York. They will receive a cordial welcome and will be able to see at first hand just why a popular bank president in a rapidly growing institution found it irresistible when his great opportunity came.

CASHIER H. E. WARD, in notifying correspondents and customers, stated the whole matter clearly, covering every phase of the motive for retirement. Mr. Ward said:

"THE board of directors of this bank are sorry to announce, that after fourteen of most efficient and successful years in its service and management, most of the time as its president, Lewis E. Pierson to-day presented his resignation as president, to take effect October 31st, Mr. Pierson becoming an active partner in the long established and well-known wholesale grocery house of Austin, Nichols & Company of this city."

"HE has taken this step after long and deliberate consideration, and, while regretting the relinquishment of his activity in banking, he feels the other field offered to him is one he must accept in justice to himself, so that continuing a director and also as chairman of the executive committee, he still remains with us, and we continue to have the benefit of his advice and co-operation."

"MY very material advantage influenced the move," is what Mr. Pierson telegraphed a friend.

AT Boston there isn't likely to be any hotel headquarters in the business sense. The headquarters, the Boston bankers say, will be in offices in the convention hall. This is a fine idea.

RUMOR has it that several Boston bankers will not be averse to succeeding Fletcher Farrell as A. B. A. treasurer. The banks are taking a big interest in the coming convention and the keys of the city will be at Mr. Huttig's disposal.

AMONG the active are Garrard Comly of the Eliot, Thomas P. Beal of the Second National, Downy D. Muir and Frank H. Curtiss of the First, F. B. Sears of the Shawmut and Harry L. Burrage and Daniel G. Wing, two of the heavyweight financiers.

BURRAGE formerly attended all of the big conventions, but lately has allowed Comly to look after the outside interests of the Eliot. He's so rich that banking almost is a side line.

WING is an old Kansas City man and his western training and acquaintance has helped him to do big stunts in Boston as president of the ambitious First National. He's been on the Big Council.

THEY had a story at the Missouri group meetings that Illinois is after their premier secretary, W. F. Keyser of Sedalia. They thought about seven thousand per year would be the least he'd take. He's getting fifty-five hundred now, but then he's put twenty-five thousand to the good in the treasury. They say over there he'd pay his own salary in Illinois and build up a surplus of any desirable size.

THEY say he could get the big Chicago banks in on the bonding and insurance game and the rest would follow. We guess he could do it.

RUMOR in New York is busy with the name of Valentine P. Snyder, one of the big fellow in banking circles. A big consolidation (Continued on page 31)

THE LIVE STOCK Exchange National BANK OF CHICAGO

W. D. Vincent American Delegate to Lethbridge

The bankers of the United States have an organization known as the American Bankers Association. The thirty-eighth annual convention of this association was held recently at Detroit, Michigan. The most interesting session of the convention was devoted to the discussion of better farming methods and the banker's relation to the farmer.

A person not connected with the business of banking would not have considered it a meeting of bankers, and might have asked for a reason why bankers are devoting time, energy, and thought to a subject not directly concerning the operation of their business. The banker is vitally interested in the prosperity of his community. He is a public-spirited citizen; he comes in closer contact with more people of a community than the man of any other profession.

Money is the idol of a few, is the best friend of many, and is in closer relationship than a second cousin to all of us, and when we possess more of it than our daily demands, our first impulse is to consult with a banker as to its disposition or investment. For that reason, a banker is the advisor and counsellor of many clients. This position compels him to be a student of the various needs and phases of life. Bankers, in their study of economics, have gone to the fundamental questions, have gone to the basic foundation of things that produce wealth, and their conclusion is that there is none so necessary of investigation as that of the increased product of the soil. The value of the crops in the United States for the year 1912 is estimated by Hon. James Wilson, secretary of agriculture, to be $9,000,000,000. These little ciphers with the figure nine in their lead staggers one's idea of the proportion of things, but just think for a moment what would be added to the volume of business if that amount could be increased only one-tenth—$900,000,000—more than the total of all clearings of the New England states for the month of September, 1912.

It follows that it is the business of and duty of every banker to be of help to any movement that will aid in increasing the average crop production in his state, nation, province or dominion.

How have the bankers of the United States undertaken to render this assistance? Early in the year 1909, Joseph Chapman, vice-president of the Northwestern National of Minneapolis, Minnesota, suggested to the Minnesota Bankers Association that they consider the questions of agricultural development and vocational education. Mr. Chapman was made chairman of the committee that was appointed to make an investigation of the subject. The first annual report of this committee in printed form is not so large as a penny tract, but it was the beginning of a great movement among the bankers of that state. They discovered that there was a great need for a change in the educational system of Minnesota. School children were being educated to become consumers and were not being trained to become producers. Through the bankers, public interest was aroused to such an extent that the legislature of that state passed a bill authorizing the establishment of agricultural high schools

The Spokane banker representing the "Conference" and the American Bankers Association committee on agriculture and education read a splendid paper at the Dry Farming congress telling what the bankers of the states have accomplished and the consolidation of rural schools, and made an appropriation to assist in and to carry on the work.

The attempt of the Minnesota bankers to inaugurate a system of agricultural and vocational education was so successful that North Dakota first, and other states in quick succession followed their example. The bankers of Illinois, under the leadership of B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National of Champaign, in 1911 undertook a plan of education and development that has resulted in the introduction of measures in the congress of the United States, the passage of which will give to all parts of our country federal assistance in a manner that is now being given to only a portion of it. Mr. Chapman made addresses on the subject of agricultural education before the bankers associations of several states. Minnesota, Illinois, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Montana, Oregon, Idaho, Kansas and Washington all appointed committees of their bankers associations on agricultural development and education.

A conference of the members of the committees from these states was called and meetings were held in Minneapolis and St. Paul, October 18 and 19, 1911. Enthusiastic interest was shown in every address that was delivered. Men of national reputation discussed the question of farm management, agricultural high schools, the operation of the department of agriculture of the United States, betterment of home life on the farm, state colleges of agriculture and extension work and many of the problems of rural life.

The opinion of the conference was expressed in a resolution urging the bankers of every state to appoint standing committees on agriculture, to work for improved agricultural methods, better farm life conditions, and education in agricultural development and domestic science for the farm boys and girls, more especially as provided by the consolidated rural school and the agricultural high schools and other extension services of the various agricultural colleges.

The proceedings of this first conference were reported to the convention of the American Bankers Association at their thirty-seventh meeting at New Orleans in November, 1911. The value of the work and its importance to the nation was immediately recognized by the convention, and a committee on Agricultural and Financial Development and Education was appointed, consisting of Joseph Chapman, vice-president of the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis, Minnesota, chairman; B. F. Harris, vice-president First National Bank, Champaign, Illinois; Myron T. Herrick, president of the Society for Savings, Cleveland, Ohio, and now the United States Ambassador to France; Joseph G. Brown, president Citizens National Bank, Raleigh, North Carolina; Edwin Chamberlain, vice-president San Antonio Loan & Trust Company, San Antonio, Texas; W. D. Vincent, cashier Old National Bank, Spokane, Washington. The committee at once took steps to secure the co-operation of the bankers of the United States, and to investigate the foreign systems of farm financing.

The Second Annual Conference of Bankers Committees on Agricultural Development and Education was held in Minneapolis and St. Paul, August 7 and 8, 1912. At this time thirty states had appointed committees. Representatives of twenty-three state committees were in attendance. The report of the first committee to the Minnesota Bankers Association was given in a small pamphlet; the proceedings of the second annual conference of committees are printed in a book of 366 pages, a remarkable commentary on the efforts of the bankers to be of assistance in this great movement, and a remarkable commentary on the growth of the interest bankers have shown in this work. The president of a university has said, "The bankers of the United States are deserving more of their country because of the interest they are showing in rural problems and agricultural education."

Bankers as business men must know the science of efficiency. They must apply their knowledge in the analysis of the financial condition of their borrowers. They believe that the laws of efficiency should be applied to farming methods. The banker is extending to the farmer the right hand of fellowship in a spirit of co-operation. We have passed the age of ruinous competition. We have reached the age where every one must become a factor working for the common good. The banker's success depends upon the prosperity of his community; he is simply an agent of prosperity, the medium through which the business of the nation is measured.

It is in the spirit of co-operation that the banker has taken up the investigation of rural problems; it is in the spirit of co-operation that he offers himself as an assistant to the educators of the country to disseminate the knowledge acquired by scientists and investigators and stored up in the vaults of learning in the agricultural colleges and in the United States department of agriculture. The banker hopes to aid the uninformed by helping them throw open the gates of opportunity so that intelligent effort will be rewarded with better living and the nation secure a more efficient citizenship.

Bankers committees on agricultural development have immediately after their organization met in consultation with their state superintendent of public instruction and the president or representative of the state college of agriculture; state needs have been discussed and a plan of action agreed upon. The effort is first directed to the agricultural education of the young, and then to agricultural demonstration for the old.

The bankers of the state of Oregon raised a modest fund, employed a trained man and placed his services at the disposal of the superintendent of public instruction. Under his direction and with his assistance, 75,000 school children enrolled in a garden contest. Eighty-eight children's fairs were held. Prizes were awarded for the best displays. The prize list amounted to more than twenty thousand dollars. It is indeed inspiring to hear the superintendent tell how the country school superintendents, the live stock associations, commercial bodies, merchants and bankers gave their assistance to a movement that has brought such a change in the education of the young of that great state. Dr. Connell, I am sure, can tell you what the bankers of Oklahoma have done to aid field demonstration work. Growing Kaffir corn was advocated by bankers, and the feed question in Oklahoma is being solved. The bankers of North Dakota are active in behalf of the operations of the Better Farming Association. Extension work is being carried on under the direction of the association. An outline of what they are doing is given in the October issue of Dry Farming, the official bulletin of this congress.

The bankers of the Missouri association have decided upon several lines of activity. They recommend to the bankers of each county to take up the matter of securing a county farm adviser to serve as a practical expert and demonstrator in the county. Bulletins on agricultural topics are to be sent to members and local newspapers asked to give publicity to them. A farm paper will have a Missouri Bankers Association department. Bankers are urged to induce boys in their localities to attend the state college of agriculture. One feature of the work done by the bankers of Idaho that deserves special commendation is their subscription to five of the best agricultural periodicals, to be placed in all of the schools in the state.

Thoroughly equipped to handle all business pertaining to banking, and invites the accounts of banks, corporations, firms and individuals

The bankers of every state in the Union are doing something to forward this movement; each state has its own problems. In one, it may be good roads; another, dairying; others, seed selection, better live stock, hog raising, corn, cotton; but above all the special or local problems are the general problems of soil fertility, cultivation and production. The study of soil cultivation gave birth to the International Dry Farming Congress, and just as collateral branches of the problem have been taken into the deliberations of the congress, so has the bankers' interest in the betterment of farming been aroused and enlarged.

Every organization that is working for a larger, broader, better country life must feel gratified over the report issued on the 9th day of this month. The secretary of agriculture of the United States said, "The crops this year are the heaviest on record. The season has been favorable, but some credit is due to the wide efforts made in late years by the federal government and the states to help farmers throughout the country to get better returns from the average acre."

In 1911 we imported potatoes. This year the total yield on 3,689,000 acres is 401,000,000 bushels, an average per acre of 108.8 bushels. Germany's average is 226 bushels; Belgium, 286 bushels. In the state of Washington 400 bushels per acre can be grown. If an increase of the general average could be raised to 128.8 bushels per acre, our crop would equal 468,780,000 bushels; at least enough to prevent the importation of this necessity of life and to provide for the ordinary demand. But do not forget that consumption increases at a faster ratio than production.

Our crop of oats is 1,417,712,000 bushels from 37,844,000 acres, or 9 bushels per acre better than the ten year average. Is that not a splendid demonstration of the value of scientific dry farming methods?

The yield of corn is 3,016,000,000 bushels, an average of 27.9 bushels per acre, against an average in 1911 of 23.9 bushels. If our average per acre could have been 30 bushels, the total would be increased 227,300,000 bushels, which at 50 cents per bushel would add $113,650,000 more to the value of the corn crop.

England produces wheat at an average of 32 bushels per acre. If the average of the United States equaled that of England, the value of the crop of 1912 would be $1,368,823,000.

Our wheat crop this year is 720,433,000 bushels, an average of 16 bushels per acre, compared to an average in 1911 of 12.5 bushels per acre.

An average increase of two bushels per acre would add $85,345,500 to our wealth.

Comparative statements and statistical facts could be quoted indefinitely. We all know that we have increased prosperity, increased values, an increased acreage; that rotation, selection, soil fertility, cultivation are subjects that receive more attention than ever in our history.

But I am frank to say that they have no value if a debtor's credit has not enhanced in proportion. We have scientific farming, there is scientific management, but when will we, as a nation, learn the science of spending? We spend our earnings before they are paid. We spend the proceeds of our crop before it is harvested. A crop mortgage is the diploma of inefficiency. With a nine billion dollar crop we have a six billion dollar mortgage on the land that grew it, and who holds the mortgage?—the people who have saved something of their yearly income.

One of the great problems that the banker must consider in his relation to the farmer is the rate of interest charged on this immense mortgage. The rate is regulated by the credit standing of the borrower—better farming means better credit—better credit means better rates. We cannot by simply adopting a foreign system of land loans reduce the rate of interest. With the adoption of the foreign system, we must at least adopt some of the methods that make the system effective.

No foreign system will lend money on an impoverished farm. Are we not, in this country, exhausting our soil? We must restore fertility to the soil as well as principal to the mortgagee. We must not lead ourselves into the thought that the next generation will pay the debt we make, and that a low interest rate is the only solution of our present difficulty.

Banking must become a profession. Farming must become a business. Standards are higher. Methods are better. Improvement in everything is being made. The farmer has come into his own, and the evolution in agricultural education has made life on the farm worth living.

IMPORTANT BOOK ON THE NEW REPUBLICAN CHINA

John Stuart Thomson, the China traveler and author of "The Chinese," will have out, late this season, a large new book entitled "Revolutionized China," illustrated both by choice colored plates by Chinese artists, and by many unusually fine photo half-tones and colored maps. Among the photos are those of the leaders of the new republic. The book of 600 pages will be published in America by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, and in London by Werner Laurie. It is promised that it is a most important work by a traveler and economist who spent three years on the ground. It will cover the whole new republican China of to-day and the future, in thirty fields, in its relation with America, Britain, Japan, etc. After his long stay in China, Mr. Thomson made a trip around the world via Japan, India, etc., to study the trade and political relations of the various nations with the new China, which the Panama Canal is bringing much closer to the American business man and statesman. D. Appleton & Co. of New York have just published Mr. Thomson's child story of China entitled "Bud and Bamboo." It is tastefully illustrated by cuts made from photographs which the author took on his travels in China.

REAL ESTATE LOAN DEPARTMENT FOR FORT DEARBORN TRUST

Fort Dearborn Trust and Savings Bank of this city announces the opening of a real estate loan department to facilitate the making of first mortgage loans on improved Chicago realty. It will have on hand at all times for sale to the customers of the bank a line of high grade mortgages and mortgage bonds, a list of which may be had on application. The department will be located on the third floor of the bank, adjoining the trust department, and will be in charge of F. A. Myren.

LASALLE STREET NATIONAL CON- VERTED TO STATE BANK

Conversion of the LaSalle St. National Bank of Chicago into a state institution was effected this week, when it became the LaSalle Street Trust and Savings Bank. Capital is $1,000,000 and surplus $250,000. For the present the business will be carried on in the same quarters which were occupied by the national bank. Before the end of the year, however, they will move into the building lately vacated by the Farwell Trust Company. Officers are as follows: William Lorimer, president; C. B. Munday, vice-president; Charles G. Fox, cashier; Thomas McDonald, assistant cashier; Frank Spoor, auditor; Charles E. Ward, secretary and trust officer and Elbridge Hanecy, counsel. It is said that the change was made to enable the bank to carry on real estate, trust and other branches of business not permitted under a national bank charter.

D. R. FORGAN TO SPEAK IN NEW YORK

David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, is to be one of the speakers at the eighth annual banquet of the Canadian Club of New York, to be held at the Astor House, November 12th. His subject will be "How to Avoid Another Panic."

"THE FLYING SQUADRON OF AMERICA"

At the dinner recently given by G. H. Mueller, vice-president of the Fletcher-American National at Indianapolis, to traveling representatives of banks in the larger cities, there were about thirty persons present. The dinner was given at the Columbia Club in Indianapolis, and about a billion dollars in assets were represented at the gathering. A temporary organization was effected, of which G. H. Mueller is president and F. J. Woodworth, third vice-president of the First National of Cleveland, is secretary and treasurer. A committee was appointed to select a meeting place in some central reserve city, at which time the permanent organization will be effected and officers elected. Chicago was decided upon as the place for the first meeting, and December 14th is the date.

As expressed in the articles of association, the purposes and objects of this organization are to "foster, protect and advance the banking interests generally, as well as the banks represented by the membership; to encourage integrity and good faith, just and equitable principles, and to discover and correct abuses; to prevent and adjust controversies; to disseminate information and statistics; and, in general, to promote the welfare and social intercourse of its members." It also is provided that no subject shall be discussed at any meeting which will in any way conflict with the interests of the American Bankers Association or any state bankers' association. The name of the association is "The Flying Squadron of America."

The charter members are as follows: Hervey W. Beggs, Third National, St. Louis; William McB. Bell, The Bank of Pittsburgh; A. E. Coen, Colonial Trust and Savings, Chicago; Addison Corneau, Central Trust Company, Chicago; F. A. Crandall, National City Bank, Chicago; C. L. Wakefield, Corn Exchange National, Chicago; Oscar E. Weiss, Farmers and Mechanics National, Philadelphia; Fred J. Woodworth, First National, Cleveland; and H. S. Zimmerman, Mellon National, Pittsburgh.

Members of the executive committee are as follows: George Dunscomb, assistant cashier, First National, Chicago; H. S. Zimmerman, assistant cashier, Mellon National, Pittsburgh; F. J. Woodworth, vice-president, First National, Cleveland; Richard Faust, Jr., assistant cashier, Irving National, New York; James Leavell, Mechanics-American National, St. Louis.

The committee on arrangements for the annual meeting is as follows: F. A. Crandall, vice-president, National City Bank, Chicago; J. Fletcher Farrell, vice-president, Fort Dearborn National; James G. Wakefield, assistant cashier, Corn Exchange National; J. F. Hagey, assistant cashier, First National, and Wilbur Hattery, assistant cashier, Continental and Commercial National, all of Chicago.

The articles of association as drawn up may be ratified or changed at the initial meeting in Chicago on December 14th.

Certificates of stock must be issued. There must be posted in every such bank a printed list of all the owners or parties interested therein; also a statement that it is a private bank. Reports are to be made each year, under the oath of the president, cashier, or other managing officer. Said report shall exhibit in detail the resources and liabilities of the bank at the close of business on any specified day, and it shall be made within five days after a request therefor has been received. The statute says that it must be published in a newspaper. The penalty for non-compliance with this provision (report) is a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, which money shall be placed in the common school fund of the county in which the bank is located.

Once every twelve months, or as often as may be deemed necessary, examinations of the bank are to be made. If the bank holds property in trust, the fact of such trust, the nature and character thereof, the acceptance of the same and the amount so held, shall be set forth in an instrument to be executed by the trustee and acknowledged by him before a notary public. Within fifteen days after the execution of such instrument it shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder. Within thirty days thereafter, the original instrument, together with the certificate of the county recorder, showing that it has been duly recorded, shall be filed with the state auditor. If the instrument is not so filed and recorded, and a bank is wound up either voluntarily or involuntarily, said trust property shall be considered as a part of the assets of said bank, providing the remaining assets are not sufficient to pay the bona fide claims of depositors. The depositors have a first lien on the assets of the bank. Loans to officers are limited to 30 per cent of the capital. Such partnership, firm or individual can sue or be sued in the name of the bank.

Violation of any of the provisions of the act is punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, to which may be added for the second offense imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years.

COOK COUNTY REAL ESTATE BOARD TO DISCUSS GOOD ROADS

Morton T. Culver, president of the Cook County Real Estate Board, announces that their membership will discuss the subject of good roads at their regular meeting to be held at the LaSalle Hotel at noon, October 29th. CAPITAL ONE MILLION DOLLARS

ILLINOIS BANKING NEWS

By C. C. Burford

The Illinois Bankers Association has always been active in urging the most careful and conservative management of the natural resources of the state and especially of the soil. It is evident to many of the foremost workers in the state association that less attention is being paid to dairy manufactures by the farmers of the state, and there is a desire on the part of the state officers that each and every banker do all that he can to urge better and more extensive dairying among the farmers of his home locality. With the prices of milk and butter constantly soaring, there is every reason to believe that higher prices for dairy products will prevail unless there is more attention given to this branch of agriculture.

It is worthy of mention that scores of Illinois farms which command such high and constantly increasing prices are almost destitute of cows and hogs. Many of the farms are tilled by tenants, the owners residing in some good town near by, and the only animals on many farms are the work horses and the milk cows of the tenant, the cows usually from one to three in number. Some tenants feed a few hogs, and sheep are kept on comparatively few farms. Beef cattle are very scarce on Illinois farms, being raised more by so-called "extensive" farmers.

That these conditions obtain as a result of the tenant population is without question. Of course it would be unfair and hasty to say that there are not many farms in the state where an abundance of dairy and beef cattle, hogs and sheep are fed, yet it is to be doubted if most of the farms in the central part of the state support much live stock. There are exceptions in all directions, of course, varying all the way from the exclusive dairy farms around Chicago to the exclusive grain farms down-state, where the only animals are the horses and a very few milk cows. Corn and oats farming, rather than the feeding of live stock, seems to be the rule with the many tenant farms of the state, and as a result the state can market a much smaller per cent of live stock than the cities require. Indeed, many of the smaller towns of the central part of the state often require creamery butter for local consumption, while the local meat markets ship in packing house products.

It has been estimated that in portions of one of the largest and best agricultural counties of the state less than fifty per cent of the farms are occupied by the owners. Such facts lead to tenant conditions with poor schools, roads, churches, and, in many cases, poor farm improvements. That there is an abundance of work for the leaders along the ideas of soil conservation, improved roads, better schools, and more comfortable farm homes, goes without saying.

New Bank at Centralia

The Centralia Trust and Savings Bank, the third bank in Centralia, has begun business with a capital of $50,000. J. F. Mackey is the president, H. G. Cormick and Max Prill are vice-presidents, and A. J. Guerrette is the cashier. The other two banks in Centralia are the Old National, established in 1865, and the Merchants State Bank, established in 1900. Centralia is one of the growing towns in southern Illinois and there is plenty of room for the new bank.

Bank Yeggmen Begin Operations

With the coming of the long nights of the autumn season, the yeggmen are beginning their operations and two banks in one county have received midnight calls from bank burglars. The Farmers Bank of Goodwine, Iroquois county, was entered by yeggmen, but the noise caused by their explosions awakened citizens who gave the fleeing blow-up men a lively chase. It is thought that the yeggmen boarded a south-bound Chicago & Eastern Illinois train for St. Louis. Nothing was secured, and a price of $200 each has been set for the capture of the yeggmen, dead or alive. Another Iroquois county bank molested was the bank of J. Sumner & Sons of Stockland, only a few miles from Goodwine, but again the yeggs were frightened away. Whether or not the same men operated in the two towns is not known, but doubtless there is some connection between the two incidents. Bankers in country towns need to take the greatest precaution, especially during the months of October, November and December.

Automobile Accident Fatal

George W. Cole, president of Cole's Trust and Savings Bank of Bushnell, has received word that his brother, Harry Cole, was killed in an automobile accident in Omaha, Nebraska. The Bushnell banker went at once to Omaha and brought the body to his home city for burial.

Illinois Prosperity

The prosperity of the state is reflected in the following items, as straws showing the direction of the industrial wind: Work has been begun on a $100,000 paper mill at Averyville, near Peoria; the Toledo, Peoria and Western Railroad will lay 500 tons of new steel and the Wabash will double-track their lines; the Rockford Malleable Iron Works is erecting new buildings as the old ones are inadequate; the Pattee Plow Company of Monmouth announces that it will run all fall and winter to

McLean County Bank of Bloomington

The McLean County Bank of Bloomington is one of the growing banks of that city. A good location on the east side of the square is occupied by the bank, and, while it has only been in business since 1903, the growth of deposits and loans is fully satisfactory to the officers of the bank. James P. Hackett, cashier of the bank, attended the Peoria convention and made many friends with Illinois bankers.

G. F. Carson of Peoria

A large number of Illinois bankers had the pleasure of meeting J. L. Pettyjohn and C. F. Pettyjohn, of the mortgage loan firm of J. L. Pettyjohn and Company of Olathe, Kansas, while at the Peoria convention. The Illinois representative of this firm is G. F. Carson of Peoria, with offices in the Jefferson Building. The Pettyjohn deal in the best of Eastern Kansas farm mortgages, and Illinois bankers desiring investments of this kind are invited to correspond with Mr. Carson. The latter is represented on the road by his son, R. P. Carson.

Illinois Notes.

J. L. Jones, cashier of the First National of Henry, Marshall county, was married October 21st to Miss Elizabeth Broadus. Both are graduates of the University of Illinois.

The Alton Board of Trade has been admitted to membership in the National Association of Chambers of Commerce, the first city of this size in Illinois to be thus honored. Alton is one of the good business cities in the outer suburban belt of St. Louis and there are many able bankers and business men in that city. D. A. Wyckoff, cashier of the First Trust and Savings Bank and retiring treasurer of the Illinois Bankers Association, is especially well known to Illinois bankers.

J. E. Whitman, for several years assistant cashier of the First National of Hoopston, has resigned his position because of a desire to change climates and has accepted a position with one of the banks in Los Angeles, California.

William H. Nicholson, for many years with the Millikin National of Decatur, is dead after a lingering illness of five months.

B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National of Champaign and a former president of the Illinois Bankers Association, was a speaker at the opening banquet of the Bankers Club of Chicago, October 19th.

M. F. Dunlap, president of the Ayres National and of the private banking firm of Dunlap, Russel and Company, both of Jacksonville, was elected Grand Keeper of the Exchequer of the Illinois Knights of Pythias at the recent convention of the lodge held in Rockford.

Bloomington bankers report an unusually large amount of Canadian silver to be circulating among the merchants of that city. The banks take it on deposit from their customers but do not pass it out again. It is forwarded to their Chicago correspondents and by them turned over to the Bank of Montreal for redemption.

Land values in eastern Champaign county seem to have reached the top when an eighty acre tract near the station of Royal, and fifteen miles from the cities of Urbana and Champaign, sold for $325 an acre. Two farms near St. Joseph sold for high prices, one farm of sixty acres bringing $240 an acre and another of 160 acres selling for $325 an acre. A farm near Oakwood, a few miles east of St. Joseph, a farm in which former Speaker Joseph G.

Cannon of Danville, was interested, also sold for considerably over $200 an acre.

Edwin G. Cooley, former superintendent of the Chicago schools, who has advocated vocational education in the schools for several years, recently addressed an audience of 500 teachers at Galesburg on this subject. Vocational education is an important part of the new and sound doctrines of the various bankers' associations.

Dr. S. S. Boulton, for thirteen years a practicing physician, is the new cashier of the Towanda State Bank, in a village of the same name near Bloomington.

Willard E. Hotchkiss, dean of the School of Commerce of Northwestern University, was one of the speakers at the State Conference of Charities and Corrections recently held in Springfield, speaking from the subject, "Child Welfare as a Problem."

ROCKFORD PEOPLE INTERESTED IN GOOD ROADS

During his four-day stay in Rockford during the Pythian Grand Lodge convention, W. G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, met many Rockford bankers and business men, and learned that Rockford is anxious to have a northern Illinois good roads meeting some time this fall. They appealed to Mr. Edens, as president of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, to co-operate with them in the matter of holding such a meeting. The city of Rockford and the township in which it is located enjoy splendid roads, and while the outlying roads in Winnebago county and in adjoining counties are very much better than those in other sections of the state, it is desired to consider the matter of their further improvement.

NEWS LETTER BY CHALMER B. TRAVER

WISCONSIN

The third International Dairy Show, promoted by Wisconsin dairymen and cattle breeders, opened in the Auditorium Tuesday night with $500,000 worth of prize cattle and butter and cheese from all parts of the United States on exhibition. The show is a further indication of the growing competition between farmers and dairymen for the credit of the state's prosperity. Its lesson is one of gratification to dairymen, in that the Wisconsin exhibits compare favorably with those of other states, and the latter are numerous.

Group 5 at Fort Atkinson

The seventh annual meeting of Group 5, Wisconsin Bankers Association, occupied the boards at Fort Atkinson this week. The group is the last to hold its annual meeting, all the others convening before the state meeting in July. State Banking Commissioner A. E. Kuolt and Former Governor W. D. Hoard of Wisconsin were the principal speakers. Discussion of those subjects that are of most interest and most satisfactorily taken up at group meetings was one of the features. Milwaukee bankers attending the meeting included Secretary George D. Bartlett of the state organization; Walter Kasten, Wisconsin National; E. J. Hughes, First National; E. A. Reddeman, Germania National; E. H. Williams, Marine National; F. X. Bodden, Marshall & Ilsley; E. C. Knoernschild, Merchants & Manufacturers, and William M. Post, National Exchange. S. M. Smith, Janesville, is president of the group and Henry D. L. Adkins, Elkhorn, is secretary-treasurer.

In New Building at First of Year

New Years Day has been set for the probable "housewarmings" of two of the Milwaukee banks for whom new buildings are now in course of construction. The Marshall & Ilsley bank building on East Water Street north of the First Wisconsin National is so near completion that the officers feel confident that the first day of the new year will find them in new quarters. The Second Ward Savings Bank building, on the triangle bounded by West Water, Third, and Cedar Streets, may also be opened for business to friends of the institution on the same day. Both buildings are examples of the highest development of banking architecture and are designed for the exclusive use of the institutions for which they are being constructed. Of the date set for the occupancy of the First National Bank's sixteen-story building at East Water and Mason Streets, Vice-president William Bigelow says: "The building is not far enough advanced as yet to permit the naming of the exact date of occupancy. It may be several months before we can do so." The contractors are still engaged on the foundations of the latter building.

Want River Walk

Three Milwaukee banks will be affected by the recent decision of the federal authorities relative to the proposed river walk along the east side of the Milwaukee river between Wisconsin and Mason Streets. They are the Wisconsin National, Marshall & Ilsley, and First National Banks, all of which have or will occupy buildings fronting on the river in this area, and were prominently identified with the agitation for the river walk. Although the decision will affect the width of the walk as first planned, forbidding the alteration of the present dock line, the enterprise will be continued with what space between the buildings and the river is still adaptable, according to President Fred Vogel, Jr., of the First National. The proposed walk will provide access to all three banks by means of river entrances which, in the case of the two new buildings, are scarcely less pretentious than the main entrances on East Water Street, and which were embodied in the plans when the river walk project was thought definitely settled.

Corn Growing Contests

Corn growing contests among farmers' sons will be a feature of the crop improvement campaign of the Milwaukee County School of Agriculture, allied with the crop improvement committee of the Wisconsin Bankers Association next year.

Bank Fails; Goes Insane

Crazed by the knowledge that his life savings of $400 had been lost in the failure of the bank of D. Hammel & Son, Leon Smith, aged 26, a resident of Gladstone, Mich., was this week committed to the Newberry asylum, Gladstone, by Probate Judge Yellano.

Howards Grove is assured of a bank, its articles of incorporation having been approved by Bank Commissioner A. E. Kuolt. It will be known as the State Bank of Howards Grove. Its capital stock is $10,000, and the incorporators are August H. Witte, G. C. Zimmermann and Nic Filz.

GOOD CONDITIONS AROUND MENASHA

J. L. Fieweger, president of the Bank of Menasha (Wis.), says that business conditions in his section are very encouraging. Crops this year have been good, although some delay has been experienced in harvesting them, owing to the wet weather. One of the principal lines of activity up there is the cheese industry. The banks are well loaned up and people are looking toward the future with no apprehension.

Indiana

The Purdue State Bank, a new institution established in 1910 in West LaFayette adjacent to Purdue University, is meeting with great success and has built up a good business not only with faculty members of the university and students, but with business men and farmers as well. Although the city of LaFayette across the Wabash river had nine banks, representing national, state, savings and trust institutions, yet the new bank has enjoyed a satisfactory growth of business. President Stone of Purdue University is a director in the bank. Most of the students of the university do business with the bank, and the handling of their accounts is a hard problem for any bank, inasmuch as they keep for the most part but small balances and write many checks, scores of them for one dollar or less. But the Purdue State Bank is able to handle the mass of items which pass through the bank in a satisfactory manner. A new banking house with the best of bank equipment will soon be erected. B. D. McConnell is the cashier and manager of the bank and T. M. Andrew is the president.

Good Crops in Indiana

Good crops seem to be the rule throughout central Indiana and the prosperity of the farmers and townspeople there is without parallel. Land values are high, many of the good farms commanding prices from $150 to $200 an acre. The farmers operate on a more diversified scale than in central Illinois, as they do more dairying, feed more cattle and hogs, and in many ways are really farming better than in portions of Illinois where the virgin soil is farmed so hard. Indiana farmers are for the most part vitally interested in the great topic of soil conservation, and they use many commercial fertilizers as well as an abundance of clover and animal manure. Silos are numerous and in some districts seem to be located on almost every farm. Corn is cut and placed in the silos and then fed out to live stock, rather than being husked in the field and sold at the grain elevators, as in many Illinois communities.

In fact the silo seems to rival the garage as a new building on the Indiana farm and almost every progressive central Indiana farmer has both a silo and a garage, as he needs both. Many farmers who own but eighty acres run their automobiles and seem to enjoy life to the utmost. The roads of Indiana are noted as being superb and as one Indiana farmer said, "We need automobiles in order to enjoy our good roads."

Indiana will contribute a large part to the prosperity of the nation this year and the bankers of that state are expecting a large volume of business during the fall and winter seasons.

Indiana Notes

The Indiana Trust and Savings Bank, of Indiana Harbor, has announced an increase of capital stock from $25,000 to $50,000.

The Mutual Home and Saving Association of Muncie has announced an increase of capital stock from $1,500,000 to $2,500,000.

Business men interested in the organization of the Northwestern State Bank, to be established in North Indianapolis, met Monday night and perfected plans for selling the stock and opening the bank. It is expected that the bank will be incorporated and opened for business by November 30th. Subscriptions for stock amounting to about $6,000 have already been made, and a committee has been appointed to sell the remainder of the $25,000 of capital stock. The stock subscription committee is as follows: W. W. Maines, Joseph Hogue, Oran Swan, O. W. Brooks, E. M. Schofield, E. W. Johnson, Frank Binford, L. J. Green, T. B. Wright and M. C. Cosler.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, Oct. 23d.—There is a division of opinion among St. Louis bankers as to the action of the local money market in the near future. Certain well posted bank officials are of the opinion that there will be a slight easing off in rates, due to the return flow of funds from the Southwest, notably Texas and Oklahoma. These gentlemen, while conceding that general business is brisk and lively, and likely to remain so, point to rather large deposits, and the fact that many banks in the Southwest which are usually debtors at this time have paid up and are in the market as purchasers of commercial paper. On the other hand, a large portion of the local fraternity believes the present stiff rates will obtain until well into the new year. They say that while the return of cotton money has been earlier than expected, there are ample sources which will quickly absorb this surplus, and that it will not result in a reduction, or even weakening of rates. The outlook for fall and winter business is the best in a decade, and the commercial demands of home customers will be enormous. Besides, offering of Eastern commercial paper is heavy, and excellent bills with prime names are going at 6 per cent. In addition, the railroads and equipment companies are in the market for goodly sums, and the agricultural needs, while past as a great factor, will appear throughout the winter, owing to the disposition to hold back for higher prices. The corn movement will extend over a lengthy period, both on account of the colossal crop, and because farmers in many localities will not ship unless able to obtain 50 cents per bushel. All agree, however, that western banks will not rediscount any of their paper in New York, and all needs can be easily taken care of without recourse to the East. The manner in which deposits have been holding up, and the aspect of collections, form the basis for this opinion. San Antonio, Austin and Houston banks have been purchasing commercial bills at this market. This is an argument in favor of those holding that money will become easier, but the size of this Texas surplus is problematical, and bankers from that state are likely to run into heavy cotton holders, whom, under their recent profuse promises, they will be morally bound to aid. Clearings here are holding up in excellent shape, though last week's total fell slightly under that of the corresponding period last year. A sharp gain for the year is assured, however, as the gain to date could only be offset by a catastrophe in November and December.

Edwin Gould Optimistic

Edwin Gould, chairman of the board of the Cotton Belt Railway, passed through St. Louis early in the week on his way back to New York after an extended inspection tour over the lines of his system. He was about the most optimistic railroad magnate who has spoken on the southwestern outlook this fall. "It's fine; everything is fine," said Mr. Gould. "The West and Southwest have magnificent crops this year, and the best business prospects in their history. Business prosperity in that region is assured for at least twelve or fifteen months to come, regardless of the outcome of next year's plantings. There is ample for the railroads to do, and now it is more a matter of getting cars and locomotives enough than seeking tonnage to haul. The prosperity in the section traversed by the Cotton Belt is of a character that will make for the future, as there is surplus enough to put into permanent investments and improvements in farms and commercial and manufacturing enterprises. The country is growing, and nothing can hold it back. Incidentally St. Louis will come in for a great share of the business in the southwestern states."

Hayden Elected to Board

C. E. Hayden was elected a member of the board of directors of the Night and Day Bank at its annual meeting this week, to succeed Anthony F. Ittner. H. H. Hoenchild was re-elected president; W. S. White, cashier and L. A. McGrather, assistant cashier. A. O. Meininger was promoted to the post of assistant cashier. The new board consists of Messrs. Hayden and Hoenchild, W. S. White, F. E. Bryan, W. L. Musick, T. K. Cooper and A. F. Ittner. The Night and Day Bank has a capital and surplus of $153,000 and deposits of $295,000.

Commonwealth Trust First

The Commonwealth Trust Company was the fortunate institution in drawing No. 1 in the allotment of municipal funds to the various depositories. This means that $500,000 will be deposited with the Commonwealth before a cent of city funds are placed in any other institution. No. 2 gets the next $500,000, and so on down. There were seventeen banks and trust companies in the running, and all will pay the uniform rate of 3 per cent on the first $500,000 and 2 per cent on supplemental deposits. The institutions in the order of their drawings are as follows: Commonwealth Trust Company, St. Louis Union Trust, Mississippi Valley Trust, Mercantile Trust, Franklin Bank, Merchants, Laclede National, Central National, Lafayette Bank, National Bank of Commerce, Mercantile National, Mechanics-American National, American Trust Company, State National, German-American Bank, German Savings Institution, Third National and Boatmens Bank. The deposits will be withdrawn beginning with No. 1, so that a fair average will be hit in most cases.

Queer Banking Shown

Some weird banking is being developed in the trials of A. C. Cooke, E. L. Hendry, Abner Davis, J. H. Brooks, W. C. White, G. F. Tonges and others in the United States Court at Memphis. The defendants are accused of using the mails to defraud. One bit brought out was that the American Trust Company of Memphis, capitalized at $500,000, had a life of two months, during which it earned $1.19 and had an expense of $11,000, all of which was paid by certificates of deposit and notes issued in favor of that institution by E. L. Hendry, president of the All Night and Day Bank of Memphis. Judge McCall, who is trying the case, ruled out a motion by the attorneys for the defendants that the government had failed to prove a conspiracy to defraud by using the mails.

To Navigate the Mississippi

St. Louis business men and capitalists are interested directly and indirectly in the Waterways Navigation Company of St. Paul, which has been organized with a capital of $10,000,000 to operate power boats on the Mississippi River from St. Paul to New Orleans. The stock is being subscribed for in towns and cities along the Mississippi, and a fair block is said to have been taken here. The St. Paul proposition has no connection with a similar project agitated in St. Louis. Efforts of the Business Men's League of St. Louis to establish a barge line from this city to the Gulf, it is understood, have been temporarily abandoned.

Monetary Commission, while in St. Louis last week expressed the opinion that the reform of banking laws is of equal importance with the tariff problem to business interests of the country. While here Mr. Bonyngue was in conference with leading local bankers, among them Charles H. Huttig. "The tariff question will have precedence," said Mr. Bonyngue, "and it may be two years before the currency matter is taken up in earnest, but we are hopeful that the latter question will not be delayed until another panic is at hand. After the election is out of the way, bankers and business men all over the country, regardless of party and creed, will begin activities to secure the needed legislation, and with sufficient urging, it is likely congress will act sooner than present indications would lead one to believe. I believe a majority of the members of both branches of congress are sufficiently impressed with the importance of legislation along these lines not to delay any longer than necessary, and we are hopeful of good results."

Herriott Quits Treasury

D. S. Herriott has resigned as assistant cashier of the United States Treasury at Washington and taken up his residence at St. Louis. He will take an active part in the business of the manufacturing firm of Herriott Brothers & Company, in which he has been a partner for several years. Mr. Herriott is well known in local financial circles and at the St. Louis subtreasury. He installed O. L. Whitelaw, the present assistant treasurer, in office. His last assignment was the examination of the St. Louis office last May, which involved the counting of $40,000,000 in gold, silver, minor coin and currency. His last official duties in Washington were those of acting assistant United States treasurer.

Trust Company Dines Stockholders

All officers of the North St. Louis Savings Trust Company were re-elected at a dinner given by the company to its 250 stockholders in the hall of the bank building last Wednesday night. Directors and stockholders made short addresses. Officers elected were: President, Louis Boeger; vice-presidents, Edward Pancok, G. Philhofmann and Henry H. Oberschelp; secretary and treasurer, Charles W. Owen.

A NEW BOOK ON MEXICO

E. H. Blichfeldt has written a new book on Mexico, entitled, "A Mexican Journey." This up-to-date work is unquestionably the most important contribution to the literature about Mexico that has appeared since the deposition of President Diaz. Its author lived in Mexico for three years and has recently traveled there extensively. As a result he knows his subject with an intimacy to be gained only from long residence, and this is revealed in a graphic quality of description and vividness of narration that are two most desirable features in a popular book of travel.

Beginning with Yucatan and its henequin plantations, Mr. Blichfeldt makes his way through Vera Cruz, the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the city of Oaxaca, and Mitla and its famous ruins, to Mexico City. Several chapters are devoted to the capital and the government, followed by descriptions of trips to Xochimilco, "the Mexican Venice," to the Toltec pyramid at Cholula, and of an ascent of Popocatepetl. The volume closes with chapters on the people and on Mexican customs, the undeveloped resources of the country, and their exploitation by Americans and other foreign peoples. Probably to many readers the impartial summing-up of the political situation and forecasts as to the prospects of the Madero government will prove the most attractive in this eminently satisfactory book.

NEW CANADIAN BORDER STORY

Holman Day, author of a half-dozen successful tales, is out in a new story—"The Red Lane"—published by Harper Bros., New York, and beautifully illustrated. It is a dramatic tale of the border line between Canada and the United States, and it abounds in stirring situations. The characters are many and well drawn, and there is a real romance running through the book.

A WELL-TOLD STORY

Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd's "For Love of Mary Ellen" (Harper's) is one of the most attractive and most charmingly told stories of the season. It deals with the loyalty and devotion of a high-born little maid to her strangely acquired friend Mary Ellen—a veritable child of the streets, unwashed, unkempt and buffeted about by misfortunes. From these it is the mission of the more fortunate girl to afford relief by ingenious and practical devices interestingly described in the narrative.

NEW FIELD FOR BANK ACTIVITY

A new field for banker activity, especially for state associations, would be along the lines of state, county and municipal extravagances. The taxpayer could stand the graft if the balance of the money were spent honestly for needed improvements and without administrative waste. It is said that:

"Shortly before Mr. E. H. Harriman died he began to take an interest in municipal problems, and remarked that if our municipalities were to reach their highest possibilities of usefulness, it would be necessary for them to adopt uniform systems of accounting, in order that it might be possible for one city to compare its cost units with those of another city, with the same ease with which one railroad could compare its cost of hauling a ton of freight a mile with what it cost another railroad to do the same thing. This remark showed Mr. Harriman's genius for going to the heart of a situation. If such comparisons were possible between cities, a flood of light would be let in upon incompetence or mismanagement in the municipal departments."

A few months ago a fine boulevard pavement was laid along the entire property frontage of the South Shore Country Club of Chicago. The passage of the street was blocked for a month by the pavers. Finally it was finished and they left at evening. Next morning a new gang, city sewer men, arrived and tore up the whole half mile of beautiful pavement and it was six weeks before it was relaid, and oh! the relaying. You wouldn't recognize it. There may have been graft in the contracts—both of them—but there was more loss in needless waste and the boulevard was closed most of the summer. There are thousands of such cases in Chicago every year, and as many elsewhere. The remedy has been suggested by Mr. Harriman. Uniform accounting would point the way. Cities then would be graded just as corporations now are upon the efficiency of their systems. Ten years ago a president of a rich, western railway was consulting with the newly elected president of a poor railway. The new president told how he was going to put all his earnings into improved rolling stock, into better rails, into stronger bridges and in reducing grades and straightening curves. The "rich" president laughed, as he said: "Put your money in the bank. I've twenty-five millions there." Both kept hard at it and along came the uniform accounting system, which enables railroads to know just what it costs for ton mileage on all the roads. Other comparisons are possible. It was found that operating expenses on the road where the improvements had been made by the new president are but 32 per cent of gross, whereas on the road which had the $25,000,000 in bank it costs 45 per cent and the surplus is used up. Cities should be compelled by law to use a uniform system of accounting so that comparisons with resulting economies can be made.

OUR DELEGATE TO LETHBRIDGE

The American delegate to the world's dry farming congress at Lethbridge, Alta., was W. D. Vincent, a busy, progressive banker at Spokane. He was the "long-distance" delegate to the first Chapman conference at Minneapolis-St. Paul, and is a member of the A. B. A. committee on agriculture and education. He has done a world of work in his own and adjoining states, of which he modestly says little in his splendid address, printed elsewhere in this paper. He tells in quiet, effective phrase of our modest beginnings, as bankers, in the work to help the farmer and to improve the country school. He is less technical than some speakers on the subject, but goes straight to the point with figures and convincing logic. The matter has not been better nor more briefly stated by anyone, and the Lethbridge literature has been improved and enriched by Mr. Vincent's contribution, representing the bankers of America.

FINANCING THE FARMERS

That there is need for an improved system of agricultural credit in this country will not be denied. In its perplexity the country has turned to Europe in an effort to find such a system as will be applicable to its needs. The all-important problem with which we now are confronted is the determination of just how far some of the plans recommended by those who have made a study of them are applicable to our needs.

President Taft in a letter which he has sent out to the governors expresses the belief that a co-operative society, as embraced by the Raiffeisen banks of Germany, would about fill the bill, stating, however, that they should be under state control. He also advocates land-mortgage banks under state charters, similar to the Landschaften of Germany, and believes that there should be uniform state legislation governing their operation. He also favors national land-mortgage banks with power to guarantee and market the guaranteed debenture bonds of the state mortgage banks.

It is apprehended that some difficulties might be encountered in the adoption of the plan as set forth in the President's letter. It probably would be hard to form co-operative societies, and especially among farmers. Then, again, it would be difficult to secure uniform state legislation, and the jurisdiction of congress to give a unified effect to such a system under state laws, by means of national agencies, may well be doubted.

While there is great need for some sort of remedial legislation, this ought not to be brought about without a comprehensive study of the subject from all its angles. It is a matter of great importance to the country and one which ought not to be acted upon without due deliberation.

AN EXPERT ON PRIVATE BANKS

One of the most successful of the state commissioners of banking is B. L. Gill of Texas. He has just rounded out another year with a comprehensive report to the governor in which he makes many recommendations for further improvement in the banking laws of the state. In the course of the report he takes up the question of private banks and their relation to the public. On this important and interesting (especially in Illinois) subject Commissioner Gill says:

I wish to speak seriously on the subject of supervision of private banks. I realize that it is a discussion which is usually approached with caution, and which, if misunderstood, or not followed by proper action, may lead to confusion. I am convinced that the time has come for this matter to be frankly handled and intelligently dealt with. The people who deal with banks have a right in this day and time, and under existing conditions, to know that they are being properly conducted and under the control and supervision of some competent delegated authority, and no well managed private bank should object to this. Indeed, I am willing to go further than this, and say that private banks should not be permitted in Texas, and in saying this I do so with the knowledge that we have in this state a number of such banks that have been here for many years, successfully conducted; but the times and the public, and even such banks themselves, are ready to demand this in the interest of good banking and good public policy, for modern banking absolutely depends upon the confidence that mutually exists between the bank and its customer. This idea is not new or original on my part. Agitation for this is a live subject to-day in nearly all of the states where private banks are not already prohibited, and applications are constantly being received by this department for the conversion of private banks into state banks, because of the demand of the public and the benefit to the bank itself. I have uniformly declined to permit a state bank to open in any community where the organizers also controlled a private bank for obvious reasons. Quite recently a party who controlled a small state bank was refused permission to convert three private banks he owned into state banks, because of their condition and his record, and the result was they all failed on the same day with about sixty thousand dollars deposits, and it is not believed the depositors will realize anything, while the depositors of the state bank closed

GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

The recent merger of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York and the Standard Trust Company of New York, with the accompanying increase in the former company's capital from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, makes possible an exhibition of figures which places the Guaranty Trust Company among the leaders of the world's banking institutions. According to their statement as of October 16th, following the merger, the deposits are $189,000,000. The capital and surplus are increased to $10,000,000 and $20,000,000 respectively, while the resources now total $247,000,000.

The company is erecting a monumental building at 140 Broadway and expects to occupy it early in the coming year. Until that time it is understood that the business of the Standard Trust Company will be continued at 25 Broad Street, and that office known as the Standard Branch of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York.

FRISCO OFFICIALS INTERESTED IN AGRICULTURE

Frisco railway officials are following state agricultural fairs throughout the southern states, endeavoring to enlist a wide interest in available lands in Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana. F. S. White, the agricultural commissioner of the road at Memphis, stated that after having traveled over other districts of North America, southern lands, considering their present cost and high productivity, still are among the cheapest lands on the continent.

BANKING LAW REFORM IN TEXAS

M. L. Riddle, the beautiful and talented lady-editor of the Texas Record, in a paper recently read before Panhandle bankers at their convention held in Plainville, Texas, pointed out the urgent necessity of making some changes in the bank guaranty law of that state. In Texas the insurance and banking department are under one head. For four years an effort has been made to get a much-needed assistant for the insurance department, but as yet this has not been accomplished, and it is doubtful whether the next legislature will give the assistant or not. The commissioner has charge of over seven hundred banks and four hundred and sixty-six insurance companies. Thus, it will be seen that the incumbent of that office should be a man of considerable caliber and ability. As Miss Riddle expresses it, he should not be a "lightweight." The office also should be free from political influences. The position of banking and insurance commissioner in Texas is the poorest paid of any in the United States, the salary being only $3,000 per year, a compensation which is not at all commensurate with the ability required to be possessed by him nor the responsibilities necessary for him to assume.

Miss Riddle believes that the banking board should have some control over the number of banks in a town, and have discretion as to whether or not a bank should be organized in such and such a place or not. She believes that the minimum capitalization should be fixed at $25,000. As a result of the stringent laws recently enacted in such states as Kansas and Oklahoma, a host of the unworthy eliminated from those states now is flocking to Texas, which makes necessary some sort of corrective measures. Some of the new $10,000 banks are in localities being organized by land companies, who desire to have a bank as an inducement to people to come and settle upon their land. This tends toward the establishment of unstable institutions, with oftentimes incompetent, if not dishonest, men in charge of their affairs.

Frequently people wish to organize a bank in communities which already are oversupplied with banking facilities. The men who are back of the enterprises have little or no financial responsibility, and about the only thing they have upon which to base the right to operate a bank is an unlimited amount of enthusiasm. Enthusiasm, however, would not be considered as an asset by an examiner, and in case of insolvency would not pay off the claims of the creditors. It therefore is important that applications for the organization of banks should be the subject of the strictest kind of investigation and scrutiny in order that people who deliver over their money for safekeeping may have some sort of assurance that they will be able to get it back when they want it, and that there may be eliminated from the profession of banking that class of individuals whose acts have a tendency to bring the business into disrepute.

THRIVING OREGON BANK

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Burns, Harney county, Oregon, the surplus fund of that institution was increased from $70,000 to $75,000. This, with the bank's capital of $25,000, gives it a working capital of $100,000. The First National now carries the largest surplus fund of any national bank in the country of like capitalization. It has enjoyed a steady growth since its organization, and as a result of the courteous treatment accorded its customers and its reputation for conservative management, it has the respect and confidence of the public.

TAMPICO BANKER KILLED

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

CHICAGO CHAPTER, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF BANKING

W. W. WALTON

Captain P. D. O'Brien, who has served the Chicago Police Department for the past thirty-one years, gave us a very interesting talk in regard to criminals and as to their manner of operation. The Captain's many years' service in the department places him in an exceptionally good position intelligently to handle the subject, and he certainly acquainted the chapter boys with some very novel and clever swindles that are being perpetrated daily. Criminals, especially those who use their wits to make their living, are the smartest and best equipped body of men in business. The Captain classified his lecture, as follows:

Forgers are divided into four classes, the "capitalist," who furnishes the paper on which to commit the forgery; the forger, who is known as the "scratcher," and who does the actual forging; the middleman or go-between, and the man who places the paper in circulation. Their work is all done very secretly.

Bank robbers and safe-blowers are considered the most successful and dangerous yeggman. The Captain traced the history of this class of criminals down to John Yegg, a gypsy, who was the most successful yeggman in his time. They are sworn to the strictest secrecy and will not hesitate to kill any of their number who divulges any of their transactions in camp. They generally work in fours.

The Captain considers the pick-pocket one of the greatest nuisances in the criminal profession. They generally work on crowded cars and in gangs of five. He told of an amusing incident of a man who was "wise" to the game of several of this class of criminals, telling them of his being aware of their mission and that nothing was doing, and how, after taking his grip and alighting from the car he was very much surprised to discover that they had very deftly "lifted" over one hundred dollars from his trousers pocket.

He also briefly dealt on what he terms "the real burglar," the most dangerous criminal traveling; the hold-up man, usually composed of the unemployed and the loafer around cheap saloons; wire tappers and fake fights and wrestlers.

Owing to the many different forms in which confidence games are operated, the Captain did not follow up the ways and means of many of them, but cited several very clever tricks.

Those who had the opportunity of attending this lecture should be well enough informed as to these various criminal operations as to be guarded and to minimize their chances for being victimized in any swindle of like nature.

PROMOTIONS IN SOUTHERN BANK

Several important promotions have been made by the directors of the Citizens and Southern Bank, Savannah, Ga. Cashier Gordon L. Grover has been made vice-president; Assistant Cashier George B. Clarke has been advanced to the position of cashier, and W. B. Spann, Jr., and I. S. Ferguson, both clerks, have been made assistant cashiers. Recently Assistant Cashier R. L. Rockwell went to Augusta to take charge of a branch bank of the Citizens and Southern, leaving a vacancy.

PITTSBURGH CHAPTER

The spirit of good-fellowship permeated the Norse room at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Saturday, October 12th, when, after a day filled with entertainment, a banquet was given by the Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, in honor of the visiting guests of the Cleveland Chapter, who came for a two-day stay. After the banquet the visitors and the entertainers went to the Grand Opera House, where the whole first floor had been reserved for them, and later viewed "Pittsburgh at Night" from the roof of the Oliver building. This visit was a reciprocity affair, the Cleveland Chapter having entertained a large number of Pittsburgh bankers at Cleveland in June. About 152 visitors arrived in Sewickley from Cleveland on a special train Saturday noon, and a luncheon was given at the Y. M. C. A. At 1:30 the ladies of the party were taken in autos through Sewickley Heights to the Country Club.

The tennis matches were the first events on the program, Pittsburgh taking five out of nine in the singles. In the doubles the contestants tied. In what both victors and vanquished branded a "ripping good game of baseball," the Pittsburgh Chapter won by a score of 4 to 1. And then, just to show that they were in earnest, the Pittsburgh Chapter politely won the golf matches.

The visitors and the Pittsburgh men boarded the train and came into the city, going at once to the Fort Pitt. B. O. Hill, president of the Pittsburgh Chapter, presided at the banquet and Henry A. Williams, national bank examiner, was toastmaster. Addresses were made by Peter Slach, president of the Cleveland Chapter; Henry Pratt of Cleveland, a member of the executive council of the American Institute of Banking, and Louis J. Kauffman, ex-president of the Cleveland Chapter. Original songs and yells livened the occasion.

Sunday the visitors were taken through the city in automobiles and members of the local chapter acting as guides. In the afternoon they attended the organ recital at Carnegie Music Hall and left Sunday evening for Cleveland. The entertainment was under the direction of Harry E. Hebrank, chairman of the general committee; G. A. Stephenson, chairman of the golf committee; W. G. Gundelfinger, chairman of the tennis committee, and F. G. Ehman, chairman of the baseball committee.

B. O. Hill, of the Second National Bank of Pittsburgh, chairman of Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, has received a challenge from the Cincinnati Chapter for a debate at the latter city on February 12. The invitation will be accepted and arrangements made later.

LOUISIANA BANK TO LIQUIDATE

New Roads, La.—The First National Bank, which has been closed since Sept. 28th, on account of a run on the bank, at a meeting of the board of directors has decided to liquidate. Thomas M. Thornton, national bank examiner, who has been investigating the books of the bank, has been appointed receiver. It is reported that all depositors will be paid in full. The bank is capitalized at $25,000.

BANK INAUGURATION IN GUANTÁNAMO

BY F. O. PÉREZ

The city of Guantánamo, in eastern Cuba, was the scene of unusual festivity recently, by reason of the inauguration of a new building for the National Bank of Cuba branch in that locality. Guantánamo is in the heart of a rich agricultural region, which, though less than fifty miles from Santiago, has until recently been quite isolated, owing to the lack of railroad and other transportation facilities. Large American investments and the introduction of new industries there have made it an important competitive field for banking in these latter days, and the opening of a new building for the National Bank comes as a natural sequence to the new industrial development.

At the banquet given in honor of the occasion, several prominent speakers made addresses in Spanish, including one of welcome by Señor Serrano Zayas, mayor of the town, and other local authorities, to which William H. Morales, secretary of the National Bank of Cuba, responded in behalf of the institution as follows:

Address of William H. Morales

"The president and board of directors of the National Bank of Cuba send from Havana a cordial greeting to the authorities, friends and patrons of our institution in Guantánamo, congratulating them for the spirit of local progress which has made possible the dedication of a modern building to meet the financial needs of this community.

"The inauguration of a rich and ornate building equipped with banking improvements of latest type means more than the expansion of business by a credit institution. It is a public avowal of the confidence felt by the banking interests of this country and abroad in the stability of economic Cuba, and of a desire by the National Bank to place at the disposition of its patrons the best facilities possible.

"The five hundred miles of distance between this city and Havana have been greatly reduced in point of time within the last decade. It is an old adage that in the trail of the railroads the banks are established, and these, as centers for the circulation of money and credit, become powerful agencies in building up a community. In the case of Guantánamo it is gratifying to note that the rule has been fully confirmed. When the National Bank of Cuba opened a branch here seven years ago, the city was secluded from the other centers of population, whereas to-day it stands in close touch with them all, forming part of the great network of branches through which the resources of the country are circulated.

Experience has shown that in Cuba the system of branch banking is by far the most practical that has been tried. By its means, the funds of a single institution are available for the various localities, in an effective and economic manner.

No Monetary Panics in Cuba

Attention has often-times been drawn to the fact that in Cuba there are no monetary panics such as occasionally occur in larger countries. In 1907, for example, when the great financial centers of the world were shaken by the acute crisis of that year, this country sent abroad

We invite the Accounts of Banks, Bankers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Individuals

Resources, Twenty-five Million Dollars

$14,675,000 in cash, as shown by the official statistics. The reason of this remarkable condition may be found in the fact that in Cuba the movement of money and credit is rendered safe and rapid by means of a central banking institution with local ramifications and strong connections abroad, which supplies funds according to varying needs. The business elements here possess, moreover, a feeling of uniform confidence in the financial men and institutions of the country.

It is needless to go at length into statistics in order to show the progress of Cuban banking in recent years. As a result of the increase of its capital from $1,000,000 to a capital and reserve of over $6,000,000, the National Bank of Cuba has placed more than $38,000,000 of aggregate assets in circulation within the Island, as shown by its balance sheet, as a guaranty to depositors against all contingencies. The automatic movement of this volume of assets throughout the twenty-seven commercial centers where the bank has branches is ample demonstration of the beneficial influence of modern banking in Cuba.

Chapter Work in Cuba

There is another aspect of our banking experience which has found popular sympathy and support, and that is the interest shown by the institution in the intellectual progress of its men. In Havana a group of young bank men organized three years ago Cuba Chapter of the American Institute of Banking as a branch of the central organization in the United States. To the president of our institution we are indebted for the handsome suite of offices which are the headquarters of Cuba Chapter. There the study of themes on banking and finance is pursued daily, in connection with the work of practical banking which is essential to a full understanding of the business in Cuba. The value of this instruction can be appreciated when it is considered that our various branch managers are taken from employees of the bank, who are thus trained in the work of theory combined with practice.

It has long been the custom to send delegates from Cuba to the important banking conventions held in the United States from time to time, and our institution has had the honor of sending three delegates abroad so far this year. The importance of having Cuba represented at these conventions is at once apparent, because it means a knowledge of outside conditions and closer relations between our bankers and those of the United States, which could not be cultivated in any other way.

Predicts Great Future for Guantánamo

We venture to predict a great future for Guantánamo. The Panama Canal, which will soon be open to traffic, is no doubt destined to exercise a strong influence over this part of Cuba, by bringing it into contact with important foreign markets. Considering the great potential wealth of this region and the influx of capital which is constantly taking place, it is beyond peradventure that the city which it has been our honor to visit on this occasion is soon to become a distributing point for the products of eastern Cuba.

TWO NEW BOOKS FROM PAGE

L. C. Page & Co., Boston, has issued two new popular novels for the seasonal demand. "Miss Billy's Decision," by Eleanor H. Porter, with "Billy" in this instance being a very dainty and pretty pink-cheeked girl, with curly hair and an engaging smile. She was but eighteen when she began to disturb the quiet and dignity of a Beacon Street household of the three Henshaw boys. Its romance—lots of it—and the characters hold the attention. It is a most readable book.

"Chronicles of Avonlea," by L. M. Montgomery, author of "Ann of Green Gables" and other stories.

The highest literary authorities have commended Miss Montgomery's tales of "Ann Shirley," the late Mark Twain being her chief admirer. The new story easily is the par, if not better, than any of its predecessors, which is saying a great deal.

"THE PASSIN'-ON PARTY" BY EFFIE GRAHAM

Bound in rough cloth and neatly boxed for gift purposes, is the new tale by Effie Graham entitled "The Passin'-on Party." It is published by the well-known house of A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago. Aunt June's reception, or "passin' on party," as she calls it, was a great success. All day long white folks and black passed before the bed where she lay ill. Everyone was there, from the mayor down to Rastus Moore, the rag picker, and his crazy wife. Poor old Aunt June enjoyed it thoroughly, even though she knew it was a "sure 'nough passin' on party" for her. The description of it all will cause many a smile, and perhaps just a suspicion of a tear.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

Omaha

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

"Bankers could not ask for better conditions than exist in the Central West at this time," said J. R. Dominick, president of the Traders National of Kansas City, to a representative of THE CHICAGO BANKER a few days ago. "I believe that the crops have actually exceeded our earlier estimates which were conservative on the theory that it is best to be on the safe side. From letters received recently I am satisfied that the farmers and the small country bankers and merchants are enjoying more real and solid prosperity than has been experienced for at least four years past. In addition to the abundant harvests is the co-ordinate circumstance that prices for all farm products are high and the demand is such as to indicate stiff prices throughout the winter. The demand for money to handle crops has fallen off, as was to have been expected, but with the farmers banking their material surpluses, other business concerns are planning expansion and thus money is in constant demand at satisfactory terms. Practically all of the banks are reporting heavy increases in deposits and this situation doubtless will continue. Jobbers and manufacturers report that merchants everywhere in this territory are filling out their stocks, which were allowed to run low during the past few years. I believe also that the outlook for the holiday business this year is very bright. After several years of pretty close figuring on account of short crops, our people are now prepared to make up for lost time and will buy generously."

Increase in Clearings

All of the principal cities of the Central West are making satisfactory increases in their clearings at this time of the year, indicating that crops are moving and that general business is active. For the week ending October 17th, the Kansas City clearings were $63,342,000, being an increase of 10.1 per cent over the corresponding week a year ago. Kansas City holds to sixth place, following St. Louis, Pittsburgh and San Francisco occasionally have usurped sixth place, but neither has held it for more than a single week at a time. Omaha also enjoyed good clearings with $20,064,000, an increase of 10.4 per cent, while St. Joseph had $7,002,000, indicating an increase of 4.4 per cent. Fort Worth has been climbing up in the list, now having $11,012,000, which is an increase of more than 14 per cent over the corresponding week a year ago.

Death of Prominent Banker

A. Walter Byers, a director of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce, and for many years a prominent financier of Kansas City, died last week at his home. Mr. Byers was born on a farm near Oil City, Pa., in 1847. In his boyhood he removed with his parents to Nashua, Ia., where he grew to manhood. He was educated in the public schools and at Upper Iowa University. In the early '70s he became interested with his brother George in Texas ranch lands. The two bought heavily in the western part of the state and retained their holdings until the demand for land induced them to subdivide and sell to settlers. While in the ranch business they founded the towns of Petrolia and Byers upon their lands, established banks, built a railroad and were active in many other industries. In 1893 Mr. Byers came to Kansas City, where he built one of the handsomest residences of the city, and he became active in all movements of a financial nature for the development of Kansas City.

Group 3 at St. Joseph

Scientific farming and general denunciation of the proposed amendment to the Missouri constitution establishing the single tax system in the state occupied much of the time of Group 3 of the Missouri Bankers Association which met in St. Joseph last week. One of the most important of the addresses was that of Former Governor W. J. Bailey, of Atchison, Kan., who discussed agricultural topics at length. He declared that the solution of the high cost of living problem lies entirely with the farmer and that, as the farmer depends upon the banker, the banker also is responsible to a great extent, and there should be a closer relationship between them. Following this address came those of Former Governor Francis of St. Louis and W. C. Gordon of Moberly, who discussed the same question. Sam Jordan, a farm expert from Pettis county, spoke along the same general lines, taking the viewpoint of the farmer. Among those at the meeting were: R. F. Newhall, First National, Chicago; Phil C. Kidd, St. Louis; R. M. Cook, Kansas City; M. A. Taylor, National Stock Yards Bank, Ill.; R. W. Stumpe, St. Louis; S. M. Jordan, Sedalia; A. O. Klauser, Kansas City; W. C. Gordon, Moberly; J. P. Jennings, Moberly; H. A. Dillon, Kansas City; N. B. Taylor, St. Louis; A. J. Culbertson, Stewartsville, Mo.; S. D. Call, DeKalb, Mo.; John W. Page, DeKalb; R. D. Head, DeKalb; J. O. Ellis, Kansas City; J. L. Johnston, Kansas City; B. M. Davidson, Dearborn, Mo.; C. C. Jones, Kansas City; E. B. Clark, St. Louis; W. L. Buchle, Kansas City; Charles E. Waite, Kansas City; C. A. Chapman, Kansas City; J. F. Meade, Kansas City; G. P. Reichle, Kansas City. John Broadus of St. Joseph was re-elected chairman of the group and H. Y. Montgomery of Skidmore was elected secretary.

Group 11 to Meet at Springfield

Prominent bankers from all parts of Missouri will attend the meeting of Group 11 of the Missouri Bankers Association at Springfield, October 29th. Special cars from St. Louis and Kansas City will carry representatives from those cities. Among the St. Louis bankers who have notified the secretary of their intention of attending are: J. A. Lewis, cashier, and George A. Baker, assistant cashier, of the National Bank of Commerce; E. B. Clair-Avery, assistant cashier of the Merchants Laclede National; C. W. Klenschmidt, of the State National; Owen J. Sullivan, cashier of the National Stock Yards Bank, and R. W. Hawkins, assistant cashier of the Central National. The Kansas City car will carry W. L. Buechle, vice-president, and J. F. Meade, assistant cashier of the Southwest National Bank of Commerce; Amos Gipson, vice-president of the National Reserve Bank; J. R. Dominick, president of the Traders National; Jerome Thralls, manager of the Kansas City Clearing House Association; George B. Harrison, Jr., vice-president of the New England National, and R. C. Menefee of the Commerce Trust Company.

Dr. W. S. Woods In Kansas City

Dr. W. S. Woods, formerly president of the National Bank of Commerce, and a pioneer banker of Kansas City and the Southwest, was in Kansas City last week looking after some of his more important investments. For five years Dr. Woods has been in retirement, spending most of his time in San Diego, Cal. Although well advanced in years, Dr. Woods continues to take a keen interest in financial developments, and is an important factor in a number of Kansas City banks. The present Southwest National Bank of Commerce and the Commerce Trust Company represent the splendid fruition of Dr. Woods' planning years ago when he organized the old National Bank of Commerce and built it up by consolidations and absorptions until it was the leading financial institution in the Southwest. Dr. Woods sat in the directors' room of the Southwest National Bank and declared renewed faith in that institution and held an impromptu reception. Many of his old friends and business associates upon learning that he was in the bank called upon him. Dr. Woods will return to San Diego for the winter.

Want Special Law for Punishment of Robbers

Stimulated into activity by the alarming series of bank and express robberies that have taken place in the state within recent weeks, the Oklahoma bankers are thoroughly aroused to the need of more drastic legislation. They are uniting to demand that the next session of the legislature pass a special law relating to the punishment of robbers who use fire arms or high explosives, and T. P. Martin, Jr., president of the Stock Yards National of Oklahoma City, and chairman of the legislative committee of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, is now formulating this demand in a specific statement. While the Oklahoma Bankers Association has been doing everything in its power to run down bank robbers and bring them to justice, it has been unable to accomplish much. Oklahoma is to-day infested with several gangs of yeggmen who are spreading terror among the smaller bankers and express agents. Within the past few weeks half a dozen of the boldest robberies in the history of the state have taken place. According to Mr. Martin, Oklahoma is exposed to depredations that have almost ceased in Kansas and Texas on account of the death penalty recently enacted in those states for bank robbery. "The bankers are taxed heavily on their capital stock, their surplus and their profits," said Mr. Martin, "but they are not heavily protected. It is the little banker who needs protection—the little fellow in the small town. He serves the people the best and the longest, because he is closer to the farmer and provides funds for crop necessities; the big bank in the metropolitan center with electric alarms and watchful police is not so much afflicted by the robber. Express companies operating out of Oklahoma City have instructions from their main offices not to receive valuable packages and cash shipments for points more than 100 miles distant from Oklahoma City, if the shipments have to be carried on night trains, unless there are large local offices at the point to which the shipment is consigned. This causes many of the country bankers much trouble and delay, as well as great uncertainty, in getting necessary cash shipments from the big banks."

Central West Notes

Thornton Cooke, vice-president of the Fidelity Trust Company of Kansas City, has received notice from P. S. Babcock of New York, secretary of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association, that he has been elected vice-president of the trust company section to represent the Missouri division in the association.

Finis E. Marshall, formerly national bank examiner, and at one time president of the Phenix National of New York, was in Kansas City last week calling upon many friends in the financial district.

W. W. Timmer, assistant cashier of the Continental National of Salt Lake City, is in Kansas City on a vacation, his family living here.

The safe in the Citizens Bank of Hutchins, Tex., near Dallas, was dynamited one day last week and $1,000 in currency was taken. The robbers escaped.

The Hennessey State Bank of Hennessey, Okla., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000.

P. J. Gleisner, cashier of the Abilene National Bank, Abilene, Kan., was in Kansas City last week to undergo a slight operation.

The Texas department of banking has approved the following reserve agents: for the First State Bank and Trust Company of Snyder, the First State Bank and Trust Company of Abilene; for the First State Bank of Donna, the Union National of Houston; for the Citizens Guaranty State Bank of Lindale, the Stockyards National of Fort Worth; for the La Vernia State Bank of Kress, the Citizens Bank and Trust Company of Austin; for the First State Bank of Ellinger, the Chase National of New York; for the Markham State Bank of Markham, the Central National of St. Louis; for the Evant State Bank of Evant, the Seaboard National of New York; for the Farmers State Bank of Burkburnett, Hanover National of New York; for the First State Bank of Robstown, the State Bank and Trust Co. of San Antonio; for the Brownsville Bank and Trust Company of Brownsville, the State Bank and Trust Company of San Antonio; for the Citizens Bank and Trust Company of Austin, the Commonwealth National of Kansas City.

The following out of town bankers were in Kansas City's financial district last week: Lyman J. Gray, president of the Oklahoma State Bank of Guthrie; J. R. Burrow, vice-president, and E. E. Ames, cashier, of the Central National of Topeka; W. B. Kane, cashier of the First National, Cartersville, Mo.; J. H. Paul, cashier of the Paul Bank of Slayton, Tex.; Arthur Ward, cashier of the Fergus County Bank, Lewiston, Mont.; C. D. Sample, cashier of the Citizens National, Fort Scott, Kan.; L. B. Beck, vice-president and treasurer of the Continental Trust Company of Denver.

Toledo, O.—Bankers of northwestern Ohio, members of the third division, Ohio Bankers Association, numbering several hundred, were in Toledo Wednesday at their regular annual conference. Sessions were held in Hotel Secor, while bank officials from Defiance, Sandusky, Williams, Henry, Fulton, Wood, Seneca, Ottawa and Lucas counties formed the personnel of the assembly. One business session was entertained at a matinee performance at Keith's theatre. The day was concluded by a banquet served at 7:30 p. m. in the banquet hall of Hotel Secor. T. C. Stevens, vice-president of the Second National Bank, was toastmaster, and toasts were responded to by Bishop Schrembs, Frank Mulholland, George W. Stevens, Howard I. Shepherd and Isaac Kinsey.

At the business meeting held Wednesday morning, R. D. Sneath, of the Commercial National Bank, Tiffin, acted as chairman. After official reports, Charles H. Allen spoke of "The Land We Live In." Thomas H. Tracey read a paper on "How Will the Recent Constitutional Amendments Affect Ohio Banks?" The third and last paper was presented by Stacy B. Rankin, of South Charleston, and pertained to "The Group System: Has It Been Beneficial to the Association?"

H. B. Peters, of Lancaster, was elected president of Group 5 on the occasion of the annual meeting held October 15 at Lancaster. W. W. Gard, of Newark, was chosen secretary-treasurer. The executive board comprises the following: R. W. Boyd, London; C. B. Slick, Granville; L. F. Kiesewetter, Columbus; E. T. Pollock, Delaware; F. S. Sperry, Utica. One of the addresses of the day was delivered by Dr. W. O. Thompson, the able president of Ohio State University.

Secretary Rankin, of the Ohio Bankers Association, announces that the meeting of Group 4, Ohio Bankers Association, will be held at Washington, C. H., Ohio, on October 29th instead of the date and place previously announced.

Group 1 of the Ohio Bankers Association, which embraces the Cincinnati section, has accepted an invitation of the Hamilton Clearing House Association to hold its annual convention there. The date was fixed for Tuesday, November 12th.

The Milford National Bank announces that W. E. Knapp, who has been cashier of the first National Bank at Morrow, has been selected cashier, succeeding F. L. Cook, who is now the vice-president of the Second National.

PRIVATE BANK BECOMES STATE BANK

Northwest Letter

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

The "I told you so" talkers are busy over developments in the St. Paul financial institutions gradual merger. The board of directors of the Northwestern Trust Company have accepted the offer of $250 a share for the company made by the First National of St. Paul. The deal involves more than $500,000, according to reports. The directors took only four minutes to settle the matter. Stockholders have been asked to send in stock certificates for transfer. Of the entire amount 83 per cent is reported by St. Paul people, all of which is pledged. The other 17 per cent is not expected to block the deal. It is surmised that the company will stay where it is, and it is expected that the First will put up an addition on the lot adjoining its building, bought to keep away bad looking buildings, it was said last week. The present building on the lot is a blacksmith shop. F. A. Fogg resigned from the vice presidency of the trust company and the directorate. He had been director with the company since it started in May, 1903. He is reported to have opposed the sale. Other resignations may follow in the company and some are rumored from the Second National, which James J. Hill has bought. The trust company has $200,000 capital and $40,000 undivided profits. Officers are: President, E. H. Bailey; vice-president, Haydn S. Cole; secretary, Ira C. Oehler; treasurer, John Townsend.

Heads Second National

W. B. Dean has been elected president of the Second National, St. Paul, to succeed the late George C. Power. Louis W. Hill, chairman of the board of the Great Northern road, was elected vice-president to succeed Mr. Dean. C. H. Buckley and Edwin Mott remain cashier and assistant cashier. The directorate was reduced from nine to five and is as follows: James J. Hill, Louis W. Hill, William B. Dean, J. J. Toomey, C. H. Buckley. Mr. Dean has been a stockholder in the bank since 1864 and a director since 1873. Three years ago he was made vice-president and he has had charge of the bank since the death of the president. Mr. Dean retired from business five years ago. He was a founder of the hardware firm of Nicols, Dean & Gregg, which began in 1860 as Nicols & Dean. The former directors resigned and Mr. Dean and Mr. Buckley are the only hold-overs. Other directors were Joseph McKibbin, Frank Schlick, Charles Schuneman, F. G. Ingersoll, G. A. Archer, A. M. P. Cowley.

Four to 6 Per Cent Money for Farmer

From reliable sources it is learned that if Mr. Hill effects a great financial institution in St. Paul it will act as a great aid to the farmers of Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana, where rates for money range from 8 to 10 per cent. It is said Mr. Hill believes in 4 to 6 per cent money for the farmer. St. Paul bankers are inclined to the idea that 75 per cent of the First National stock has been pledged to Mr. Hill if terms and price are right. This is said to be $350. It is understood that if a deal is effected, E. H. Bailey, president of the First, will manage the Hill banks.

Henry L. Stimson in St. Paul

John R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National Bank of St. Paul, has been entertaining Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war. When Mr. Stimson arrived in St. Paul on his way to Heron Lake, Minn., for a hunt, he slipped out to the home of Mr. Mitchell, 370 Summit Avenue. After breakfast at the house he returned to the bank, where he conferred with political leaders of his party.

In the Limelight

F. A. Gross, president of the German-American Bank, and G. F. Orde, vice-president of the First National, are in the Minneapolis public eye. As member of the Civic & Commerce Association Mr. Orde, through the committee of which he is chairman, is going to peer into the holes and find out what workmen are prospecting for when they suddenly swoop down on a fine roadway and begin to dig it up with picks and shovels. Mr. Orde is going to find if they are after a pirate's hoard, or whether they are geologists or archæologists looking for subterranean traces of Atlantis. It has always been a mystery to Mr. Orde why, as soon as a fine new pavement is laid, workmen begin to attack it savagely. His committee proposes to change the old order and have necessary holes in pavements made by the city and repairs charged to the property. It is the plan to assure the people that when they see men looking like '49ers start a hole in front of their property, that the city is doing it officially and that the pavement will be restored.

Mr. Gross led the little German band in a North Side jollification Monday night, when the people of the district opened a new row of ornamental electric street lamps. The bank is one of the landmark institutions of that part of the city and as head of it Mr. Gross refused to let an important position like bandmaster for the parade get away from him. Mr. Gross made a hit in a line of work which is likely to slate him for appearance at future bank conventions.

Elected President Farmers & Mechanics Savings

T. B. Janney, president of Janney, Semple, Hill & Co., wholesale hardware, has been elected president of the Farmers & Mechanics Savings Bank, Minneapolis, succeeding the late John DeLaittre. O. C. Wyman, first vice-president, was elected, but declined for business reasons. W. H. Northup, North Star Woolen Mills, was made second vice-president. A successor to the trusteeship made vacant by the death of Mr. DeLaittre, was not filled.

Security National Stock Reaches Highest Point

Security National stock reached the highest point in Northwestern history Wednesday when it was offered at 505. Standing bids of $475 have had no offers. First National was $300.50 a share bid and $305 a share asked; Northwestern National, $298 bid and $301 asked; Scandinavian American, $141 bid; Metropolitan National, $138 asked; Hennepin County, $265 bid, and St. Anthony Falls, $150; German American, $200; Commercial National, $125; East Side, $130; Union State, $115; South Side, $200; Minneapolis State, $130, and Minneapolis Trust Company, $150 bid.

Scandinavian American National to Have Balcony

The Scandinavian American National Bank, Minneapolis, has decided to build a balcony around the back end of the lobby. The room is needed for the bookkeeping and statement departments. A telautograph will keep the departments in touch with the tellers. The bank is going to have a ventilation system too. The Scandinavian bank building was erected several years ago for the Nicollet National and was later taken over by the Swedish American National. Both banks are out of existence. The building is the first exclusive bank building erected in Minneapolis and is regarded as admirably adapted for the purpose.

Grain Yield Double That of Last Year

Having threshed and stowed 22,000 bushels of grain, Nels Larson, Dazey, N. D., came to Minneapolis to spend some money, his first vacation in years. He told Cashier J. S. Pomeroy of the Security National that he believes himself entitled to a rest. His grain yield was double that of last year, with practically the same acreage sown. Mr. Larson said that not more than 40 per cent of threshing is done in the northern part of the state.

Iowa Banks May Consolidate

Initial steps have been taken to consolidate the Home Savings and the Citizens Savings Banks of Iowa Falls, Iowa. Several investors are interested in both institutions and the merger was forecast several months ago.

State Bank Resources High

State bank resources are named in a report by the Minnesota superintendent as $148,380,960.02, or $3,918,939.94 more than in June. Deposits subject to check have increased $1,864,932.86 since June to $38,443,948.26 and time certificates of deposit, which totaled $75,996,113.25 in June, now show $76,478,460.15, an increase of $482,346.90.

Savings deposits have gained materially and are $695,257.51 in excess of the total in June, the present figures of $7,002,823.54, comparing with $6,307,566.03.

Loans and discounts at $114,938,277.49, compared with $110,900,638.21 in June, indicate that the state as a whole is doing a general business much greater in volume.

Bank for Roosevelt

The First State Bank of Roosevelt is the non-partisan bank chartered by Kelsey S. Chase, superintendent of banks for Minnesota. The bank is the only one at Roosevelt. It has $10,000 capital and $2,000 surplus. Charles R. Farel is president and the cashier has the self-confident name of A. E. Abel. Mr. Chase says he does not expect depositors to lose money in the closing of the Myers State Bank at Wegdahl, Chippewa county. The bank was closed for insufficient business to support it, and because some poor loans had been made.

Will Build Home for Dependent Children

Patterned after a home for dependent children in western New York, Cattaraugus county, his boyhood residence, a building for dependent children has been ordered by A. L. Ward, millionaire banker, president of the Martin County Bank, Fairmont, Minn. Architects have been instructed to fit the plans to twenty acres near the Ward home, east of Fairmont. The building is to cost $50,000 and Mr. Ward will throw in a $100,000 endowment.

New State Banks in North Dakota

Four new state banks in North Dakota and their incorporators are: Millerton State, Stutsman county, S. F. Corwin, H. T. Graves and A. B. Denault; Northwestern State of Oakdale, Dunn county, M. S. Cuskelly, A. B. Currey, Robert L. Wilcox; Farmers State, Schaffer, Adam Hannah of Minneapolis, Rudolph Hoel of Ray and Monrad J. Olson, Charlson; First State of Buffalo Springs, J. E. Phelan, C. J. Phelan and Dugald Stewart. The capital of each bank is $40,000.

James M. Hurst, assistant cashier of the National Bank of the Republic, Chicago, has been out of the city this week on business.

OKLAHOMA INHERITANCE TAX LAW CONSTRUED

Oklahoma City, Okla., Oct. 24.—R. J. Edwards, an investment banker and dealer in public securities calls attention to a decision of the Oklahoma supreme court, handed down last May, interpreting and construing the inheritance tax law of that state. Mr. Edwards brings attention to the matter because of the attitude of many investors toward Oklahoma bonds through a misunderstanding of the law pertaining to the inheritance tax. The section of the statute which was the subject of construction and which has caused the unfavorable sentiment on the part of investors toward Oklahoma investments reads particularly in part as follows: "Upon all property in excess of $5,000 in class 1, the primary rate provided for herein shall be increased one one-hundred-twenty-fifth of 1 per centum for every one hundred dollars ($100) increase in the valuation of such excess."

Mr. Edwards says it has been urged by the critics that this tax was progressive and increased under the rule of arithmetical progression so that it might be possible, if an estate amounted to as much as a million dollars or more, for the beneficiaries to lose the entire amount and that, in fact, it would be possible for the beneficiary to become indebted to the state; in other words, that the tax rate under this rule would amount to more than the estate itself.

"The rule of application as adopted by the court is that this is not a progressive rate," says Mr. Edwards. "It simply amounts to a tax of one one-hundred-twenty-fifth of 1 per cent upon all excess property; that is, there is primarily levied a 1 per cent tax upon property up to a certain amount (the amount varying owing to the degree of relationship of the beneficiary to the testator) and that in addition to this 1 per cent there is levied upon the additional amount the additional tax of one one-hundred-twenty-fifth of 1 per cent."

Mr. Edwards says that under this interpretation he believes that the Oklahoma laws compare very favorably with the laws of other states; in fact, he considers the ruling an improvement on many of them in the point of burden which it imposes.

FIVE OF A KIND CONVICTED

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 23rd.—Five bankers who have been on trial here charged with conspiracy to defraud were found guilty to-day by a federal jury. Those convicted are: E. L. Hendrey, former president of the Memphis All Night and Day bank; H. C. Wynne, former president of the Little Rock (Ark.) All Night and Day banks met clearing house and ex-dent of the All Night and Day bank of Oklahoma City; C. A. Bonds, former president of the Kansas City All Night and Day bank, and J. H. Brooke, former director of the Memphis bank and head of a local lumber company. The charge was that all of these All Night and Day banks with clearing house and examiners requirements by an illegal exchange and substitution of collateral.

EDMONTON NEWS

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 21st.—Improvements and betterments planned by the municipality of Edmonton for 1913 and for which estimates will be brought down in November involve expenditures of between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000. This includes 10 miles of street car extensions, paving, water, telephone, electric light and sewer work and the probable installation of natural gas, to be piped from one of the fields within 50 miles of the city. City Engineer Laternel, who is working on the estimates, reports that the plan is sufficiently broad to meet the civic exigencies for 10 years. Experts are at work on civic center plans, also for a system of parks and boulevards, upon which work will begin early next year. The municipality will also complete its city hall, costing $250,000, before June 1, 1913. Other buildings, involving several hundred thousand dollars are to be in readiness the coming winter and early next spring.

No Better Field for Investments

"There is no better field for investments than western Canada," said H. C. Uhlen, head of H. C. Uhlen and Company of Chicago, dealers in municipal bonds, who was in Edmonton this week, arranging for the purchase of local securities. He is planning to take up the issue of debentures for sewer extensions, amounting to $1,000,000. In addition the city has about $1,250,000 worth of debentures that were not taken up by the London market this year.

"The fact that the English market is not absorbing Canadian municipal offerings at present gives us the opportunity," Mr. Uhlen added, "and I am now looking over the field in company with my brother, R. L. Uhlen, and our engineer, Parker D. Shepperd. We purchased recently $150,000 worth of 5 per cent securities at par from Bassano, Alta., and we may buy issues amounting to several millions of dollars from the larger cities in western Canada."

Mr. Uhlen expressed himself greatly impressed with the undeveloped agricultural resources of central Alberta, saying: "A better farming country than this would be impossible to conceive of, much less point to, and the substantial character of the development of the cities, especially Edmonton, has surpassed my expectations. The Canadian field is a new one with our house, but London's backwardness is our opportunity."

70,000,000-bushel Grain Crop Cut

Hon. Duncan Marshall, minister of agriculture, announced in Edmonton on October 18th that Alberta's 70,000,000-bushel grain crop is all cut. More than 25 per cent is threshed, with present weather conditions the granaries are filling and the railroads are busy hauling the grain to market. The crop is the best in the history of the province. How the farmers are going to feed all the rough grains, hay and straw this year is a question which the department of agriculture now has under consideration. The farmers are already trying to buy all the available stock from the ranchers for winter feeding, but even at that the feed will be a glut on the market. Many of the farmers are bringing in sheep and cattle from the States and there is no doubt that much live stock will be fed this winter.

Railroad from Coast to Coast

Sir Donold Mann, vice-president of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, said in Edmonton on October 8th that the system will be in operation from coast to coast about the middle of 1914. All the contracts have been awarded, he added, and the work is being carried ahead as rapidly as possible and will continue throughout the winter. The head of steel will be pushed forward and it is expected to have rails laid to the Yellowhead Pass before next spring. The company now has several thousand men at work on the various divisions.

Company Organized to Develop Land

E. J. Taylor and P. J. Mullin of Edmonton and F. G. Goodchild of London have organized a company, capitalized for $250,000, to develop 320 acres of land, estimated to contain 10,000,000 cubic yards of gravel, 30 miles from Edmonton. A powerful steam shovel, driven by electricity, will be used in mining and loading the gravel, for which there is an unusually big demand in Edmonton and other cities in Alberta. The company will begin operations in November, the daily output being 3,000 yards, valued at between $2.75 and $3.25 each. The highest price reached here last summer was $4.75 a cubic yard.

Forest Reserve

Advices have been received in Edmonton from Ottawa that the forestry department has decided to set aside 4,788 square miles of timber land on the shores of Lesser Slave lake as a reserve, also that a large reserve may be created on the north shore of Lac la Biche in northern Alberta. Cruisers report there is 375,000,000 feet of commercial timber available in the first named area. Five mills are operating in the district, supplying lumber to homesteaders.

Los Angeles

C. O. Anderson and Geo. Stainback have been promoted to the position of assistant cashiers of the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank, their appointment being made necessary by the new policy of the bank in keeping open from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Nelson E. Barker, vice president of the Bank of Commerce and Trust Co., San Diego, passed away October 8th. Mr. Barker was 55 years old and a native of Connecticut. He had occupied prominent positions in the banking world, having been president of the Chattanooga Savings Bank and president of the First National Bank of Birmingham, which he reorganized after the panic of 1893 and built up into one of the best in the South. From there he was called to take the vice-presidency of the Continental National Bank of Chicago, now the Continental and Commercial National Bank. In 1906 he came here on account of the illness of one of his sons, and shortly thereafter interested himself in the Bank of Commerce and Trust Co., taking the vice-presidency thereof, which position he held till the time of his death.

Pasadena.—Clearing House figures for the twelve months ending September 30th totaled $43,861,623 as against $41,166,915 for the corresponding period last year, showing an increase of about $2,600,000. For the nine months of the present year the clearing house figures amounted to $33,535,834. Last year's figures for the same period amounted to $31,- 281,911, showing an increase amounting to approximately $2,254,000.

A certificate has been granted to the Citizens Savings Bank of Pasadena to do a savings and commercial business, with an authorized subscribed and paid-in capital of $100,000. The San Ramon Valley Bank of Walnut Creek, a recently organized institution, was granted permission to establish a branch at Concord, Contra Costa County, for savings and commercial business.

Because of the doubling of its business the directors of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, Long Beach, a savings and commercial institution, have voted to increase the capital stock to $200,000. In the past year deposits have increased 100 per cent, and are now past the million mark. The present resources of the bank are $1,147,485.

At a meeting of the directors of the First National Bank, Alhambra, John B. Knox was elected president and Marco H. Hellman of Los Angeles vice-president. Mr. Hellman is president of the National Bank of Alhambra and Knox is vice-president of that institution. There is absolutely no intention of consolidating the two banks, according to Mr. Knox. The First National Bank has a surplus equal to its capital stock. It was established in 1887.

PROMINENT PENNSYLVANIA BANKER DEAD

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Col. Hugh Young, prominent as a capitalist and identified for many years with financial institutions of this city, died Sunday morning in Wellsboro, Tioga county, Pa., his home town, and where he removed about two years ago after an active association with the affairs of Pittsburgh. He had been in failing health ever since leaving Pittsburgh. Col. Young was in his eightieth year and at the time of his death was still chairman of the board of directors of the Federal National Bank. He was a director also in the American Waterway and Guarantee Company of this city. His prominence in financial affairs was further increased by his service as national bank examiner for a quarter of a century, holding this post through six administrations.

Colonel Young's life was a varied one. He played successively the rôles of student, teacher, bookkeeper, war correspondent, editor, soldier, legislator and banker. He wrote much and contributed from time to time papers on economic and banking subjects. He was a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

He became a leader in politics after seeing actual service in the Civil War. In 1876 he accepted the nomination and was elected a member of the Pennsylvania legislature. The following year he was appointed national bank examiner and served as such until March, 1888, when he retired and established the Wellsboro National Bank, of which he became president. In 1891 he was made national bank examiner for the city of Pittsburgh and served until December, 1903, when he was elected president of the Federal Bank. Colonel Young was president also of the Tioga County Savings and Trust Company of Wellsboro.

Saline, Mo.—The Citizens' Bank has been organized with $10,000 capital. A. J. Peace is president; H. T. Martin, cashier.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Oct. 21st.—A reduction of approximately 33 per cent on freight rates on apples to eastern points is asked in a petition submitted by the Spokane Jobbers Exchange to Spokane railroad representatives. The action was inspired by the feeling that this year's bumper apple crop can not be marketed entirely at present freight rates. The petitioners figure that the reduced rate will increase the transportation tonnage 100 per cent over that of last year. It is estimated by the petitioners that prices in the east will be 25 per cent lower than last year, and the jobbers believe transportation charges should be reduced to enable the growers to compete successfully. The present rates are given by the exchange as follows on a basis of 100 pounds: Winnipeg, 75 cents; St. Paul, 85 cents; Duluth, 85 cents; Kansas City, 65 cents; Galveston, $1; Houston, $1; St. Louis, $1; Chicago, $1; New York, $1, and Montreal, $1. The rates suggested by the jobbers' exchange are as follows: Winnipeg, 50 cents; St. Paul, 50 cents; Duluth, 50 cents; Kansas City, 50 cents; St. Louis, 60 cents; Chicago, 60 cents; Galveston, 75 cents; Houston, 75 cents; New Orleans, 75 cents; New York, 75 cents, and Montreal, 75 cents.

New Buildings in Spokane

Spokane is on the eve of a reawakening in building operations, according to belief of contractors, substantiated by hopeful indications in all lines. The $2,000,000 Davenport hotel is the biggest single indication that brings promise of better things. Of 75 leading cities of the United States, Spokane has 46th place for building permits issued in September. No large buildings were included.

Construction has started on a beautiful $25,000 home for W. H. Plummer in the Rockwood district. F. M. March, president of the National Bank of Commerce, has had plans drawn for a $40,000 home of old Colonial design, five miles southeast of the city. Permits issued thus far in October promise to show a large gain.

There is a great deal of railroad work going on in Spokane and vicinity. The Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound has a large force of men busy on its tunnel through the city, and the O. W. R. & N. is rushing track laying on its new line to Spokane. The $3,000,000 grade separation project of the Northern Pacific, including building new shops, will be started this fall.

Fall Seeding

Fall seeding is in full blast in the Palouse country, recent rains having put the ground in excellent condition. It is estimated 60 per cent of the seeding is completed. The acreage of fall wheat will be unusually large. Warehouses in the Palouse district are taxed to capacity to handle the big crop harvested. Only about 30 per cent of the wheat crop is in the hands of the farmers, the tendency having been to sell by contract before harvesting. Root and truck crops in Lincoln county are unusually large, the largest potato crop in history being harvested. Yields of 150 to 200 sacks an acre are not uncommon. In many parts of the Big Bend country the Campbell system of dry farming has increased the yield largely. Robert Gunning, in particular, employed the method successfully, getting between 30 and 45 bushels of wheat to the acre.

Land Thrown Open for Settlement

A total of 40,539 acres of land in Stevens county, Wash., were thrown open by the government for settlement October 17th, 22d and 23d. On October 17th, 22,688.67 acres were thrown open, and on the latter dates, 17,850.33 acres.

Increases Capital Stock to $1,000,000

For the purpose of financing on an adequate basis its rapidly developing business and further extending its trade territory, the Spokane Dry Goods Company has increased its capital stock from $500,000 to $1,000,000. The company is one of the pioneer concerns of Spokane, and has enjoyed a steady growth. It now owns the Crescent Store and the Palace Store, in addition to a large wholesale and manufacturing plant. The company is engaged in the manufacture of overalls and mackinaws. "The increase in capitalization has been made necessary to provide for increasing activity in all our lines of endeavor," said J. M. Comstock, vice-president of the concern. "We consider the splendid growth of our business an indication of the prosperity of Spokane and the surrounding country."

Death of Arthur H. Buchanan

Arthur H. Buchanan, manager of the Bank of Montreal and pioneer banker of the Pacific Northwest, died October 16th at the residence, Coeur d'Alene Street, as the result of a prolonged illness which had left him helpless since last spring. He had been unable to leave his residence for months and has been in a critical condition for several weeks. Death was due to an improper action of the spleen. Mr. Buchanan was trained in the Bank of Montreal at Quebec. He engaged in banking in Kootenai county, Idaho, and at Nelson, B. C., before coming to Spokane.

Banking Notes

By cutting the 1913 budget $164,000 the Spokane county commissioners fixed the county tax levy at 13 mills, and on a valuation of $122,000,000 they expect the levy will produce $884,070. This brings the entire tax levy for 1913 for all municipal, state and county purposes to 30½ mills, the same as for 1912.

Spokane's bank clearings for the week ended October 10th were $5,450,544, an increase of 35 per cent over the clearings for the corresponding week of 1911. For the first nine months of 1912 clearings were $161,926,654, as against $161,188,276 for the first nine months of 1911.

Faith in Spokane as a permanent distributing trade center for farm implements and in the Spokane territory as a market for its products, has induced the Emerson-Bramtingham Co., Rockford, Ill., known locally as the Spokane Implement Co., to extend its operations in a comprehensive manner. Spokane has been its Pacific Northwest center for some time, and now branch houses will be started at Walla Walla, Wash., and Portland, Ore., to care for the trade of this territory. Facilities for handling the added lines at Spokane will be increased materially.

R. Lewis Rutter, vice-president and general manager of the Spokane & Eastern Trust (Continued on page 28)

Direct or Circuitous?

EVERY day the Old National Bank receives items upon points in its territory which, owing to lack of care in sending, have followed a circuitous route before finally reaching us. This bank is in the heart of a populous and immensely productive territory; six transcontinental railroads enter Spokane, which, without a rival, is the Metropolis of the "Inland Empire." Our direct communication with Pacific Northwest banks enables us to make returns on items with especial promptness. Send us your Pacific Northwest collections.

Accounts of Iowa banks invited. Reserve agents for national banks

Thorp, Wis.—The Farmers Exchange Bank has incorporated with $15,000 capital. Herman Freiss, George Burke and F. O. Mosher are interested.

Elliott, S. C.—The Bank of Elliott has been organized with $10,000 capital. G. A. Lemon is president and W. E. Du Rant vice-president and cashier.

Des Moines, October 23d.—Secretary P. W. Hall of the Iowa Bankers Association has begun an active campaign for members for the association. This does not mean that the membership is declining, for that is not the case. On the other hand, the membership is gaining, but Secretary Hall believes that there are many bankers in Iowa who should be enrolled whose names are not written on the books. This is especially true in view of the remarkable number of new banks that are incorporating in Iowa from day to day. In this connection, Mr. Hall is calling attention to the importance of Iowa bankers keeping up their memberships. For instance, the bank at Gilletts Grove permitted the dues to fall behind for a period of over three months. Under the constitution this was sufficient to lose its membership. Accordingly, when the institution was robbed of over $1,400 a few nights ago, the officials suddenly discovered that they were not entitled to any aid from Secretary Hall or the Burns agency which has been employed for protective purposes. For a paltry five dollars a year, the bank had lost protection worth many times that much. The group chairmen are assisting in the present campaign which has been inaugurated.

Notorious Forger Arrested at Denver

Emery Salyards, alias E. Southern, believed to be one of the cleverest bank forgers and swindlers in the business, was arrested at Denver last week and turned over to Des Moines officers on the charge that he defrauded the Mechanics Savings of Des Moines out of $45. It was subsequently learned that Salyards is wanted at Tacoma for passing $5,000 in forgeries through the National Bank of Commerce at that city. He is due for a life sentence in that state if found guilty, and consequently he has been turned over to Washington, or at least that is the intention at this writing. Salyards attracted attention at Denver in the postoffice when he called for mail at two windows under two names. Postoffice clerks became suspicious and notified the officers.

Necessity for State Regulation

Unless newspaper reports are in error, the case of Cashier Haynes of the Bank of Rudd offers a study in the necessity for some sort of state regulation of private institutions. Haynes was cashier of the Bank of Rudd and was put on trial for misappropriating $13,000 of the funds of the institution. After hearing the evidence, Judge J. J. Clark took the case from the jury, and directed a verdict for the defendant, on the grounds that under the Iowa statute there is no provision for punishment. The Bank of Rudd was a co-partnership, and it developed that it is no crime to abstract money from a co-partnership. If the bank had been regularly incorporated under the state laws, the cashier would have had no defense, so Judge Clark held.

Isaac H. Sears

Isaac H. Sears, who was probably the oldest banker in the state when he resigned last year as president of the Scott County Savings at Davenport, celebrated his 91st birthday last week. He was the recipient of many congratulations from his many friends, while the bank sent him a magnificent bouquet of American Beauty roses. Mr. Sears is in good health considering his age. He came to Iowa in 1855, was made president of the bank in 1883, and held the office until his ninetieth anniversary, last year, when he retired.

Want A. I. B. Chapter

The annual agitation for the formation in Des Moines of a chapter of the American Institute of Banking has been started in this city among some of the employees of the various institutions. The chapter that formerly was maintained here was regarded as unsuccessful, for the members lost interest and the chapter finally died. The efforts to revive it have been taken up year after year without success, but it is hoped that this season it will be possible to arouse sufficient enthusiasm in the organization to make it a success. The bank officials are urging the cause along in the hopes that the chapter will be formed before the Christmas holidays.

$3,000 Per Capita

The Northwestern Banker comments in its October number upon the surprise manifested by Robert E. Gamble, of the Drovers Deposit of Chicago, when he visited Donahue, Scott county. He found that the Donahue Savings had $287,654.28 in deposits on June 29th—and the town has a population of about one hundred persons. This is an average of about $3,000 to the resident, but then, of course, Donahue is in one of the many rich farming communities of Iowa, and the farmers in the vicinity of the town are responsible for much of the money in the bank. Just the same, this is a high average and it certainly demonstrates that Iowa is a good banking state and a prosperous one as well.

Bank Building Nearly Finished

The new Central State Bank building, and the new Mechanics Savings building across the street, in Des Moines, are nearing completion. It will not be long until the structures are occupied. It is thought that November first may see one or both of the banks moved into the new quarters and the officials and employees surrounded by all the luxuries of the very latest in the banking world.

Iowa Banking Notes

According to a statement issued by the Des Moines Clearing House Association recently, the banks of the city have on deposit over $30,000,000. The amount of cash on hand is rated at $8,755,344.

Depositors in the Bank of Ferguson recently held a meeting and named a committee to look after their interests. It appears that accusations were made against George W. Curtis, Jr., owner of the institution, and the depositors thought it best to protect themselves.

Redfield, Iowa, has voted $18,000 for a water works plant.

The Iowa State at New London recently pulled off a most novel and successful corn and colt show. One hundred dollars in gold were handed out in premiums for exhibitors of corn and colts and, in addition, for the women who excelled in the pantry stores department.

The Coggon State, of Coggon, has filed articles with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $50,000. S. N. Goodhue of Cedar Rapids will be president, and associated with him are J. H. Ehlers, A. J. Ware, L. G. Hall, F. W. Lindahl, D. D. Johnson, who will be cashier, and R. D. Came.

George Roberts, director of the mint, and erstwhile Chicago banker, has been visiting old friends in Iowa while on a tour of the West on mint business.

A new bank with a capital stock of $15,000 is to be started at Elliott. H. E. Manker is president, George A. Alliband is vice-president, and John Smith of Cumberland is cashier.

C. D. Ellis, the well-known Charles City banker, has resigned as presidential elector from the fourth Iowa district on the republican ticket. Mr. Ellis found that he was not eligible to serve because of his connection with the institution.

F. W. Converse has sold his interest in the Iowa Savings at Estherville, of which he was president, and expects to remove to Los Angeles. Mack J. Groves is the purchaser of the Converse stock.

Clinton, Ia., is likely to have a new banking institution. At a recent meeting of those interested, Herbert Mowry was chosen president, P. H. Schneider, vice-president, and A. C. Bielenberg, cashier.

J. T. Sudmeirer has been elected president of the Farmers State at Dyersville to succeed the late C. A. Smith. Mr. Sudmeirer was formerly vice-president and Barney Vaske was named vice-president to succeed him.

A. J. Whinery, well known throughout Iowa as a bank examiner, and formerly cashier of the Castana Savings at Castana, has bought a bank at Bentley, Iowa.

The Macy Brothers Exchange at Lynnvile, Iowa, has changed its title to the First State. Albert Johnson is president, C. O. Macy, vice-president, and E. M. Cary, cashier. The capital stock is $25,000.

The Iowa National at Davenport is overjoyed over its showing of $900,000 increase in deposits in a single year. This brings the amount considerably over $2,000,000. The semiannual dividends have been increased from four to five per cent, and the last one,

MANY bankers, from time to time, have need of a special or secondary reserve fund. This reserve fund they carry in bonds or as an inactive account at interest with a metropolitan bank. We make a specialty of handling such inactive reserve accounts for banks and bankers, and of supplying carefully selected bonds for investment, circulation, emergency currency, government deposits or postal savings fund purposes. To banks intending to establish a secondary reserve fund unexcelled facilities are offered.

We have prepared an exceptionally informative leaflet on government bond data in concise enough form to be practical to every banker, — just the thing to have close at hand for ready reference. We shall be pleased to send these leaflets free upon request.

The Persia Savings will increase its capital stock from $10,000 to $20,000, according to reports which have reached Des Moines bankers.

Otto Hill has been chosen cashier of the Davenport Savings at Davenport, succeeding the late Henry C. Struck whose death occurred some weeks ago. Mr. Hill entered the employ of the First National at Davenport in 1891 and was later made teller in the Davenport Savings.

Rupert E. Jackson has removed from Kansas City to become cashier of the State Savings of Chariton.

H. O. Swinger has been chosen assistant cashier for the First National at Williams, Iowa. He has been at Thompson, Iowa, where he gained much experience that will now stand him in good hand.

Wallace Hamilton, teller of the Merchants National at Cedar Rapids, recently married Miss Hazel Hall.

Charles Fisher, arrested by detectives for the I. B. A. in connection with the Cylinder bank robbery last June, was found guilty at Emmetsburg and sent to the penitentiary.

S. R. Corneliussen of Story City has been ordered to dispose of the property belonging to the estate of John Swan. This is the outcome of the failure of the Citizens Bank of Swan which was wrecked when Swan's son, who was cashier of the institution, ran away with all of the money in the bank and all he could negotiate from other institutions.

Charles Sankot, assistant cashier of the First National at Belle Plaine, recently married Miss Fannie Long of Grinnell.

Company, with five other Spokane nimrods, has returned from a three weeks' hunting trip on the south fork of the Kootenai river, in Montana. The other members of the party were: H. A. Buzard, James Ramage, James Young, A. W. Stine and Everett E. Young.

Associated with other capitalists, Thaddeus S. Lane, Spokane, capitalist and head of the Home Telephone Company, is promoting an interurban electric railroad in Utah between Salt Lake and Provo. Work has been going on for three months and for ten days a corps of engineers has been making a private survey. The company will be incorporated soon. The road is expected to be in operation in a year.

Among out-of-town bankers who were in Spokane this week were: George W. Jackson, cashier of the Columbus Trail Bank of Dayton, Wash., W. W. Downie, cashier First National of Harrington, Wash., and E. W. Anderson, cashier Security State Bank of Newport, Wash.

CANADA'S LEADING BANK

New York, Oct. 21st—The monthly bank statement issued by the Dominion government shows that the Canadian Bank of Commerce has jumped to the first place in the list of Canadian banks, taking the position formerly occupied by the Bank of Montreal. The total assets of the Bank of Commerce on September 30th were $242,172,114, as against $240,503,295 of the Bank of Montreal. Total deposits of the former bank were $188,572,345, or $5,148,749 more than those held by the Bank of Montreal. As far as the item of deposits is concerned there are few banks in this country that come anywhere near these big Canadian institutions. The National City Bank comes nearest with average total deposits, according to last week's clearing house statement, of $167,387,000. But the Guaranty Trust Company, now that the merger of the Standard Trust Company has become effective, announced total deposits last week of $189,301,170. This is the first time that a trust company member has reported deposits greater than any bank member of that institution. The Guaranty Trust Company, therefore, holds deposits not only larger than any bank in the United States, but also in the Dominion of Canada.

NEW ARKANSAS BANK

The Commonwealth Trust Company is the name of Little Rock's latest banking institution, which has been incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000, of which $100,000 is paid in. The purpose of the company will be to do a general banking and trust business, as well as deal in land and real estate. The incorporators are Charles Berner of Tulsa, Okla., L. H. Bradley, a well-known business man of Little Rock, and L. W. Hagg of Kansas City, Mo.

Officers of the institution have been elected as follows: Charles Berner, president; L. W. Hagg, secretary; L. H. Bradley, treasurer; Charles Berner, L. H. Bradley, L. W. Hagg, De E. Bradshaw and Isaac Kline, directors.

Both Messrs. Berner and Hagg said last night that they were looking ahead toward the future of Arkansas and the development of the great natural resources of the state.

Springfield (Ill.) Correspondence

The Illinois Valley Trust Company, capitalized at $100,000, was organized at Peoria last Saturday by P. J. Ryan, of the firm of P. J. Ryan & Co., mortgage bankers, and others. The following officers were elected: President, P. J. Ryan; vice-president, F. L. Aubertin; secretary, C. F. Dilzer; treasurer, O. J. Dolan; attorney, J. F. Bartley; counsellor, E. D. McCabe; directors, W. D. Gordon, B. F. Graham, O. J. Dolan, C. F. Dilzer, J. J. Casey, F. L. Aubertin and P. J. Ryan.

State Bank at Blue Mound

The new Bank of Blue Mound has been organized with a capital stock of $50,000. Chas. Moomey was elected president, W. O. Matthew, vice-president, and J. A. McClure, cashier. The directors are: Charles H. Moomey, W. O. Matthew, William Hartwig, Albert Zeigler and E. W. Crow. The banking quarters formerly occupied by J. W. Brown & Co. have been secured and it is expected to open the new bank by November 1st.

Fulton County Corn Show

The second annual meet and show of the Fulton County Corn Growers' Association will be held at Ipava December 10th to 13th. Professor P. G. Holden of the Iowa Agricultural college, who is reputed to be the greatest authority on corn in the world, will deliver a lecture. The total value of premiums offered is $1,240. In addition, there will be several special prizes of value. Leigh F. Maxcy, one of the best corn judges in the state, will act as judge and will also teach the classes in scoring, seed selection and breeding. The school is open to members of the association only. For the best ten ears of corn shown at this exhibit there is offered $100 in sweepstakes, contributed by the Fulton County Bankers Association.

John F. Fierke Elected to Board

Directors of the First National of Elgin have elected John F. Fierke, president of the Illinois Iron and Bolt Works of Carpentersville, to fill the vacancy on the directorate caused by the death of the late D. F. Barclay. Mr. Barclay's place as president has been left open for the time being, and vice-president W. L. Black will act as president until the annual election of officers.

Bank of Galesburg in New Building

The opening of the new rooms of the Bank of Galesburg on Monday attracted a great many people who were interested in seeing the fine new equipment. There was no question but that the directors of the bank spared no expense to make the banking room beautiful and useful. Booklets giving a short history of the bank, and telling of its safety and success, were distributed.

The Bank of Galesburg was incorporated in 1891 with a capital of $100,000 and no surplus. Since then the capital has been increased to $125,000.00, and the surplus fund to $325,000.00, making a total capital and surplus of $450,000.00, and assets of $1,536,914.25 on the twenty-first anniversary of their incorporation. The present officers are: C. C. Craig, president, N. O. G. Johnson, vice-president, P. N. Granville, cashier, C. E. Johnson, assistant cashier.

Town to Get First Bank

Willisville, in the southwest part of Perry County, is soon to have its first bank. The institution will be known as the Farmers and Citizens Bank, with a capital stock of $10,000. Capitalists from Ava, Percy and Willisville are interested in the bank, the officers of which are: President, E. A. Brown, also vice-president of the State Bank of Ava; vice-president, W. L. Husband, cashier of the Bank of Ava; cashier, A. Glen Brown of Ava.

Illinois Notes

E. H. Hyneman, a leading banker and one of the best known citizens of Lexington, died Sunday night at his home, after a lingering illness of six weeks. Mr. Hyneman was one of the organizers of the State Bank of Lexington, with which he retained his connection to the time of his fatal illness.

George Campbell has been elected cashier of the State Bank, Jerseyville. Mr. Campbell succeeds Geo. M. Eaton. Clarence Dodson, Misses Elizabeth Eaton and Harriet Bowman were elected assistant cashiers.

At a monthly meeting of the directors of the Swedish-American National Bank, held recently, L. H. Birdsall, the active vice-president, tendered his resignation as vice-president and director. Mr. Birdsall's decision to retire was reached on account of his age and because his health is not good. John A. Alden was elected active vice-president to serve out Mr. Birdsall's unexpired term, and assumed his new duties October 15th. Alderman A. E. Anderson was elected to succeed Mr. Birdsall as director.

The First National of Aledo, is again located in their rooms on the first floor of the Merchants hotel building. The rooms have been remodeled in every particular and present a very fine appearance.

INVESTING MONEY IN CANADA

Edmonton, Alta.—Taxes have reached such high figures and become so general in Great Britain that capital is being literally taxed out of the country, with the result that the English investors are bringing their money to Canada, especially to the western provinces, according to Herbert H. Fuller, head of the firm of H. H. Fuller and Company of London, England, which is engaged principally by large corporations and private owners in the old country to check assessments levied on properties for taxation purposes.

"That is the reason why so many prominent public men and financiers of England are in western Canada at this time," Mr. Fuller continued in the course of an interview at Edmonton, Alta. "They are looking for places to invest their money where it will be exempt from unfair taxation. The old country is overburdened with taxation; in fact, many declare they are taxed almost out of existence."

Mr. Fuller looks upon the single tax plan in operation in the province of Alberta as approaching the ideal method of taxation. He expressed doubt, however, as to whether it would work so well when the cities reach their ultimate growth. Land is increasing in value so rapidly, said he, that it provides a constantly increasing revenue from taxation to keep pace with the needs of the city, but when the values become fixed some other system may be required as a supplementary method to raise the necessary revenue for the civic requirements.

Reverting to the subject of taxation in England, Mr. Fuller said:

"We are taxed for the light and water we use, for the ground we occupy and the ground we own, our incomes are taxed, our business is taxed and if we buy land and resell at a profit we have to pay part of the profit over to the government. It is apparent, therefore, that for corporations and firms owning a large amount of property the taxation is a heavy item and a mistake in the assessment or in calculation means a great deal. It is so important a factor indeed that some firms employ their own men who devote all their time to checking the taxation. Valuation for taxation purposes in Great Britain is based on the rental value of the property and naturally this is a constantly changing thing, the state of trade and other conditions of business, such as competition and other forces, all having to be taken into account."

"Everything is in a muddle," Mr. Fuller added, referring to the valuation of the land of the country that is being done in accordance with the provisions of Lloyd George's budget of 1909. "The government has an army of young and inexperienced men, who are being paid from $1,000 to $5,000 a year, at work on the valuation, and when their work is completed it will probably be found that it will be of little actual value. Most of the valuation are likely to be incorrect."

"It is the same with regard to the tax on the increase in land values. I sold property last February and it has not yet been decided how much I shall have to pay to the government under the Lloyd George budget on the increased value in the land."

"The system of taxing the increase in land values is not fair, because it discriminates against a particular class of investor. The man who invests in stocks and shares and makes an additional 5 per cent on his investment has to pay only the ordinary income tax, but another man who invests the same amount in land and reaps a profit is required to pay a proportion of that profit to the government."

"The whole system is part of Lloyd George's policy of trying to give the people something for nothing. When he introduced the Insurance Act his cry was 'ninepence for fourpence.' He promised the working man that for his contribution of fourpence he could give him ninepence worth of insurance. Of course, the difference has to be made up somewhere and the rest comes partly out of the pocket of the employer and partly out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country as a whole."

Mr. Fuller agreed with the principle of taxing unearned incomes, believing it right that the man who does not have to work for his living should pay more taxation than the man who earned his bread by the sweat of his brow, whether he worked by his hand or his brain. However, he sharply criticized the insurance act. While admitting that insurance is necessary for everybody, he said that the details of the insurance act are unworkable, adding: "It is manifestly not business to charge the young man of twenty the same rate for insurance as the man of more than fifty, or the butler in a gentleman's house as much as the collier who risks his life every hour of his working day."

GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE AGRICULTURAL EXPERTS

Announcement is made that soon the government will have an agricultural expert in every county where agriculture is of any importance. These experts will be paid partly by the counties and partly by the government. Their duties will be to give scientific advice to the farmers.

WHEN THE FORESTS ARE ABLAZE

One of the best of the fall books is from the press of A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. It is by Katherine B. Judson and entitled "When the Forests are Ablaze." The western forest fire, sweeping acre after acre in a few minutes, burning whole villages at a breath, overtaking and killing the settlers even as they flee, is something little known to the dweller in the city. It was something little known to Jane Myers when, tired of an unpromising teacher's career, she took up a quarter-section in a Washington forest reserve. Miss Judson tells dramatically how such a fire drove Jane from her farm and wiped out a village inhabited by her neighbors. Written from the standpoint of intimate knowledge, the book is a scathing rebuke to the short-sighted and life-destroying policy of leaving the forests and the people who live near them to the mercy of the flames.

DINING AT THE FIRST NATIONAL

Not the night, but the day "before Christmas" and also the day before Thanksgiving the officers and employees of the big First National Bank of this city are treated to regular holiday dinners.

General View of Kitchen

It is not known generally that the bank maintains upon its eighteenth floor one of the best equipped kitchens and dining rooms to be found in the city. Floors and walls are tiled, and being called upon to serve but one meal a day the cleanliness is almost abnormal. If ever you receive an invitation to dine up there do not refuse it.

The restaurant is on the same floor with the kitchen. The large dining room for employees will seat about two hundred at a sitting. Only the noonday meal is served and it is given free to every employee of the bank. Caterer David Jones has a written order to buy none but the finest food products and meats and to serve only such things as are looked upon as "healthy." The luncheons are served on the "a la carte" plan. Mr. Jones has been complimented freely upon his efficient service and the bank has found it profitable to give him a very free hand in all matters of purchase and management. He has found it advantageous and economical to employ one of the very best chefs in

The Steam Tables

Range of Caldrons

Chicago to supervise the kitchen and has a carefully selected crew of assistants and employees. There are twenty waitresses on deck at each meal to serve the hungry bankers. The officers and heads of departments have a private dining room where out-of-town visitors and customers are freely entertained. On all special occasions such as Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Years and other holidays, a special menu is prepared by Mr. Jones and served the day before the holiday. On holidays the restaurant as well as the bank is closed. In addition to feeding its employees and officers well and carefully, the bank maintains a fully equipped gymnasium, reading room and rest room for the comfort of its help.

ADVENTURES OF NAPOLEON PRINCE

Thousands of readers followed "The Adventures of Napoleon Prince," by May Edington, when they appeared serially. If you didn't, you can now buy it in splendid book form, published by Cassell & Co., New York. Napoleon Prince is a fascinating rogue—a master criminal of a new type. His adventures are as thrilling and mysterious as were ever conceived by any writer. The tale ranks well up among fascinating mystery stories. It celebrates the art of thievery and roguery, where things are accomplished in subtle, discriminating fashion, not so much for the sake of the actual jewels stolen and wealth acquired, though that is not at all to be sniffed at, since it provides pleasant travel, luxurious hotel accommodations, and the cream of expensive pleasures, as for the sake of the "game," of seeing farther ahead, of being shrewder and quicker than anybody else—particularly detectives. There are many clever thefts, many successful turnings of the tables on other thieves, and two romances, clearly and cleverly related, enough to make a readable book. Moral sentiment is, of course, royally ignored, even the time honored code, "honor among thieves," but they are such a skilful set and thief so airily that one quite forgets any moral niceties for which one may have a personal bias and enjoys Napoleon Prince's adventures wholeheartedly.

NEW MONTANA BANKS

The Farmers State Bank of Valley county, Montana, has been incorporated to open up in Medicine Lake just as soon as their building can be completed. Adam Hannah, who owns a string of banks in North Dakota and Minnesota, is at the head of it. H. G. Anderson, of Browns Valley, Minn., will be the vice-president and manager, and S. C. Faaberg, of Iowa, the cashier. The capital is $20,000.

The Homestead State Bank of Homestead, Valley county, has been organized. The incorporators are: Julius Rosholt, J. H. Oswald, J. C. Jackson, O. E. Jackson, O. K. Jensen, of Homestead, and C. J. Atkinson, of Sawyer, N. D. Capital $20,000, all of which has been subscribed.

TALKS ON NATIONAL RESERVE ASSOCIATION

David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank, Chicago, delivered an address on the National Reserve Association of the United States before the University of Wisconsin Club of Chicago at its regular Friday noonday luncheon in the German room of the Grand Pacific Hotel.

NATIONAL PRODUCE BANK GROWING

Edwin L. Wagner, president of the National Produce Bank of this city, says that his bank is growing in strength and increasing its earning power as a result of the excellent headway which business is making.

ELECTED A DIRECTOR OF CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO

Frederick H. Rawson, president of the Union Trust Company of this city, has been elected a director of the Chesapeake and Ohio to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of Thomas H. Hubbard.

GOES TO NORTH CAROLINA

H. O. Edmonds, vice-president of the Northern Trust Company, has gone to North Carolina, where he will spend a month's vacation.

G. H. Dunscomb, assistant cashier of the First National, Chicago, was in Indianapolis this week.

Books on Banking, Finance and Economics

Credit. By J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, of the Department of Political Economy, University of Chicago. Postpaid, 53c.

The nature of credit and its effect on prices have long been a subject of disagreement among economists. Its basis is commonly assumed to be money or bank reserves.

Essentials of Business Law. By FRANCIS M. BURDICK, LL. D., Professor of Law in Columbia University. 12mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

This book shows how the rules of law governing the commonest business transactions have been developed, and it tells what they are to-day. Technical law terms have been discarded as far as possible, and when they are used they are so explained and illustrated as to be easily understood. The principles of law are simplified and expressed in clear, lucid everyday speech.

Foreign Exchange. Tables converting foreign money into United States money, and United States money into foreign money at all commercial rates of exchange used in financial transactions between the United States and foreign countries. All about foreign exchange, including various forms of foreign commercial paper and terms, abbreviations, etc. For banks, bankers, steamship agents, importers, exporters and manufacturers. Cloth, $5.00.

Government Regulation of Railway Rates. By HUGO R. MEYER. A Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Postpaid, $1.60 net.

Investment Bonds. By F. LOWNHAUPT. Postpaid, $1.90. Prospective investors who wish to make advantageous use of their money will do well to take notice of this volume. The author does not theorize, but tells only plain facts of the relation of the bond to its issuing corporation, and of the general investment aspect of the instrument.

Money and Credit. By WILBUR ALDRICH. Postpaid, $1.37. This volume contains much valuable information and much sound discussion on money and credit.

The Banking and Currency Problems in the United States. By VICTOR MORAWETZ. The author takes up the problem of the national monetary commission, appointed by congress, and discusses the means of providing a permanent safeguard against money stringencies and panics. Postpaid, $1.10.

The Principles of Money and Banking. By CHARLES A. CONANT. It is a new and complete exposition of its subject. Two volumes. Postpaid, $4.25.

The Pitfalls of Speculation. By THOMAS GIBSON. Postpaid, $1.20.

A book dealing exclusively with marginal speculation, and analyzing in a clear and simple manner the causes of failure in speculation, with a suggestion as to the remedies.

The Use of Loan Credit in Modern Business. By THORSTEIN B. VEBLEN. Postpaid, 28c.

The Investors' Catechism. By M. M. REYNOLDS. Cloth, by mail, $1.10.

"Investors' Catechism." Contains all that it is essential for the beginner to know, and opens the way for a thorough study of the whole subject of investment. The author has for the sake of clearness and simplicity adopted a catechetical style which is somewhat novel in this sort of literature.

History of Banking in the United States. John Jay Knox. $5.00.

Practical Banking. Claudius B. Patten. $5.00.

Modern Banking Methods. A. R. Barrett. $4.00.

acres in size and worth $3,653—$24.37 per acre; and ten years later, in 1910, the size of the average farm was less, 138.1 acres, but had a value of $6,444—$46.64 per acre. 80.9% increase per average farm. Farming may not pay, but it almost equals working in the city for $15 per week where it costs $65 per month to live.

JAMES B. FORGAN BACK FROM NEW YORK

James B. Forgan, president of the First National of this city, returned this week from a trip to New York. He reports that there has been a reaction in the political sentiment of the banking district there from Roosevelt to Taft.

KENTUCKY TRUST COMPANY INCORPORATED

Title Guaranty and Trust Company of Lexington, Ky., has been incorporated with capital stock of $150,000. Gilmer Pryor, John R. Allen, William B. Porter and others are the incorporators.

OREGON BANKER ARRESTED

Silas Rich, ex-paying teller of the U. S. National Bank of Salem, Ore., has been arrested by a U. S. marshal and taken to Portland. Rich is being held pending an inquiry as to his connection with the alleged embezzlement of $2,400 from the Salem bank. He has been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury for embezzling funds of the institution. The bill contains thirty-five separate counts, eighteen of which are for appropriating the bank's funds and the rest for making false entries in the institution's books covering the alleged thefts. The funds were taken from the general cash, and he is said to have covered the removals in figuring the interest accounts. He was a trusted employee and had ready access to any of the bank's books. He has admitted the embezzlements and the false entries.

dation with Snyder at the top is the talk. Any of the wise ones will "dope it out" for you.

GIRARD National, Philadelphia, has gone to a 16 per cent dividend basis. Cashier Joseph Wayne, Jr., has sent out the official notices.

HAVE you noticed how eagerly the eastern papers are planning George M. Reynolds' future for him? We predict that he will continue for many years to take care of that matter himself. He is growing faster even than his big bank.

R. J. DAVIDSON, the new president of the Columbia National, Pittsburgh, was for two years vice-president of the Columbia. He has had good training for the position and in Pittsburgh is referred to as "a natural born banker."

OSCAR J. TELLING, formerly of the controller's office, has made good as president of the big First National of Pittsburgh. He has doubled the capital only recently to two millions. The new stock was placed at $175, increasing the surplus by three-quarters of a million.

MISSOURI practically has completed her group meetings and Ohio has started in on her list. Why can't Illinois—but we tire of asking why she trails, always trails?

JAMES K. Hsley, of Milwaukee, Wis., says the failure of the Oklahoma guaranty bank deposit law was inevitable and foreordained because the law endeavored to make the sound banks responsible for the losses of their speculative and reckless neighbors.

THE atmosphere down east is surcharged with talk of mergers and consolidations. Particularly is this true of the Wall Street district in New York. Some big names are mentioned, both banks and trust companies.

EVEN in industrial and railroad circles the talk is merger, merger. After the election the air will be still fuller of it.

J. B. FORGAN, returned from New York, and Joseph Chapman, visitor from Minneapolis (no collusion), both report rapid changing of votes from Roosevelt to Taft. Honest, haven't you noticed it yourself?

AT the latest, B. F., down at Champaign, still was out in the cold but feeling lonesome.

COULD it be possible that it is "coming by freight?" Perish the thought. It was too light and airy for that.

R. T. FORBES of St. Joseph has decided not to accept a re-election to the presidency of the Commerce Club of that city. The club under him had a most successful year.

PAUL J. ULRICH, cashier of a bank bearing his name at Mt. Clemens, Mich., holds one record at least. He broke his strong right arm killing flies. He will explain if you want to know.

HOW to keep the "farmers' friend" in Minneapolis is the question which has superseded, for the time at least, the one about keeping the boy on the farm. Still, it's only eight miles farther from the farm to St. Paul than it is to the old stand.

PEOPLES Trust and Savings of Clinton, Ia., is sending out a beautifully illustrated booklet prepared for the Commercial Club of that city. It has a colored cover showing views in the city streets, in the parks, and on the surrounding farms. The illustrations, which, together with the text, make up the book, show handsome residences, fine business blocks, and new bank buildings.

E. N. JOHNSON, cashier of the First National of Mishawaka, Ind., is good enough to compliment THE CHICAGO BANKER on its "excellent write-up of the proceedings of the Indianapolis convention." He further testifies to his appreciation by enclosing his check for an annual subscription.

CHARLES W. BENEDICT, representing the Brookmire Economic Chart Company of St. Louis, has been in Chicago this week advancing the interests of their publication known as "Brookmire's Forecaster," which contains an analysis and forecast of fundamental conditions, and is published weekly. It touches upon agriculture, the security market, banking and current topics. It publishes a chart giving the plus and minus situation for business and for banking, the illustration being in the shape of a barometer.

HIBERNIA Bank and Trust Company of New Orleans is taking an active interest in the agricultural and educational movement which has been so prominent on the convention programs of the state associations this year.

PRESIDENT John J. Gannon is an inquirer for information on this subject. Most of the agricultural colleges and nearly all of the state bankers' associations have literature relating to this topic, which may be had on request. Copies of the Minneapolis conference report can be arranged for through Joseph Chapman, vice-president of the Northwestern National, Minneapolis.

THE September-October issue of the "Banking World," which is the new title for the bi-monthly publication issued by W. Y. Barnett of this city, is out with a full report of the Detroit convention, including many beautiful pictures, and with a report of the American Institute of Banking convention at Salt Lake City.

GEORGE M. REYNOLDS, who is recuperating at the big Marlborough-Blenheim at Atlantic City, writes to a Chicago friend to say: "I am improving rapidly, but am afraid it will get to be real work to stay out my time until November 1st."

MEMBERS of the McCormick family in Chicago seem to be very absent-minded about electoral qualifications. The famous J. Medill McCormick was obliged to withdraw from the legislative ticket because he had not resecured a proper residence certificate in Illinois.

NOW comes A. A. McCormick charged by Peter Bartzen with being an Indiana carpetbagger. The state constitution requires five years' residence "next before the election," and Mr. Bartzen has shown by the transcripts of poll books in Indianapolis and by personal tax receipts paid in that state that Mr. McCormick has been an actual resident of Chicago less than three years "next before the election."

A. A. is not a full-fledged moose, as is J. Medill, but only a half-breed. He is running on both the republican and bull moose tickets for president of the county board, for which Mr. Bartzen has pretty clearly shown he is not legally qualified.

COLONEL ROOSEVELT, while in the hospital here, read and spoke highly of Charles Aldine Seltzer's "The Coming of the Law." In this we join the colonel heartily.

THE administrative committee of the A. B. A. will meet in St. Louis Monday, Oct. 28th. Business of importance is coming up.

PRESIDENT GEORGE B. CALDWELL and Secretary F. K. Denton have issued formal invitations to the Investment Bankers Association convention in New York for November 21st-22d at the Waldorf-Astoria.

A SPECIAL train will be run from Chicago over the Lake Shore to haul the Chicago and western delegates. A large attendance is expected and a fine program has been prepared.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL of Shreveport, La., will open its new home formally on Monday. A reception from seven to ten P. M. will be tendered to friends and patrons of the bank, which is one of the best conducted institutions in the South.

THE proceedings book for the organization of the Investment Association is out and it is quite a pretentious volume. This new organization is quite a husky youngster. Note what they've done in a year.

FIRST they went to Briarcliff to lay siege to the Big Council, where they gracefully accepted a turn-down. They decided to earn their spurs by showing their friends a high purpose.

THEN a Chicago meeting and banquet were held, closely followed by the organization meeting in New York, Aug. 8th. In less than a month their annual convention will be pulled off.

THIS is going some, even for investment bankers, and they are not the slowest of their kind. Even the banks and bond houses must admire the pluck, which have held aloof in spirit and determination of the founders.

IF you believe all you read, here is what we're up against. If Wilson is elected we are assured that the tariff will be sliced to souphouse proportions. If Taft is re-elected the "interests" which now have the country suspended on a fork will swallow us all down at a gulp. If Roosevelt becomes the real Bull Moose, the government will be turned over to the anarchists for experiment with new form of socialistic dynamite.

THE facts are that the country is enjoying the preliminaries of the greatest business boom it has ever known and it isn't going to be strained merely because three or four other- wise very worthy gentlemen choose to spend weather calling each other hard names and predicting dire things in the event of their own failure of election.

SPELLBINDERS may say spiel about the tariff as being responsible for the increased cost of living, red fires and torch light processions in places; but a five minutes' perusal of Uncle Sam's 13th Census Bulletin on Agriculture, will tell the whole story. Less than a dozen lines will do—all things cost more now than they used to.

THE city (consuming) population is increasing more than three times as fast as the country (producing) population. The demand (population appetite) increased 21 per cent, while the supply (farm crops) only increased 1.7 per cent. When the demand increases faster than the supply, prices always go up.

IN 1880, 70.5 per cent of the population lived in the country; in 1900, 59.5 per cent lived in the country; in 1910, only 53.7 per cent lived in the country to supply nearly half of the population. An ever increasing demand of the rural population to supply that demand.

IT is frequently said that farming doesn't pay. In 1900, the average farm was 146.2 (Continued on page 30)

L. A. GODDARD ON GENERAL OUTLOOK

L. A. Goddard, president of the State Bank of Chicago, when interviewed this week concerning the general situation, said:

"There is a fair and healthy demand for money at good rates, and I believe that the rates will hold fairly strong for sixty days, at least. It would not surprise me much if they continued so even up to March or April. If there is a change in the administration at Washington, no one, of course, can predict with any degree of certainty what effect or influence it will have on commercial or financial conditions. It will depend a great deal upon the attitude the new administration assumes toward business interests. The country is very prosperous indeed, and if a new administration is to be tried it is just as well prepared now as it possibly could be. The banks are all in a strong position, and in any event I do not look for anything like a panic. I think that following this wave of prosperity it would be natural, however, to have some recessions and depreciations in values and in business activity."

TO MAKE GOOD ROADS TALK

W. G. Edens, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, will attend a national dairy show luncheon of the members of the Illinois Association of Farm Press Editors, given at one o'clock on Saturday, November 2d, at the Saddle and Sirloin Club at the stockyards. He will address the members and urge their support of the good roads campaign now in progress in Illinois, and their support of the platform of the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, which is advocating legislation touching upon the subject of the improvement of the wagon roads of Illinois.

Ralph N. Ballou

Ralph N. Ballou, cashier of the National Produce Bank of Chicago, has been elected treasurer and a director of the Illinois Athletic Club. Mr. Ballou also is a member of the Bankers Club of Chicago and of the Hinsdale Golf Club. The Illinois Athletic Club is fortunate in the selection of a man of Mr. Ballou's attainments.

RECORD IN BANK CLEARINGS

Bank clearings in Chicago for the full month of October were $1,456,000,000. This makes a new high record, being about $115,000,000 more than the former high mark made in March, 1910. The amount is also $253,000,000, or 21.08 per cent more than the clearings in October last year.

In the ten months ended yesterday, Chicago bank clearings reached a total of $12,706,000,- 000, or more than 10 per cent in excess of those in the corresponding period of last year.

It seems certain now that local clearings for the full year will run above $15,000,000,000.

WILLISVILLE, ILL., TO HAVE FIRST BANK

Willisville, Ill., in the southern part of Perry county, soon will have its first bank, which will be known as the Farmers and Citizens Bank, with capital stock of $10,000. Capitalists from Ava, Perry and Willisville are said to be interested in the organization of the new institution. Officers of the new bank are as follows: President, E. A. Brown, who is vice-president of the State Bank of Ava; vice-president, W. L. Husband, cashier of the Bank of Ava; cashier, A. Glen Brown of Ava.

STRAUS & CO. OPEN NEW YORK OFFICE

S. W. Straus & Co., mortgage and bond brokers of this city, are sending out announcements of the opening of their eastern office at 1 Wall Street, New York. They will deal exclusively in first mortgage bond and loan investments secured by absolute direct first liens on centrally located, improved, income-producing Chicago real estate netting the investor 5½ to 6 per cent.

COMMITTEES SOON TO BE NAMED

President J. D. Phillips of the Illinois Bankers Association is working on his committees and will make an early announcement of the appointments. He finds the liveliest interest on the part of members in all of the association's activities and willingness on their part to co-operate to make his administration successful.

F. O. WETMORE BACK FROM TEXAS

F. O. Wetmore, vice-president of the First National Bank of Chicago, recently has returned from a trip to Texas. Mr. Wetmore says that business conditions are good in the Lone Star State. Texas has had the largest crop in its history this year. Some difficulty has been experienced, however, in securing a sufficient number of laborers to harvest it. The feed crop has been unusually large. The people all are happy and contented, and are looking forward to the future with a good deal of assurance.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

SPEAKING about Garrard Comly of Boston for the A. B. A. treasurership, reminds one that the friends of Vice-president Graham of the Citizens National, Baltimore, have been quite active for some time.

IN fact Graham would have been in the running at Detroit but for the custom which gives the treasurer two years, and J. Fletcher Farrell was willing.

AS it is remembered here, there has been objection at times to giving office to any banker in the entertaining city. It kept Mitchell out of the treasurership at Denver and helped to discourage Wexler at New Orleans, out for the chairmanship.

FORMERLY it was the custom to hand some nice place to the chairman of the committee on reception or some other good fellow among the hosts of the convention.

WITHOUT mentioning names you can recall two or three bad guesses (about the only ones) which the association made at such times. All this may be changed at Boston.

OTHERTHAT if the treasurership should go to Graham, then Comly would come in nicely the year after at New York.

THEN, too, the committee on new constitution may so revolutionize things that precedent may be overturned for the new deal.

A GAIN your attention is called to the fact of a new constitution. Valuable suggestion has been made by N. E. Franklin and he has no monopoly of the business. You can all cut in.

THE committeemen—James of Easton, McNider of Mason City, Jones of Denver, Dunlap of Waxahatchie and Bailey of Atchison—all of them will be glad to hear from you.

"THE White Alley" is the long story in Lippincott's for November. It is by Carolyn Wells, who has written other fine tales like "The Clue" and "A Chain of Evidence." It is a detective story and will keep you awake.

SAYS Comptroller of the Currency Murray: "I am going to use every bit of power to be found in the National Bank Act to safeguard the depositors in the national banks of this country. I am going to use it as wisely as I know how, but I propose to use it."

W F. HAMMEL, cashier of the failed private bank at Gladstone, Mich., carried $80,000 in life insurance policies. The companies have a lien on the policies for $7,200 advanced thereon, and there may be little equity left for the creditors.

FIRST National in Davenport, Ia., has put out some attractive advertising based upon its having been the first national bank established under the law. It was chartered June 29, 1863.

GEORGE WOODRUFF is getting quite a reputation as an authority upon the European system of extending agricultural credits. The fact is that Mr. Woodruff is enough of a practical banker to have followed up the item of net cost to the borrower.

A LOT of professors and theoretical gentlemen have for years taken it for granted that when a farmer borrowed money of a French or German bank at 3½ per cent that that is what the loan cost him. Mr. Woodruff has been showing consecutively since the convention at Detroit that what the farmer gets in return for the mortgage on his farm merely is a debenture bond issued by the loaning bank.

THE farmers must sell these debenture bonds to the public and sometimes they do not realize more than 85, which brings the price of the loan up above the published rate for loans and almost to a parity with similar loans made on equally good collateral in the United States.

THE bankers were quick to appreciate the spotlight which Mr. Woodruff turned upon the situation on his return from Europe. They are waiting for him to publish his views on President Taft's letter covering the same subject.

ELMER E. ADAMS, president of the First National up at Fergus Falls, has written to President Taft to inquire "Why not immediate relief to the farmer by permitting national banks now organized to loan their money on farm lands?"

THIS Minnesota bank is in nowise differently situated than hundreds of other national banks located throughout the West. They are full of money belonging to farmers, yet when the farmer goes into the bank and wants to borrow money on his land, they must turn him away.

THERE are many counties in the Northwest where there are no other lines of business which demand much capital, except farming. Bankers in such communities believe the money would be better employed by loaning to the members of their own farming community rather than diverted to the central reserve cities where much of it eventually is employed in speculative enterprises by borrowers not nearly so valuable to the community as is the first-class American farmer.

SECRETARY J. L. HARTMAN of the Oregon State Bankers Association may well be proud of his annual proceedings book. So much attention was given to agricultural development and education that it ranks second only to the Minneapolis conference report. It will be very interesting to those who are studying these subjects.

IN another column of this issue will be found a statement from A. E. Walker, superintendent of banks for Alabama, stating it to be his belief, and giving good reasons, that more banking capital could be employed profitably in his state. Mr. Walker is one of the liveliest of live wires in banking department work and will answer promptly any inquiries which may be made concerning locations for new banks in Alabama.

A BANK for women has been established in Berlin. Its staff is composed exclusively of women, and it caters primarily to the needs of women.

Bank Plan of Aldrich Bill Has Been Rejected

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1st.—Treasury officials, bankers and legislators who are present have experienced a genuine sensation this week by the absolute repudiation of the National Monetary Commission plan of currency reform by an important division of the National Citizens League. This is looked upon here as meaning the death of the so-called Aldrich bill on which so much money and time have been spent. The final blow was dealt by the Hon. John H. Rich, of Red Wing, Minn., president of the National Citizens League of Minnesota, who has issued an important statement on the banking situation in which he entirely repudiates the Aldrich or Monetary Commission banking reform plan. Mr. Rich says:

"The banking and currency reform measure submitted to Congress in January by the Monetary Commission, and popularly known as the Aldrich bill, is a dead measure and cannot pass.

"Neither the so-called Aldrich bill nor the report of the Monetary Commission, in which the banking and currency needs of the country are well summarized, are essential parts of this reform, and the Citizens League of Minnesota feels no regrets at the improbability of the passage of the former. It has been, so far, the only bill before Congress, and as such it has deserved careful study. Banking reform does not, however, depend on this bill, and it is of little consequence whether the machinery proposed by the so-called Aldrich bill, for carrying a needed reform into effect, is retained or discarded.

"Other measures are in process of preparation, one by a sub-committee in Congress, one by Senator La Follette and others by men who have been giving this subject much thought.

"Senator Aldrich is no part of banking reform nor is any suggestion, plan or proposal of his essential. It is necessary that there be an adequate rediscount system, that government notes be secured by something better than a rigidly fixed quantity of government bonds, and that the government cease tying up millions in its vaults, when the commerce of the country needs this money. It is necessary that Wall Street's control, now given practically by law, over the bank reserves be broken. There should be a legal and effective form of co-operation between banks.

"Any bill before Congress should be distinguished from the reform itself. The former is merely the means of carrying a vital and progressive plan of relief for the business of the country into effective operation.

"This organization will demand that any bill provide a currency that will rise and fall with the fluctuations of the country's business, that it make the sound agricultural and commercial paper of the country liquid by provid-

Chairman John H. Rich of the Minnesota branch of the National Citizens League says it's dead. Wants specific reform and believes by avoiding details success is certain ing suitable machinery for rediscount, that it provide for centralized reserves free from Wall Street control, that it provide a scientific note issue, and that the system of tying up government receipts of money be done away with.

"Congress will undoubtedly take some action toward this reform at the coming short session opening in December, and it is the belief of most well-informed men that the adoption of a new banking and currency system will not be delayed in any event beyond the following long session, which opens in the fall of next year."

The above is looked upon here in official circles as a significant sign of the times. It shows conclusively what has been repeatedly foreshadowed—that the currency bills now before Congress will not furnish a basis for actual reform, but must be superseded by some other that is better able to command popular support. Were this not generally recognized the country over, accredited officers of the National Citizens League would never express themselves so unmistakably as Mr. Rich has done. Although the league has never committed itself definitely to the Aldrich plan, there has been a general understanding that it regarded that measure as the best yet proposed, and hence to be taken as the foundation of such action as Congress might consent to.

Where does this abandonment of the tacit support given to the Aldrich bill by an important organization leave the currency reform movement? Mr. Rich is not very specific in his remarks on that point. He says: "It is of little consequence whether the machinery proposed by the so-called Aldrich bill for carrying a needed reform into effect is retained or discarded;" and again, "Any bill before Congress should be distinguished from the reform itself. The former is merely the means of carrying a vital and progressive plan of relief for the business of the country into effective operation." He adds that the chief points to be sought must be the provision of an elastic currency, the furnishing of suitable machinery for rediscount, and the establishment of centralized reserves free from undue financial control. To all of this there will be general assent. Few even of those who have been most positive in their adherence to the Aldrich plan have openly insisted upon the use of the machinery of that measure itself. What Mr. Rich says, moreover, concerning the chief theoretical ends to be gained is unmistakably well founded. The points chosen as the chief ones to be kept in view are clearly those upon which there has been closest harmony.

The chief difficulty in the case remains and should not be minimized. This is the problem of securing an agreement as to the principal modes of reform to be adopted. There is practically no difference between unprejudiced men as to the desirability of elastic currency or even centralization of reserves. Both these elements have figured in all the recent reform programs. They were at the root of the Fowler plan for a Federal Reserve bank. They constituted the essential idea of the defective Aldrich-Vreeland act, and they were the head and front of the Aldrich proposition itself. It can fairly be said, therefore, that there has never been a time within the past ten or fifteen years when these elements were out of sight. If the agitation of the past three years has sufficed to bring some phases of the issue into clearer relief, it has done an important service. But when the specific measure heretofore put forward is thrown aside, much of the results of the work vanishes and the discussion falls back upon general principles as before. Such general principles are not enough to furnish the foundation for action in Congress. So numerous are the variations and deviations of the discussion, that the application to be made of an idea must be very clearly indicated before it can be fully indorsed or rejected as the material for legislation.

More should be done than merely to express the position of the National Citizens League and of other reform organizations in the very vague terms that have been employed by Mr. Rich and by others who have lately addressed themselves to the subject. Mr. Rich himself notes that there are many roads by which the attainment of the reform can be approached, and it is precisely the choice between the multifarious avenues of access that has heretofore caused the difficulty of making an immediate and genuine advance. Whether elastic currency shall be given first place in the legislation, or the stress be laid chiefly upon the establishment of centralized reserves, or some other proposition be put foremost, or an effort be made to include all phases of the reform in an omnibus bill, is the first question. It may not be advisable for those who advocate banking reform to give their allegiance to a definite measure—that is the mistake said to have been committed in connection with the Aldrich plan. But it is entirely feasible for reformers to unite upon a series of distinct propositions, indicating the chief points to be dealt with, the topics to be assigned the principal place, and the broad lines upon which the discussion is to proceed. Such an agreement should be arrived at in the near future. There is reason to think that an attempt to reach it is already seriously under way.

SAFER BASIS FOR COMMERCIAL CREDITS

After careful consideration, the National Association of Credit Men has decided to do all in its power to bring about a speedy reform in our banking and monetary system.

The association has set its hand to this task because it believes the existing system to be inefficient and that it fails in supporting commercial credit during periods of unusual strain, due in the first place to the inflexibility of banking reserves, and second, to the absence of relation between the demands of commerce and our currency issues.

The association believes that if a solution is not found and put into effect this country again will be visited by a direful period of waste such as characterized the panics of 1893 and 1907. The association further believes that the enormous cost of the experience which the business men of the country paid during those years should be sufficient to awaken all to the fact that a crisis such as we passed through then cannot possibly be prevented under our present banking and monetary system. It holds that, as the basis of a change in our laws, there must be co-operation between banks and business men, this co-operation to be nation-wide, so that every part of the country shall have its needful and legitimate banking facilities on absolutely safe lines.

The association will make persistent efforts to interest its great business membership in this subject, with a view to drawing out expressions of opinion, and bringing about intelligent, well directed action. This is a service the National Association of Credit Men feels that it owes the business of the country which, to so large an extent, is based on banking credits.

NEW TRUST COMPANY OPEN

The First Trust Company of Portland, Ore., opened for business on November 1, 1912, at the corner of 3d and Washington Streets, with special entrances on Washington as well as on Third Street. The offices have been splendidly equipped. Its president is H. N. Tinker; treasurer, J. M. Hawkins; secretary and real estate officer, R. N. Tufford; assistant secretary, Jos. H. Ferguson, and Z. W. Commerford, manager of the insurance department.

MONEY AT 6 PER CENT

Rates for money in Chicago at most of the banks held steadily at 6 per cent at the close of the week. The demand in the East was strong for Nov. 1st requirements and country banks kept up their withdrawals.

GROWTH OF SAVINGS IN AMERICA

Despite the high cost of living deposits in savings banks have increased steadily. The report of the comptroller of the currency for the year ending June 14th shows that on that date there were 1,925 savings banks in the United States, forty-one more than a year previous. These banks had 10,009,804 depositors and deposits aggregating $4,450,822,522.

In the year the number of depositors increased by 215,000, or by about 2 per cent; the deposits increased by $238,000,000, or about 5.7 per cent. In the previous year the number of depositors increased 5.2 per cent and the deposits about 3.5 per cent. Obviously, therefore, the average depositor has increased his deposit, and the comptroller gives the average deposit this year as $14.55 more than last year's average, which was $430.09.

Have the postal savings banks drawn away from other savings banks? It seems probable that they have only slightly affected those banks, if at all appreciably. The average deposit in the postal bank is less than $100. Merely as agencies for the promotion of the habit of saving the postal banks are valuable, and they are made use of by many who would not become depositors in other savings banks or who transfer their accounts to other banks when the total has reached a satisfactory amount.

UNKNOWN ASPECTS OF THE CHINESE REVOLUTION

At the weekly noon-day luncheon of the Chicago Association of Commerce held at the LaSalle Hotel on Wednesday of this week, Dr. Ching Chun Wang, a Chinaman distinguished in business and public life in his own country, and in America known as a brilliant scholar and man of letters, was the speaker. His subject was Unknown Aspects of the Chinese Revolution. Dr. Wang was prominent in the revolution and has since been president of the Pekin-Mukden Railway. He represented his country at the St. Louis exposition, following which he entered Yale, being graduated four year later. He then pursued special studies at the University of Illinois, securing a doctor's degree in 1911.

"THE MINOR CHORD"

Joe Mitchell Chapple, a former Illinoisan, now publisher of the National Magazine, is out with a new book entitled "The Minor Chord," a tale of the Middle West in the early '70's. Mr. Chapple went to Washington during the first McKinley administration with an ambition to become the publisher of a national magazine, but without funds to carry out his project. He was fortunate in having the acquaintance of the late Senator M. A. Hanna of Ohio, who gave him a letter of recommendation to a Boston bank, which, when presented, became his collateral for a loan, and which eventually resulted in his establishing the Chapple Publishing Company of New York, Boston and Chicago.

OCTOBER FINANCING

Railroad and industrial corporations in the United States announced new bonds, notes and stocks during October of $203,805,000. This compares with $68,432,000 in the corresponding period a year ago, or an increase of $135,373,000. The fact cannot be too strongly emphasized that the totals do not make any allowance for refunding operations in any form. The railroads contributed $45,347,000, against $31,100,000 last year and the industries $158,458,000, against $37,332,000.

TENNESSEE BANK MERGER

A. E. COEN RETURNS FROM WISCONSIN

A. E. Coen of the Colonial Trust and Savings Bank recently has returned from a trip to Wisconsin, where he visited Manitowoc and Two Rivers. Mr. Coen says that business is booming in that section of the state. The factories all are having trouble in securing a sufficient number of men. The difficulty is augmented by the fact that all of the houses are rented so that there is no place for new employees to live. The banks are in a prosperous and flourishing condition. Mr. Coen says that the country around Two Rivers and Manitowoc is very attractive. He was much impressed with the general orderliness of things, and particularly with the way the farms in that vicinity are kept up. He says that a general feeling of optimism prevails.

PIONEER STATE SAVINGS BANK

A new bank to be known as the Pioneer State Savings Bank will open shortly for business in Chicago. It will be located at 4016 West North Avenue in one of the most prosperous, growing, residential, business and manufacturing sections which have sprung up in Chicago in the last ten years. It will be capitalized at $200,000 and have a surplus of $25,000. The capital stock will be divided into 2,000 shares which are now selling at $112.50. The banking business of Andrew H. Greenberg, with nearly a hundred thousand in deposits, probably will be taken over by the new institution. Charles S. Castle of the Standard Trust and Savings and C. C. Collins of the Union Bank are interested in the new bank, as are Andrew H. Greenberg, Albert F. Keeney, George C. Burk, Thomas Rutherford, John J. Lovett, F. William Nelles, Edward W. Trostrud, Christen Larsen, R. Y. Bradshaw, J. R. Lambrecht, R. Y. Reynerston, Fred W. Page, Fred D. Breit and William F. Tempel.

MYLES STANDISH VISITS CHICAGO

Myles Standish, a representative of the First National of Omaha, Neb., was in the financial district this week. Mr. Standish speaks with pride of the fine line of business carried by the First National. They have capital of half a million and earned surplus of a million. While deposits are twelve and one-half millions.

GROUP 5, WISCONSIN

The meeting of Group 5, Wisconsin Bankers Association, held at Fort Atkinson, October 23d, was a great success. A bright, sunny day greeted the visitors to this historic old town, which is located on the beautiful Rock River, and a general good time was indulged in by all who attended. President Samuel M. Smith, cashier of the Merchants and Savings Bank, Janesville, promptly called the meeting to order at nine o'clock, and introduced ex-Governor W. D. Hoard of Fort Atkinson, who delivered the address of welcome to the 125 bankers who were present. Governor Hoard is the publisher of Hoard's Dairyman, one of the most influential dairy papers published in the world, and it is recognized that his influence and that of his paper have been largely instrumental in building up the great dairying interests of Wisconsin, making it a leading state in this industry. Governor Hoard spoke of the appreciation of the farmers and of those interested in dairying, of the bankers' and business men's interest in agriculture and agricultural education. A witty and clever response to the address of welcome was made by J. R. Eagan, cashier of the Farmers State Bank of Darien, after which President Smith delivered his annual address. Then followed the report of Secretary and Treasurer Henry D. L. Adkins, cashier of the First National of Elkhorn. He reported 140 banks in the group and twelve non-members. Mr. Adkins has so favorably impressed the members of Group 5 that they will not consent to have any other secretary and treasurer. Then followed the naming of the committee on resolutions and nomination of officers. One of the interesting features of the meeting was the calling of the roll of those present, who responded to the question "What subjects are of most importance at group meetings?" The two minute talks made by nearly everyone present brought forth many splendid suggestions for conducting a group meeting, and were a feature that brought better acquaintance and a more comfortable feeling for all present. W. G. Glover, associate editor of Hoard's Dairyman and a former resident of Minnesota, captured the audience with his story of the bank and the dairy. Bankers are manifesting the liveliest interest in these subjects and realize that with the campaign that is now on in Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan relating to agricultural education and road improvement, that to maintain the reputation the state has secured through the work of its universities and especially through the agricultural colleges, the bankers must be up and doing. A rising vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Glover for his splendid address. George D. Bartlett, secretary of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, then presented his plan for a Wisconsin bankers mutual casualty insurance, after which the meeting recessed for luncheon, which was served by the ladies of the Congregational Church. Jones' little sausage and other good things were provided the bankers for dinner. The service and the dinner were admirable, and any other town in Group 5 which attempts to entertain next year will have to go some to surpass the Fort Atkinson dinner.

Immediately after dinner the delegates were taken for a complimentary automobile ride about Fort Atkinson and a visit to the dairy farm of ex-Governor W. D. Hoard. Promptly at two o'clock the meeting reconvened and Attorney J. W. Page of Elkhart presented a well-prepared paper on taxation of United States bonds held by banks. The Hon. A. E. Kuolt, commissioner of banking for Wisconsin, read a paper on the "Blue-Sky" law and recommended the enactment of such a law for Wisconsin. He told of the successful operation of the law in Kansas, and further made the suggestion that it might be possible for the state banking department of Wisconsin to work out a plan by which credit information could be furnished state and national banks of Wisconsin through the agency of the banking department. Both of these suggestions were later endorsed in resolutions adopted. Prof. W. A. Scott, director of the course in commerce, University of Wisconsin, spoke effectively on banking reform, and after his address the Hon. A. J. Frame, president of the Waukesha National and a member of Group 5, made some comments upon the proposed monetary commission plan. J. R. Wheeler, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Union Bank, Columbus, a member of the committee on agriculture, Wisconsin Bankers Association, then reported resolutions thanking the bankers of Fort Atkinson, the press, and the ladies of the Congregational Church for their hospitality and entertainment, and the speakers who had assisted in the program. Mr. Wheeler stated that he had attended the Minneapolis conference of agriculturists and educators last August and exhibited a copy of Joe Chapman's "Farmer's Bible," recommending that each banker in Wisconsin procure a copy, familiarize himself with its contents and get its subject matter into the hands of such farmers and educators as can be induced to become interested in these subjects and the further advancement of the agricultural and educational interests of Wisconsin, telling the members of Group 5 that the members of the committee on agriculture propose to keep in touch with the agricultural college and see that the farmers and bankers are kept informed through agricultural bulletins of what is being done, when to do it and under what circumstances. Mr. Wheeler stated that W. G. Edens, secretary of the agricultural committee of the Illinois Bankers Association, was present, and upon the invitation of President Smith, Mr. Edens made a few remarks to the convention, touching upon the subjects of agricultural education and road improvement, and closing with a reference to the work of the American Institute of Banking, and of the desire of the officers and directors of that organization that the bankers in the rural and outlying districts become interested in this work, giving the young bankers and employees of the banks an opportunity to understand its courses conducted through correspondence. Mr. Edens stated that full information could be secured from Educational Director George E. Allen, 5 Nassau Street, New York City. Outside of study classes in city chapters, equally effective instruction is provided by the correspondence chapter. In correspondence instruction each student is provided with the serial lesson pamphlets and collateral exercises. The exercises in connection with each lesson are to be submitted to instructors whenever done. The work of students thus produced is corrected and returned with such criticisms as may be helpful in each case. Average students get little benefit from books alone. What most of them need is a teacher to direct and encourage them. The usefulness of a teacher is not so much to impart specific information as to stimulate the ambition and interest of students and to systematize and verify their work. The correspondence method of study lacks the inspiration of social contact, but the personal relationship established between students and instructors stimulates ambition and interest of students and the fact that all lessons must be written insures thought and thoroughness. So far as actual acquirement of knowledge is concerned, the advantages of the correspondence method of instruction fully offset its disadvantages.

Notes

Beloit and Janesville banks were well represented, and Racine and Waukesha sent good delegations. Milwaukee and Chicago had the usual quota. Everybody seemed to be happy and contented and reported good business conditions and prospects.

Fort Atkinson bankers, including the employees of the respective banks, were out in force and did everything in their power to make the visitors feel at home and have a good time. They succeeded fully and sent their guests home with a keen appreciation of the day's outing.

Members of Group 5 are an especially modest crowd. The committee on nomination had difficulty in securing acceptances for membership on the executive committee.

H. A. Moehlenpah, cashier of the Citizens Bank, Clinton, was elected president of Group 5 for the ensuing year and Henry D. L. Adkins was re-elected secretary and treasurer. It was suggested that next year's meeting be held at Delavan and Elkhorn jointly.

J. R. Wheeler of Columbus was an enthusiastic worker; he believes there is a great opportunity for the bankers of Wisconsin to conduct an effective campaign which will be beneficial to all interests concerned, through the medium of the agricultural committee. This opinion is shared by all of the members of Group 5, who were unanimous in their endorsement of the work as outlined by Mr. Wheeler. F. E. Woodward, president of the Bank of Watertown, is one of the strong men of Group 5. He served on the committee on resolutions for this meeting. C. R. Carpenter, cashier of the Commercial and Savings Bank, Racine, expressed the opinion that in no other way could Wisconsin bankers secure such substantial benefits as through the closer acquaintance which comes from group meetings.

Young Mr. Jensen, whose father is president of the Tobacco Exchange Bank of Edgerton, feels a great interest in the work of the American Institute of Banking, and proposes to take up the work and interest other young bankers of his acquaintance in his section of Wisconsin.

Many expressions of congratulation were extended President Samuel M. Smith for the good meeting that was had and on the success of his year as chairman.

Merton R. Fish, cashier of the Footville State Bank, was an enthusiastic attendant.
